Now finally Moses sayth: If thou keepe not all the wordes of this lawe for so doe them, and feare not this dreadfull and glorious name: that is so saye the euer-nall thy God. Verily it seemeth at the first sight, that Moses requireth of men aboute measure, that which is not in their power: for who is hee that can fulfill all the lawe of God? And againe, though a man misse in some certaine poyntes, should GOD vse such rigor? I haue tolde you heretofore, that hee directeth this talk towards them that be altogether giuen ouer to euil, and to such as bee despisers of God to break his lawe by all means they can. To what ende then dooth hee require such a perfection? Let vs first of all marke that GOD will not haue his law chopped into peeces & gobbets: for therein he setteth forth his righteousnes vnto vs. Men therefore must not make a parting of stakes in this case at their own pleasure, as who would say, I wil, for Gods honor, abstain from whoredome, but

Iames. 2. 11. but yet I will steale : I will abstaine from murder, but yet I will bee a blasphemers: No; but seeing that he which hath forbidden to robbe, hath also forbidden to kil; and hee which hath forbidden fornication, hath in lyke wise forbidden to blasphemers: let vs learne to obey him in all poyntes and all respectes, let vs restraine our senses, and bridle our affections, and to bee shorte, let vs come to the poynt to giue ouer our selues wholly to the seruice of our God. So ought we to doe: and that is the thing also wherunto Moses hath respect. For if we misse in any one poynt, wee be accursed of God, and deserue the rigor which is mentioned here. Neither the lesse he of his mercie ceaseth not to beare with vs: yea and he will neuer vse the great severity that is spoken of here, but towards such as fet themselves altogether stubbornly against him. Yet notwithstanding it is not without cause, that Moses dooth here exhort the Iewes to the perfect obseruation of the law. A Phisitron prescribing an order, giueth not the bridle to the appetite of his patient; to doe any thing amisse how little soeuer it bee: but he saith, I will haue you to doe thus, and thus. Now if the sicke man doe step any whit aside, very well, hee is not yet incurable, the Phisitron will haue a care of him still. But if hee will needes fet all at fixe and at seuen (as they say), and cast off all order, and play the madman; well, hee shall haue his payment as hee deserueth. And in like wise will our Lorde haue vs in his commaundement in all cases: and good reason. Howbeit there is so great infirmitie (I meane euen in them which bee governed by the holy Ghost, and which streine themselves to bee obedient vnto him) that they faile in many respectes: but yet howsoeuer the world goe, sinne ouermisisteth them not, they striue not of set purpose to transgresse the Law; but they proceede and go forward stil: and albeit that they do it lumpingly, yet doe they hold on still toward God. As touching these they bee borne withall. True is that G O D will chastise them: and in what maner? Euen in forgiuing them: according to this saying of his, If thy children transgresse my commaundements, I will visite their iniquities; but it shall bee with the rodde of men, and not with extremities: I will not deale with them as with enemies, I will not take away my mercie from them, albeit that I doe correct them. Thus doth God deale in that behalfe. But if our hearts bee vtterly hardened: then will hee warre vpon vs, and destroy vs without sparing: & although hee beare with vs, yet shall all turne to our confusion. That is one thing that wee haue to remember concerning this Text.

Allo it is a notable poynt to bee obserued, where Moses speaketh of the yoke of yron. For hee saith, That the Lorde will lay a yoke of yron vpon the neck of all transgressors until they bee altogether consumed. And that is the ende wee shoulde learne to receive the correctiōs which we heare of, and not kicke against them. For wee see what befell to Ananias, when hee mocked at the threatninges of Ieremy, and came to breake the yoke which hee had vpon his necke, which was a yoke of wood and of cordes. The Prophet did weare that yoke, to moue the people to consider that they shoulde all become captiues, and so to beholde their owne state in the person of the Prophet. Now this wicked one that was possessed of the diuel, (to make the worde of God to bee naught fet by) came to breake the bandes of Ieremy, and sayd, euen thus wil God breake the yoke of Nabuchodonosor: and albeit y he besiege you, and doe what hee can to carry you away captiues into a strange land; yet shall you bee preferred by the grace of your God, God threatned, and this fellowe mocked all his threatninges: and thereto tooke the shadowe of the name of God to abuse the people. Well then, what wanne hee by such rebellion? It was sayd to the Prophet, Take a yoke of yron: for whereas the bondage shoulde haue bin gentle and tollerable; it must now be so cruel, as they shall not be able to endure any more. See here how hee dealeth with all such as harden their heartes against G O D, and will not abide to bee meekened by his hand. Then let vs bee afraid of this yoke of yron. First of all wee know that Gods yoke is amiable vnto all such as willingly yeelde themselves vnto it, and suffer themselves to bee governed by the hand of our Lorde Iesus Christ. Wee haue the testimony of the sonne of G O D, My yoke (sayth hee) is easie, and my burden is light. Come to me, and learne that I am lowly and meeke. Seeing that our Lord Iesus declareth, that they which be teachable and obedient shall perceiue that there is neither burthen, nor weight, nor grieue in his yoke, to ouerpresse them withall: it ought to moue vs to yeeld our necks vnto it, and to pray God, to pug vs vnder it, and also to suffer him to chastise vs whē we haue offended him. In deed the strokes will be greuous vnto vs, as y Apottle sayth, and I we shall neuer finde the correctiōs pleasant during the time y God stryketh vs. Wee bee lyke little children when they bee corrected; we seeke it greuous, because our nature doth repugne against it. But howsoeuer wee lyke of it, yet God will vse that fatherly meane, and by little and little teach vs to returne vnto him. But if wee will needes tempt his patience to the vttermost, hee must then vse the yron rodde to breake our heades withall, as it is sayd in the Psalme: Wee shall bee driuen to feele the yron, which shall serue, not to reclayme vs withall, but to breake vs in peeces and to consume vs vtterly. And rustly. For wee doe heare what is sayd here: If thou wilt not feare the glorious & dreadfull name of the eternall thy God. Whence come the despising and contempt of good doctrine, and the boldnesse that wee take to sinne, but of this, that wee are deafe to all admonitions? In deepe if wee could yeelde our selues obedient to our God, with a good heart, and with a good affection, and abide at that point continually: wee shoulde no sooner heare these threatninges but wee shoulde consider thus: Alas, haue wee not deserued a greuous curse at Gods hand, seeing wee haue thus striuen against him? Wee see then that all the euill deedes and disobedience which is committed, doe spring of ignorance and of the contempt of GOD, for that wee haue not regarded his maieftie. Certainly this kinde of stubornesse is not alwayes directly of set purpose and foredetermined malice: but yet is there such rudeness in vs, that wee yeelde not such a reuerence to God, as is requisite, nor the obedience whereby wee should indeuour to submit our selues to his worde. And because wee bee so dulheaded that nothing can quicken vs vp, when wee be called vpon to submit our selues vnto GOD: Moses sayth expressly, This dreadfull name, this glorious name, to wit, The eternall, thy God. Whereas he sayth, The eternall or Euerlasting: that worde importeth all glorie and Maieftie; and therefore ought to raiuish vs with astonishment: yea truely; for wee shoulde not haue this name of GOD alonely to vse it coldely, for to say, GOD, GOD, as they doe which haue it continually in their lippes, and afterward doe let it vanish, as though it were a thing of nothing: but wee must ioyne both twaine together thus, GOD, euen the same that created vs; the same that holdeth all things in his hand, the same that is honored of the Angels, the same that is of glory infinite, the very same whome all the principalities of heauen cannot abide, at the sight of whome all manner of creatures must be faine to cast downe their eyes, euen the same which with one onely worde can make all the earth to tremble, the same that can remoue mountaines with his onely blaste, that same that giueth being to all manner of creatures, finally the same that maintaineth and governeth all things, and ordereth all things well, righteously, and with wisdom: the same is hee that speaketh vnto vs. And so yee see after what manner we vse the wordes of Moses, where hee saith, The eternall thy God, this is hee that speaketh nowe vnto thee. Lec vs therefore heare him speake, in such sorte, as his maieftie may possesse all our wittes, and that thereby wee may bee so humbled vnder the same, that when wee haue worshipped him, wee may so remaine vnder his hand, as wee suffer our selues to bee gouerned by him, to followe the rule that hee hath deliuered vnto vs.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the Iudgement seate of our God, acknowledging the infinite faultes whereof wee bee guiltie, if hee listeth to execute the office of a Iudge against vs: and therewithall let vs pray him, nor to omit to bee our father for our Lord Iesus Christes sake: And that forsomuch as wee bee guiltie of many offences: wee may suffer our selues to be dayly cutte off from our sinnes, so as nothing may hinder our comming to him to yeeld our selues in such sorte vnto him, as wee may renounce all our wicked affections more and more, vntil wee bee thoroughly ridde of them, and bee clothed with his heauenly righteousness. And so let vs all say, Almighty GOD heauenly father, &c.

On Fryday the xxvii. of March, 1556.

The CLxii. Sermon which is the tenth vpon the eight and twentieth Chapter.

59 Then will the Lorde make thy plagues marueilous, and the plagues of thy feede, greate plagues and sure: euill and sure diseases.

60 And hee shall turne vpon thee all the plagues of Egypt, the presence whereof thou diddest feare, and they shall cleaue vnto thee.

61 Also all the diseases and all the plagues which be not written in the booke of this Lawe, the Lorde will cause to come vpon thee, vntil thou be destroyed.

62 And where as thou wast in multitude as the starres of heauen, thou shalt bee fewe in number, because thou hast not obeyed the voyce of the Lorde thy God.

63 And it shall come to passe, that like as the Lorde thy God reioyced ouer thee to doe thee good, and to multiplicate thee: euen so will the Lorde reioyce ouer thee to destroy you, and to bring you to nought: and thou shalt bee rooted our of the land to the which thou goest to possesse it.

64 And the Lorde will scatter thee among all people, from the one ende of the earth to the other ende of the earth. And there thou shalt serue other goddes, which neither thou nor thy fathers haue knowen: euen goddes of wood and of stone.

Haue shewed here before, how slow men are to bee taught by the chastisements which God doth send them. For vntill they perceiue the hand of God, and be driuen to vnderstand, that it is hee with whome they haue to doe: of themselues they waxe hardhearted: and which worse is, they labour to cloke that which they ought to feele and see as it were before the eye: namely, that they bee smitten for their sinnes. For-asmuch therefore as men doe neuer willingly come to the knowledge of themselves: G O D is faine to enforce them to it. This is the cause why Moses, ouer and besides that which hee repeareth afore, doth adde, That God will make the plagues of the despisers of his Lawe, wonderful. That is to say, they shall bee so notable, that euen in spite of their teeth, they shall be affraide of them as of things that were neuer known, nor in vie, For wee see that accustomed things are despised: and euen so is it also with Gods benefites.

 Forasmuch as the Sunne doth dayly rise to lighten vs: who is hee that thinketh of the change and intercourse which G O D maketh betweene the night and the day? according to the saying of the nineteenth psalme, that it is as if God should waken vs vp euery morning, and tell vs with a lowde voyce how it is good reason, that his infinite goodness, wisdom and power should bee known. But wee haue no eares to heare.
 What is the reason? It is because the sunne appeareth euery day in lyke order, by meanes whereof we bee hardened with it: and because it is ordinarie, we make none account of it: euen so is it concerning punishmentes. For the more our Lorde prouoketh vs to come vnto him, the more doe we take heart to become vnterminable. And therefore it is needefull for vs that his plagues should bee woonderfull vnto vs, that wee may bee made affraide of them in spite of our teeth. And againe hee addeth, That they shall be great and certaine. The last worde that Moses vseth, dooth signify true or faithfull. Whereby G O D dooth vs to vnderstand, that his plagues shall holde on still, lyke as hee sayd also that they should cleaue vnto the that were rebellious and could not bee wonne by gentlenesse: these plagues must bee rooted in them: and for that cause dooth hee terme them Certaine. Here haue wee to consider our owne hardnesse, that eu-ery of vs may bee the more vigilant in looking to the hand of G O D and conceiue the better thereof. Forasmuch as wee bee so dull of nature, we must learne to steepe vp our selues.
 And let vs feare least G O D should accomplish that which is pronounced in this text: Namely that when his accustomed punishmentes profit vs not, then hee must needes proceede against vs after such a straunge and horrible manner, as shall make vs affraide, and cause the hayre of all them to stand vp which doe but heare speake of it: yea, and (as the Prophet Jeremy sayth) to make mens eares tingle, whē the reporte thereof commeth into foraine

Countries.
 Let vs be affraide therefore, least God doe worke after that manner, when hee perceaueth such stubbornnesse in vs, as hee cannot winne vs by measurable and tollerable corrections. And therewithal let vs also take warning by this word Of stre plagues; that when God hath followed vs to reduce vs to the way of saluatiō, and we haue still fled from him, the plagues must also continue to the vttermost both vpon vs and vpon all our lynage, in somuch that when wee thinke to see an end thereof, we shal not haue yet begunne.
 Let vs not therefore make account to escape, when the plague hath lasted a while: for accordingly as wee proceede on in our naughtinesse; so must God proceede with his rigor and augment it more and more, according as hee seeth vs to waxe worse and worse. Then let vs not doe as we see most men doe, which cry out and storme at it, saying: And when shall this haue an end? How happeneth it that God taketh no pite on mee to eale me of my paynes? But in the meane while haue they any minde to reconcile themselves to God? Do they cōfesse their faults and bewaile them? Nay rather they be at the very poynt to defy him. Yet doe they talke of their afflictions, and make complaintes: but in the meane while no man loo'eth to the ground of the mischief to amend it. Therefore when we haue bin stubbornne against our God, let vs not thinke it straunge, that he should pursue vs with such rigour: but let vs acknowledge that it is expedient for vs. In the meane space, let vs not forget this that is written here: namely, that God threatneth sinners, to the ende to bring them backe againe, notwithstanding that they haue bin as folke forlorne and past hope of recouery. For God speaketh not to such as had committed but one onely fault, or some two or three faultes, or to such as hauing done amisse, did not wholly giue themselves ouer to wickednesse: but he speaketh vnto such offenders, as had made warre long time against him, and despised his word, and bin deafe to all his warnings, and had made but a mock of them. Yet notwithstanding he doth not cease to threaten them still.
 And to what end and purpose? Euen to winne them by his amiable goodness. So then although we haue bin misaduised for a time, yet is it better for vs to turne late than neuer: and so shall wee fare the better by that which is shewed vs here by Moses. Now consequently hee sayth, That God will cause the plagues of Egypt to turne vpon the Iewes. Wee vnderstand that God did so afflict the Egyptians, as that they were a terror vnto his own people, in somuch that the Iewes themselues were astonished thereat, notwithstanding that they were exempted from the euil. When the Egyptians were oppressed to the vttermost, thereby the Iewes vnderstoode that God spared them, and that hee held them in his protection, because hee smote their enemies, and in the meane space did keepe the in peace and rest. And this wee see chiefly in his killing of all the first borne of Egypt: For G O D had commanded, that the doore postes of the houses

19. 1.

19. 3.

Exod. 12. 7. Houses should be marked with the blood of the Paschall Lambe. There God gaue a signe that testimonie vnto the Jewes that hee would spare them; and during that while he turned his wrath and vengeance against their enemies. But now he saith here cleane contrary, That God will cause those very plagues to returne backe. For the worde that Moses vlieth doth importe as much as if he should say, Thy fathers sawe howe God turned his wrath against the Egyptians, but nowe they must returne backe againe vpon thee, because thou makest none account to honor and serue him, which hath loued thee so much, and to whome thou art so greatly bound. By this saying we be admonished, that when God hath forborne vs for a time, and moreover for the loue that he beareth towards vs, hath punished our enemies, and shewed himselfe a contrarie partie against them for to maintaine vs: wee must not therefore flatter our selues, but rather be more diligent to walke in his feare. For when we will not acknowledge such grace, but rather abuse it quite contrarie: it is good reason that our Lorde should cause the thinges to returne backe vpon vs, which hee had sent vpon our enemies, thereby to shewe vs that hee held vs in his defence and safegarde. It is sayd that the people of God shall be as a fyre kindled to consume all the wicked and vnbeleeuers. And God will shewe the same in very deede. But if we will needes kindle his wrath through our sinnes and transgressions: then the fyre that should haue bin vpon the vnfaithfull, must fall backe vpon our selues, and we must perithe therewith. Let vs therefore consider well of this worde, and let this which is recited concerning the land of Egypt be vnto vs a myrror and a learning, that we at this day may apply it to our owne vse; according as all these thinges bee written for vs. Let vs marke (I say) what our Lorde did in olde time for the Jewes, and let vs vnderstand that thereby he gaue record what loue hee beareth to his Church. But yet therewithal, let vs take warning to yeelde our selues in such wise obedient vnto him, as he may continue to doe vs good, and that this couenant may be confirmed betweene him and vs. Namely, I will be a friend vnto thy friends, and an enemy vnto thine enemies. It is certaiue that this promise was giuen to Abraham: howbeit, to the end that wee all should inioy the same. Now if we cannot suffer God to be our friend, but rather wil make war against him, and breake the faith and aliance that is established betwix vs: then whereas afore, hee did set himselfe against our enemies, now hee must be faine to fall vpon vs, and to make vs to feele his infinite power, vntill wee be quite confounded and brought to nought. Therefore while our Lorde spareth vs, let vs acknowledge his goodnesse, and not prouoke his wrath to make vs to feele his power in smiting vs. And moreover, when as we see, that whereas the vnfaithfull should be stricken at his hand, wee feele the first blowes: let vs acknowledge that it is meere it should be so, because we haue broken the peace which he had made with vs. Let vs not thereube discouraged, howfoeuer the worlde goe; but let vs stick to him stil. Furthermore let vs not tary till he proceede to extremitie. And if we be not so wise as to haue that discretion at the first, yet at leastwise let vs benefite our selues by the aduertisements which are set down in this place. After that manner should we put this text in vte.

Now Moses saith expressly, that the Jewes feared the plagues of the Egyptians, and that they had good cause to stand the more in dread of them, for that in beholding them vpon their enemies, they were then astonishd at them, & therefore it was good reason that they should magnifie the goodnesse of God: but howfoeuer the case stood, the plagues which God sent vpon the Egyptians, were so great and so horrible, that the Jewes must needs be amazed at them, albeit that they themselues were free from the, because they beheld such an alteration of nature. Nowe if they feared the wrath of God whilse it was vpon their enemies, and had therein a testimonie of his loue & goodnesse: what ought they then to doe when God ruether vpon their heades, and that they must be faine to feele the selfe same plagues which came vpon the Egyptians? Must they not needes be doubly dismayed? Yes: and therefore we see that this threatening is not superfluous; but serueth to waken them, according as we haue sayd herebefore, and as experience sheweth that we be too much deaf, yea and as it were senselesse, when God doeth warne vs; and that he must smite vpon vs as it were with a hammer, or else will wee neuer vnderstand what he saith. And so ye see the reason why this word is expressly set downe. Now when we see that God punisheth the wicked, let vs learne to haue such feare of his vengeance, as we doe not tarie till he wrappe vs vp amongst those whom wee haue seene punished afore vs. This is the thing that S. Paul meant in saying, Deceiue not your selues, neither let any man abuse you with vaine words: for the wrath of God hath bin wont to fall vpon the vnbeleeuers & disobedient for such offences. Hereby S. Paul sheweth to the faithfull, that they should not feare the hand of God alonly when they see it armed against them, and when it toucheth their persos; but they ought to vse the opportunitie in reforming the selues, euen when God is so good vnto them as to punish the reprobates & rebels before their eyes. Let vs therefore be afraid when God punisheth the wicked, and let vs be aduised to acknowledge him for our Iudge aforehand; and that we haue wel deserued to be handled as seuerely as they, were it not that he of his goodnes forbeareth vs. Let this touch vs to the quick, that we may be brought to repentance. Thus should we yet further put this saying of Moses in practise.

Nowe hee addeth, that God (ouer & beside all this which he hath declared,) will sende yet other aduersities and afflictions vpon the Jewes. In deede Moses did reckon vp many sortes of plagues heretofore, and hee thought it not ynough to haue saide at once, God will chastise the thee after such and such manner : but he redoubled it, because he sawe men so grosse and heauy that they bee not so moued at the first, as were to be wished . But our Lordes intent heere , is to declare that hee hath meanes of vengeance incomprehensible, and moe than can bee vttered by wordes; inso much that if a man should make a Roll of them, and rehearse a whole million of seuerall sorts of them, yet should he not comprise them al: for God hath other hidden means vnknown to men, wherewith to punish them that doe still rancle in malice against him. And that is according as wee shall see in the two and thirtieth chapter, in the solemne song that Moses maketh there . These things are laide vp in my Treasurie (saith the Lord) so as I haue my whole Chestes full of horrible plagues, such as neuer were imagined nor vnderstood by men. As much is saide in this text.

And so let vs remember two things, to wit, when wee haue had experience of the power of God by his doings, or reade the threatenings that he hath made against the transgressours of his lawe, and doe beholde the practise and execution thereof: let vs bee amased thereat and say, How now? What a thing is it to prouoke the Lord? For if hee spare vs on the one side, hee can well assaile vs on the other; and when wee bee deliuered from one hundred of afflictions, he hath three hundred others readie for vs; and when wee haue escaped all those, yet haue wee gotten nothing. Let vs therefore thinke vpon these things . Nowe let vs looke what a sort of threatenings there are in the holy Scripture, howe many sortes of deaths there bee that God hath denounced against the despisers of his maiestie, and against all them that despise and set light by his worde: it would wearie vs to recite them . And in reading the hystories, wee see the examples that God hath giuen vs of his wrath: and that not in one sort; wee should needes bee at our wittes ende if wee should thinke but vpon the tenth part of them . And if wee should set our mindes to marke and to note them all: what a thing were it? The first thing therefore which wee haue to doe, is to be diligent to cal to remembrance all the threatnings whereby God would tame our wicked affections, and holde vs enbridled: and therewithall to compare the things that are set downe vnto vs, howe that God hath not threatened in vaine, but hath accomplished whatsoeuer hee hath saide . Let vs thinke on that. And moreouer let vs vnderstand, that besides the meanes which are contained in the holy scripture, God hath yet a great many of other meanes to punish men; and we see how he doeth daily bring vp newe. If we had eyes, or rather would open them, wee might well see that God doeth daily sende newe kindes of his wrath: and that is to the end which I haue touched heretofore, namely to make his plagues wonderful, that men may be inforced to thinke vpon them because they see that God worketh not after the ordinary course of nature: but after a sort that hath not bin earli knowen. When euery of vs hath well studied all the lessons that be declared vnto vs in the holy Scripture; and made our comoditie of the examples & punishments y<sup>e</sup> bee there mentioned; let vs conclude y<sup>e</sup> God hath yet a great many moe meanes than be expressed, which men neuer thought vpon. And y<sup>e</sup> thing he hath made manifest euer since y<sup>e</sup> the law was written: and he doth not yet cease to do the same still, that al maner of excuse may be taken from vs. If a man looke vpon the diseases that bee at this day in the worlde, hee shall see that there be many which were not expressed in the law of Moses, or in y<sup>e</sup> dayes of our fathers. Howe hath whoredome bin punished by diseases that be come vpe of late? Who knewe the pocks a hundred yeres ago? That is one horrible plague which God hath sent vpon y<sup>e</sup> worlde. And it is as much as if hee had stretched his arme out of heauen, and sayde, No, they knowe mee no more to be their Iudge, they harden their hartts against al the plagues y<sup>e</sup> men did knowe & receiue afore time, they make but a figge at it; but now I will make them to vnderstand; that in my Coffers, and in my storehouses there are yet other roddees that be incomprehensible to them. God sheweth this: and wee perceiue that wee cannot take a better course to profite by this doctrine, than to feare the rods and punishments, which be not written in the booke of the lawe: otherwise, it is meete that wee vnderstand that GOD is stil our Iudge, howe soeuer the world goe .

Now he addeeth: That albeit they were as many in number as the starrs of heauen, God would wast them in such wise as there should but a handfull of them remaine . Here must we remember that which was spoken of herebefore . For whereas God vsseth this similitude of the starrs of heauen, he hath respect to the promise which he had made to his seruant Abraham: namely y<sup>e</sup> his seede should be in number like the starrs of heauen . So God spake. But now, to the end y<sup>e</sup> the Iewes should not presume to thinke y<sup>e</sup> God was alwayes bound to multiply them, he sayth, No, I wil consume you whatsoeuer come of it, and thou shalt bee but a handfull of people . It seemeth at the first sight that here is contrarietie. For where as God promised so great a seed vnto his seruant Abraham, it was not grounded vpon the merites of men. And why? For seeing that the promise dependeth vpon the free goodnesse of God, must it not be kept, albeit that men be wicked? Yes in deede . But we haue to consider, that God doeth nor alwayes accomplish his promises after our fashion, nor according to our carnall capacitie: he hath meanes incredible to vs, & which we vnderstand not, vntill they appeare by effect. Whereas he promisseth to multiply his Church, that is to say, to make it to prosper, if hee see that vnder colour thereof the hypocrits take libertie to doe euil, he withdraweth his hand. Let vs therefore consider wel, that forasmuch as the Iewes were puffed vp wth a foolish presumption, and thought it impossible for God to diminish them, seeing he had spoken the worde that he would increase them: forasmuch I say as they abused the goodnes of GOD and falsified his promise through their hypocrite, hee consumed them and brought them to a small number. Neuertheless, of that small number, there came a great ofspring againe, yea and so great a one, that men might so much the better perceiue his truth and mercie, howbeit after an other manner. Therefore saith hee by his Prophet Esay in the tenth Chapter: Although you were as the sande of the sea, (for he did alwayes send them backe to the promise made to Abraham,) although thy seede (as I saide) be as the sande of the sea; yet shall but a small remnant bee saued. But when ye are altogether consumed, yet shall that little remnant bee disperfed ouer all the earth, as if out of a little fountaine shoulde issue forth a great riuier, or a great lake, wherewith verie many lands shold be watered. So shall it be. Nowe then wee perceiue, that although G O D punish the hypocrites which abufe his promises, yet faileth hee not to performe his sayings still, howbeit by an extraordinary meane; as we haue seene it in the Popedome, and as is to bee seene yet stil. For the Papists haue ouerflowed the whole worlde with superstition and ydolatrie, and all manner of euill: yea and moreouer thy harden their hartes in pride, and fesse at God with open mouth. Howe nowe, say they? Are not we the church? Is it not said that Iesus Christ shall be with vs vnto the end of the worlde? Can he forsake his Church? Yet do they continually crucifie him as much as in them lieth, they spit in his face, and doe him all the reproch in the worlde; they make him as if hee were a prisoner or a bondslauie amongst them: and they consider not that such a horrible destruction happeneth throughout y whole worlde, through Gods iust vengeance for the shamelesse hypocrite which hath bene in them that haue rebelled against the Gospel: yet notwithstanding, G O D hath not omitted to saue his people, as it were vnder the earth. And in our dayes he hath raised his Church, as if y bones of rotten bodies shold recover flesh and strength againe. For what were we through our vnbeliefe? Yee see howe it is a meruilous resurrection that God hath wrought in that behalfe. Marke well therefore that when our Lorde promiseth to maintaine his Church and to preferue it, the same belongeth nothing to them that abufe his name falsely, nor to them that come to despise him vnder colour that hee is gentle and mercifull. For they shall euermore be disappointed of that fauour which God hath so referued vnto his people: for they bereaue themselves thereof through their owne malice and vnthankfulnesse. Yet notwithstanding howe soeuer the case stande, God is euer faithful, and wil find incomprehensible meanes to giue place to his truth, by fighting against the malice of men. That is the thing which we haue to remember concerning this text, where he saith: That he will wast the Iewes though they were as the starres in the skie.

And in verie deepe the same appeared euen in Iesus Christ the head of the church. And therefore we ought not to thinke it straunge that that the members of the bodie should be fashion-

ned like vnto him. Whence came Iesus Christ when God his father sent him to be the Redeemer? The Prophet Esay saith that hee shoulde spring from a stocke, as if a tree were heuen downe and there remained but the stub within the ground, in such sort as men might tread vpon it. It is not said that hee shoulde come out of house of Dauid, but out of the house of Iesse, who was a Neateheard and a man despised. The same was I say the father of Dauid a man of no estimation. Albeit that Dauid was so excellent a king, that he was chosen of God to be magnified to the skies; yet the Prophet sheweth, that when Iesus Christ shoulde come into the worlde, it should not bee with any shewe of that royal maiestie that was in Dauid, but he should come out of the house of Isey, as if he should come out of a heard. And that euen then also hee should not come of a tree, but of a stocke, that were cut off. And in what manner? And after what fashion? As a little braunch, saith he. Nowe seeing that God did thus to the head of the church, we must vnderstande that all the bodie must be surelike: but this maketh not that the hypocrites shall be partakers of that which God referueth to his elect, and whom he hath chosen, and indeede doe shewe themselves to be his children, and bee obedient vnto him, as to their father: which also come not alonely with all confidence, but also are drawn with a right affection to honor him. And wheras we perceiue y God doth at this day sende horrible destructions into the worlde; let vs vnderstande that hee chastiseth that which is heere declared: yet let vs not doubt, but that hee doth euermore preferue his Church: let vs not doubt but hee doth vpholde vs as oft as wee haue our recourse to him, according to this saying, that whosoever calleth vpon the name of the Lord shall be saued, yea euen amidst the greatest troubles that may be. Though heauen and earth should run together, yet are wee sure that by calling vpon the name of God, we shall bee preferued. But let vs take heede, that wee abufe not his name, to make thereof a fained cloake: for he can wast vs well ynough. And if we boast that wee bee of his Church; when he hath cut vs off, he can quickly rayse him a new people: and augment them in such wise as his truth shall not be defaced, and yet we shall perish.

After that Moses hath thus spoken, he addeth: That like as God had taken pleasure in dooing good to the Iewes, euen so he woulde take pleasure in persecuting them, vntill he had consumed them and vnterly rooted them out. Heere Moses doeth first of all shewe what affection G O D beareth towardes these whome hee hath chosen out for himselfe, and meaneth to take for his flock. It is certaine that God is not subiect to any humane passions: yet can not be sufficiently manifest either the goodnesse or the loue that he hath towards vs, but by transfiguring himselfe, as if he were a mortall man, saying that he woulde take pleasure in doing vs good. Let vs vnderstand therefore that God holdeth vs so deere as if a father shoulde shoulde delight and reioyce to doe good to his child.

children. When hee seeth them according to his minde, and to doe him honour, and to bee obedient vnto him: then his feeding of them, and his clothing of them, is a comfort to him, and it doeth him good to see them in their brauerie; for that is the very felicitie of a father.

GOD likeneth himselfe to mortall men, and saith that hee will delight to doe vs good. And therefore wee cannot magnifie the inestimable goodnesse of our God too much, seeing hee stoopeth so lowe as to tell vs, that his whole delight is in making vs to inioy his benefites, and in demeaning himselfe in such wise towards vs, as wee may haue cause to praise him, and finally, in yielding to all our desires. But what? Wee cannot away with it: we are not able to apprehende that, for wee bee not able to consider it.

Wee see that God is (as yee would say) waywarde towards vs, wee see that hee doeth not onely bereaue vs of his blessings, but is also angrie with vs: and to be short, wee perceiue in him nothing, but all manner of rigour. And what is the cause hereof? Verily that wee shut the gate against his goodnesse, and will not suffer him to vse (as yee would say) his naturall disposition. Loe heere a thing that should make vs the better to acknowledge our faultes, and not to accuse GOD of any accessiue crueltie, when hee dealeth not with vs after our lyking. For it is certaine that hee will take pleasure in doing vs good: but on the otherside let vs consider also, that hee must in likewise delight to doe vs euill. And why so? Verily because that he is iust. In deede, if wee did suffer GOD to vse his owne inclination towards vs; he would bestowe infinite benefites vpon vs, and we lyuing in this worlde should bee as in Paradise: but because of our sinnes, we must liue heere like wretched wanderers, wee must languish in many miseries, wee must dwell in continuall feare and in doubt, and wee must grone in great vntrest: it must bee euen so. And wherefore? Because God is iust.

This is the verie pleasure that is spoken of in this texte. According whereunto it is saide, that GOD will reioyce and bee gladd, when hee hath punished the wicked, and maintained his maiestie against them, for that they haue despised him and set him at nought. Nevertheless, it is likewise true that hee saith by his Prophet Esay, that hee doeth vnwillingly. Alas (saith hee) must I needes reuenge mee of mine enemies? GOD crieth there alas, as if hee were in sorrowe and anguish for it. I must (saith hee) take comfort in auenging mee of mine enemies. Those whom hee termeth his enemies, are the children whome hee had adopted, and which boasted themselves to bee his people. And howe doeth hee comfort himselfe in them? Euen by giuing them ouer, and by driuing them away. But in the meane while, hee sheweth that it is against his will, when hee must so beate men downe with maine strokes, howbeit that hee can none otherwise doe. Yet notwithstanding, in verie deede God is able to tame the hartes of men without any great violence: for (as wee haue saide) hee is not subiect to our passions. But heereby we be to consider howe his intent is to declare, that our vnreformable naughtinesse is the cause why hee is faine to pursue vs after such manner as is spoken of heere, and that hee is faine to take pleasure in doing vs harme, wherein the order of nature is after a sort quite altered and chaunged: but all is through our owne fault, and wee our selues are to blame for it, and it is not for vs to seeke any other reason thereof than our owne sinne, which hath kindled his vengeance to the vttermost. Thus much concerning that sentence.

Nowe for a conclusion it is saide. That God will roote out this people from the lande wherein hee had planted them, and that he would disperse them amongest all the nations of the world. And that there this wretched people, (which were earst in a countrey of freedome, wherein God had sette them to the ende that his seruice and pure Religion should dwell there) shall serue strange Gods, euen ydols of Woodde and Stone. First we see that albeit the Land of Chanaan was giuen in Inheritance to the people of Israel, yet they failed not to bee put out and banished, when they abused the fauour that had bene shewed vnto them. GOD had planted them there, euen as though hee had set them at his owne hande. Loe (saide hee) heere is my resting place and yours: hee intended to dwell amongst them himselfe, and therupon hee promised to giue them rest there, in so much that although all other people should bee displaced and removed too and fro, yet should the children of Abraham inioy the heritage of that lande still. Notwithstanding, this letted not God to driue them out againe, and to scatter them abroade with the winde, because they had defiled that lande, which should haue bene kept holy to his name.

Nowe sith it is so, let vs not thinke it strange though God at this day doe sende many changes into the worlde: for he hath giuen no such priuiledge to any Nation as to say vnto them, You shal inhabite this lande, as the Lande of Chanaan was giuen to the linage of Abraham. But wee see howe GOD is offended, wee see mens misdoings as haynous as can bee. Nowe then if GOD remoues men, let vs vnderstande that it is for their sinnes. Moreouer, let vs returne to the eternall rest, whereunto the Apostle leadeth vs in the Epistle to the Hebrews. Hebr. 4. 9. & 11. 26. Having spoken of the rest of the land of Chanaan, hee saith that wee must looke vnto a rest that is higher. For the children of GOD are commonly as wayfarers in this worlde, as Sainct Paul termeth them, putting himselfe in the number: but let vs cuermore direct our course and indeuour to this heritage, which is promised vs in heauen: for wee shall not bee disappointed of that heritage, so wee continue in our vocation whereunto

God hath called vs. Neuertheless it is said, that they which giue themselves ouer vnto wickednesse shalbe wiped out of the booke of life. Not that Gods chosen shall euer perish: but it is spoken in respect of such folke as thinke it ynough for them to beare yname of Gods children, and to haue benee baptesed, and to receiue the Lords supper, and such like thinges: and make no further regarde. But our Lorde telleth vs that although it seeme for a time that they be written and enrolled in his Register, because they be taken to be of the company of the faithfull: yet shall they not faile to be wiped out. So then let vs aduise our selues, and so long as it shall please God to keepe vs in this worlde, let vs walke so vnder his obedience, as his hande may euer be stretched out to preserue and maintaine vs: Let vs so stick vnto him as wee may haue libertie to honour and serue him. For it is a dreadfull desolation which Moses speaketh of heere, namely to be no more of the body of the church nor to haue any more the shewe or shape of Rehobon: and yet is this scene throughout the worlde at this day. Therefore let vs marke, that one of the greatest benefites which GOD can bestowe vpon vs in this transitorie life, is to let vs haue some little corner wherein to assemble our selues in his name, to call vpon him and to professe our selues to be his people. This ought to be more esteemed amongst vs than either meate or drinke or any thing else. Howbeit yerie few do thinke thereon. Yet notwithstanding we must needs confesse, that albeit we haue sufficient foodde, and in the meane while forget God, our state is miserable. And if we thinke not thereon, we bewray our owne beastlynesse: for God telleth vs that this benefite which is spoken of here, is farre greater than all the rest, that is to wit that we may worship him in purenesse, & be gathered together vnder that head which he hath appointed vnto vs, namely our Lord Iesus Christ. And therefore while we haue such priuiledge to heare the worde of God, to call vpon his name, and to walke according to his Gospel: let vs harken vnto it, for feare least God disperse & scatter vs abroad in like sort as he hath dispersed the Iewes. And specially let vs stande in feare of this threatning, namely, to be made such beasts, as to honour ydols againe, as we see it is become of others, who are a good president to vs of the vengeance of God, whereof wee our selues also haue felt our part. For wee haue benee as bondslaues vnder ydolatrie, and vnderlings vnto the abominations of the Popedome; and that was for our sins, and for the sins of our fathers. Seeing we haue earst felt the blowes, yea, and benee as looking glasses vnto others; shoulde wee nowe be so brutish, to prouoke our God in such wise, as he shoulde bee forced as it were, to deprive vs of the grace that he hath giuen vs? Let vs then vse this benefite and treasure of the Gospel, whilst our Lord giueth vs place where to hide vs as it were vnder his hand while he doeth gouerne and guide vs, and while we be knit together in one bodie: that hee may be magnified amongst vs with one accorde not onely with the mouth, but also specially with our life: to the ende that vpon our indeouoring of our selues to honour him, hee on his side may continue his good doing towards vs: and that this threatening bee not executed vpon our heads, that is; to be dispersed heere and there, and to be constrained againe to worshippe ydols, and other deade and senselesse things.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our finnes; beseeching him to touch vs with such repentance, as being athamed of our finnes, wee may seeke altogether to put our selues wholly into his handes, and that by obtaining forgiveness of him, we may also feele that hee hath reformed vs, and that wee bee in his fauour, to giue ouer our selues altogether to his holy will. And that albeit there is alwayes much to be amended in vs, and that our lustes and affection doe drawe vs quite away from that which hee commaundeth vs; yet neuertheless wee may not cease to striue against them, and to yeelde our selues wholly vnto him, and to inforce our selues thereunto more and more, knowing that the same is our feueraine welfare: and that although hee shewe vs nowe and then some tokens of rigour in correcting vs, yet wee may learne to profite thereby, to the amending of our finnes, so as wee may bee brought to the perfection wherunto hee daily calleth vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

65 Amongest these people also shalt thou haue no rest, neither shall there be any rest to the sole of thy foote. Moreouer the Lorde wil giue thee a trembling heart, and dymnesse of eyes, and a heauinesse of minde.

66 And thy life shalbe hanging before thee: thou shalt be afraid day & night, and be vncertaine of thy life.

67 Thou shalt say in the morning, O that it were night: and at night thou shalt say, O that it were morning: because of the fearefulnesse of thy heart, wherewith thou shalt bee afraide, and because of the sight of thine eyes, which thou shalt see.

68 And the Lorde will make thee to returne into Egypt by shippes, by the way, whereof I haue said vnto thee, that thou shouldest not go about to see it any more: and there shalt thou bee sold to thine enemies for bondmen and bondwomen, and none shall by thee.

Amongst the benefites that we desire in this present life, one is to haue some resting place and some harbor to lodge in. Though a man be poore yea and troubled on all sides: yet if he haue some litle hole to hide his head in, that he may resort thither: he careth not for all the rest. But if we knowe not where to become, nor haue any friend to receiue vs, nor any nooke nor corner wherein to rest vs; our state is then extremely miserable. That is the cause why Moses now (after hee hath declared that God woulde driue away and banish the Iewes out of the lande which hee had giuen them to inherite and to rest in for euer) addeth, that they shall be as vagabondes and haue no certaine dwelling place, but be tossed from post to pillar.

Nowe it is certaine, as we haue alreadie saide y<sup>e</sup> this shal oftentimes happen to the faithfull, but it is for another purpose: & God doth in y<sup>e</sup> mean space comfort them, & it is behouefull that their patience should be tried after that maner. For the thing wherein wee shewe our obedience towarde God; is when as hee mingleth vs among the wicked, so as wee seeme not to differ a whit from them, but all goes to hauoocke (as they say) and yet notwithstanding we continue sounde in heart, and commit our seules into the handes of our God, knowing that hee hath not forgotten vs, though he suffer vs to be so tossed. Contrariwise all despisers of the Lawe doe beare their mark, as if they were butted with a searing yron in their hearts, and do know that God is against them, and that their sinnes doe reprove them. Albeit that men doe not accuse them, yet doe they feele a sufficient testimonie in themselves to confound them withall. And that is it that Moses doth farther adde, saying: That vnto such as are hard hearted against Gods worde, God will giue a trembling heart, a sorrowfull minde, and dafeling eyes, so as in the morning they shall say: May I see night? And when night is come. Alas, how shall I passe it ouer? Can I continue vntill the morning? In somuch that their life shall as it were hang before them, and they shall be in miserable vniquietnesse. That is the thing wherein the faithfull doe chiefly differ from the despisers of God, and wherein their state doth varie. For albeit that y<sup>e</sup> faithfull do suffer much trouble in this worlde, yet haue they euermore wherewith to comfort themselves: according as our Lorde Iesus saeth in Saint Iohn. You shall be vexed in this worlde (saith hee) but yet shall ye not faile to haue comfort in me. Wee must consider what is the grounde of our comfort; namely that they which stande assured in the protection of God, do euermore commit their life into his hands, as we see Dauid did when hee was beset on all sides. When he was threatened with a hundred deaths, he said, Lord, I commend my soule vnto thee, thou art faithfull, and thou hast redeemed mee. He knewe that God had maintained him euen vnto that houre; and that in deede without the maruelous power of him, hee coulde not haue lued so long. And thereupon he concludeth thus: because that God is faithfull, hee will surely haue pitie on mee: and therefore I commit my soule to his keeping. Loc at what point the faithfull are. They verie well perceiue the daungers wherewith they be beset: they perceiue that their life is but a smoke that might vanish away out of hand: they see there be many ambushes laide for them, in somuch that all the worlde is against them, and that they cannot safely steppe forwarde one step without incountering of some miserie. The faithfull vnderstande all this: ouer and beside, that they be subiect to all the chaunges of this humaine life, and that they be fraile as all the children of Adam bee, they see well there is no resting place for them heere. But yet heere withall they knowe that God hath care ouer them, and that hee is their protector. That is the thing which they rest vpon. Having such a stay, they holde on their way forward: but yet are they not careless; for we must not be so blockish as to cast no perils: for we coulde not call vpon God if wee sawe not the perils wherein we bee. And it prouoketh vs to seeke vnto our God, when wee see that without him wee shoulde perish curie minute of an houre. The faithfull then must not be without feare, but resting vpon the tuition of God, they must sticke vnto him, & assure themselves that he will neuer forsake them. That is it wherein they reioyce. Yea and they goe yet farther. For although they be to go among thorns; although they bee driuen to make many leapes, although they catch now & then some knocks; yea and although they bee altogether shut vp & haue no way out: yet notwithstanding through the power of faith they euermore reioyce euen in the midst of all their sorowes & perplexities. On the contrary side, the despisers of God be as blind as is possible, and do close their eyes, least they might see their infirmities, & so do harden themselves. Yet for all this, God compelleth them to look vnto themselves, & then are they vndone: they be ouertraught with feare & amafednesse. It is not their manner to make their recourse vnto God. For they vnderstand nothing of his protection, nay contrariwise they shunne him, & flee as far from him as they can, because they conceiue nothing in him but dreadfull maicstie, which putteth them quite out of hart. As for the wicked therefore, and all such as haue rebelled against God; they after long hardening of the selues, when God waketh them, know not where to become. For they passe not of comming vnto him, but doe rather vtter their rage by spying him and by gnashing their teeth at him. And because they finde no ende of their miseries, nor haue any rest, this terrour which God casteth vpon them is an incurable disease. As for to call vpon him, or to betake their liues into his hands, they haue no power: but rather forasmuch as they knowe that they haue warred against him, they bee likewise driuen to vnderstande, that in steede of helping them, hee will surely vexe them. That is the thing which we see heere in this text, where Moses saith, God will giue thee a trembling heart, a sorrowful minde, and dafeling eyes.

Nowe here may a question bee demaunded. For we perceiue that Gods children, euen they that bee most deare vnto him, and which haue serued him in the rightest and soundest manner; euen verie they are oftentimes in such distresse, as doth amaze them & make them besides them selues. What complaints maketh Dauid? That his eyes are forworne; that he is as good as consumed with mourning, that the marowe of his bones is dried vp; that all his strength is faded, that he is in so great feare, that to his owne seeming hee was swallowed vp into a bottomlesse gulfe. This happeneth sometimes to Gods children. How so? This threatening is made to them that despise him, to them that cannot by any good meane bee reclaimed, and which haue alwayes withstoode God. I haue tolde you already heerebefore, that God to trie his people to the quick, suffereth them to bee altogether in like case as the wicked, inso much that euen they themselues doe thinke so too. But yet doth God therewith reach them his hande, and although he doth not qualifie their griefes at the first, yet he holdeth them at such stay that they shall not quaike. There lieth still some seede of Gods spirit hidden in them, which at length vttereth it selfe more fully, so they see well that God susteined them in the midst of those extremities, and in the end it appeareth vnto them, as it were in a visible manner. Let vs markeit well then, that when the children of God bee tossed and troubled with afflictions and haue so grievous and harde temptations as were able to make them thinke, that God is their enemy, so as they dare not open their mouth to call vpon him, but are vtterly astonished: inso much that although he alledge vnto them the promises of his grace, yet they cannot tast of them, but do sometimes euen refuse them like the vnbeleeuers, as though they were fully determined to shut themselues out of all hope of saluation: when they bee at this point, then doeth our Lorde worke in them, in such wise as he suffereth them not to bee quite ouerthrowen with temptation: And that is Saint Pauls meaning where he saith, We be afflicted, but we perish not, wee bee oppressed, but yet howe soeuer the worlde goe, wee bee not overcome: for we beare the mortifying of Iesus Christ in our flesh. Whereas hee saith, that the faithfull may in deepe be bent vp in afflictions, he saith also that yet notwithstanding they quaike not for euer: albeit that they are made to stoope vnder the burden, and to grone as though they were crushed and broken; yet notwithstanding, al those heartbreakings breede not any deadly fall. Hee addeth the reason. Namely that it is the mortifying of our Lord Iesus Christ, that they beare. As if hee should say, that God doeth euermore separate them from the misbelceuing and reprobates, and from the despisers of his maicesty, and that hee printeth in vs the marke of his only sonne. It is true, that in this case they seeenie as dead, but the same death is holy, for God sanctifieth it, for that they bee members of our Lord Iesus Christ: and thereby they attaine to the resurrection. True it is, that Saint Paul speaketh not a lonely of the last resurrection, but he beginneth at the comfort which GOD giueth presently to his children to trayne them on still to the port of saluation. Now then, they enter into the middes of death, euen while they bee alieue. And therefore let vs marke, that although God doe now and then so afflict such as haue walked in his feare and haue put their trust in him, that they bee stricken with terror and tossed with vnquietnesse: yet notwithstanding hee holdeth them vp by the secret operation of his spirit: and moreover comforteth and gladdeth them in the ende, accomplishing that which he saith in another text: That the more they were distressed, the more doeth hee set their heartes at libertie, that they may freely come vnto him: and so consequently maketh them to vnderstande that he neuer forsooke them. Lo how our Lorde tempereth the troubles, and afflictions of the faithfull: so as although they in iure neuer so great paines, and doe euen pant in comming vnto him, as folke scarce able to open their mouthes to call vpon him: yet when they haue ended their conflict against their temptations, albeit that at the first they cannot get the vpper hande, yet shall they get the victorie in the end. But as for them that haue played the reit iades, they remaine pent vp in their miseries, without any remedie, because God doeth still set himselfe against them more and more vntill they become frantike, and gnash their teeth at him, and finally fall into vtter despair. To be short, we see that which is spoken by the Prophet Esay, dayly accomplished: namely, that there is no peace for the wicked; but that their mindes are tossed like the waues of the sea: when there is any storme, the waues bee troubled and the water is full of mudde: and euen so is it with them that despise God. Because they make warre against him, therefore must he also trouble them: Inso much that euen without enimie, yea and without any body to fray them, they of themselves be trighted, and beate and bounce themselves, as if they were at warre within themselves, so as there is no calmenesse at all in them, but all is full of trouble and disorder. For whereas the faithfull be inlightened in the midst of their darknesse, and G O D doth still restore vnto them to gae them some little sparke of light, in such wise as they may behold him; and albeit they attaine not thereunto at the first, yet notwithstanding they still streine themselves and holde on their way thitherwarde: in steede of this, the misbeleeuers are troubled at the very heart roote, and can none otherwise conceiue, but that they must needs perish in despair: and when they bee at the last cast, then tall they to spiring of God, and blasphem him with open mouth. To be short, here wee see that the grieuouest curse that God can sende vpon men in this transitorie life, is that they cannot rest vpon him, to acknowledge him to bee the keeper of their life: but contrariwise, are cast vp at aduerture, by reason whereof they bee cutt in doubt of their liues, and be so carried away with mistrust, that they wote nor where to become. When men be in this case, it is the greatest curse that can light vpon them. Not without cause therefore doth Moses declare heere for a conclusion as it were in way of summing vp the rest of all the curses which wee haue heard of heertofore, that there is nothing so dreadfull, as when men are become blockish, y there is in them no vnderstanding, as who would say, God maketh not any more reckening of them as of his creatures, but they may well perceiue that hee doeth not guide nor gouerne them any more. When men are come to this point, and that their life, (notwithstanding that it bee allowed of men,) is neuertheless hainous and detestable before God, and moreover they haue no tast of his fatherly loue, nor of the care that he hath of other men, but they be as in the dungeon of despair: when men (I say) bee come to such an extremitie, it were better for them that they had bene borne before their time, and that they had neuer enioyed this present life. And euen that is the verie cause why wee heare it threatened that they shall say, O ye mountaines fall vpon vs; and that they shall wish that the bottomlesse pittes had swallowed them vp. And why? For they finde that all creatures bee against them, when they haue no more access to God. When men perceiue once that hee will not maintaine them, but sheweth himselfe to bee armed against them: then do they vnderstand, that all creatures be their enemies, and it grieueth them to behold the sunne: then be they so possessed with teare, that they wishe there were no worlde at all: or rather that they were rooted out of it.

Nowe sith wee heare so horrible threatnings, let vs learne to walke in the feare of our God: for there is no other way to liue in rest, and to bee comforted in the midst of our sorrowes and aduersities, but to come with a free will to yelde our selues obedient to our God, and to doe him such reuerence as is due vnto him. For when we acknowledge him to be our iudge, we will not play the Rebels; but bee willing to bee reclaimed, that we bee not in the ende comprehended and wrapped vp in the number of them that haue resisted him. Yee see then howe the way that wee shoulde keepe is that we must willingly hearken vnto God when hee menaceth vs, and that wee must bee moued therewith, and bee touched therewith to the quicke: and that thereupon wee endeavour to serue him, and to obey his worde. For it may well bee that we shall sometimes bee vexed with feare and vnquietnesse: but yet will G O D deliuer vs from them. It is certaine that wee shall be weakened by that meane, and it is good for vs to be: but yet howe soeuer wee are, God will so keepe vs that wee shall not fall into vtter despair. Moreouer, when wee sometimes feele any vnquietnesse in our selues, and wee haue not power to call vpon God, but are tormented with distrust: let vs vnderstande that it is the fruite of our sinnes, and let vs desire God to make vs to perceiue that we haue not kept touch with him as wee ought to haue done, and that therefore hee casteth vs into that vexation and distresse. But let vs not so tempt our God, as he shoulde proceede to this rigour that is here mentioned: namely, wee shoulde haue no power to commit our life into his handes. So then, whereas heere is mention made of a trembling heart, let vs consider wherein our true rest doth remain, namely euen in this y God is our father, and that wee be his children. Likewise whereas mention is made of dafeling or sunken eyes; let vs vnderstande that we must looke upwards, as often as wee be in any feare: and that there is no other remedie to qualifie our griefes, but to liue vp our eyes to heauen. For as long as men looke downward, what shall they finde there but an infinit masse and masse of miseries able to feare them out of their wittes, so as they shall not knowe where to become? Let vs therefore seeke vnto this meane: that is to lift vp our eyes to heauen, knowing that God hath his hande stretched forth, to vpholde them that returne vnto him. Where mention is made of a sorrowfull minde; let vs vnderstande that it is the proper office of G O D to set our heartes at libertie, to the end that no temptation may vtterly vanquish and ouerwhelme vs. And this shall be treated of yet more fully.

Let vs come to that which Moses addeth; Namely, that in the morning they shall say, What is hee that will make mee see the night; and at evening, howe shall wee attaine to the morning; For thy life (saith hee) shall be hanging before thee, as at a threde. Heere wee see yet better that which hath bene saide afore. For what is the cause that men bee thus in a continuall feare, but that they cannot commend their life into the hand of G O D? In verie deede and to speake properly, the liues of vs all are euermore, as it were hanging at a Threde, but yet the despisers of God doe most peculiarly finde it so; and well worthie, for that they haue warred against him that shoulde haue set them in rest and safetie. Their life is as it were hanging by a threede, because that in steede of life there is euermore this feare of death in their heartes, and reason good. For what is the life of man? A smoke that passeth and vanisheth away. And moreover let vs see howe many deathes besee vs on all sides. So then as long as wee remaine in our naturall state, without hauing respect to GOD, our life is alwayes, as it were hanging at a Threede. Yea surely. Though wee bee neuer touched outwardly, how manie diseases beate wee in vs? A man needes not to goe out of himselfe, nor to seeke farre, to learne to howe many miseries and wretchednesse hee is subiect: for euen in his owne selfe hee shall forthwith finde an infinite number of deathes. Seeing then that it is so, let vs knowe, that vntill wee haue learned to rest vs in the prouidence of God, our life must of necessity bee as it were fluttering before our eyes, and altogether vncertaine; and to be short we beare it continually as it were in our hands: according as it is saide in Iob and in the hundred and nineteenth Psalmie.

Nowe when it is saide that wee carrie our life in our handes, it is to shewe, that where as life shoulde beare the man, the man beareth the life: that is to say, the life is left vp to the hazarde of all misfortune. Euen so it is with al men naturally, and as we haue already saide, the verie faithfull are not free from it, and that doe wee see by example in Iob, and Dauid. Notwithstanding, the despisers of God are they that feele most howe their life hangeth by a Threede. And wherefore? For God euen spite of their teeth inforceth them to perceiue the perils that beset them: they see it is good reason, that all manner of creatures shoulde become their enemies, by reason whereof they start when they heare but the falling of a leafe, and they bee afraide when no bodie pursueth them, as it is saide in another place of the Prouerbes. Thus doeth God open the eyes of them that are puffed vp with pride, and are drunken with the d-lightes of this worlde, and specially which haue hardened themselves in stubboinesse against him. Hee openeth their eyes, that they may knowe howe their life is lesse than nothing, and that all these shadowes, leasings, and vaine hopes wherupon men are wont to rest, are but baies to beguile them. See heere I pray you whereunto they come which doe skorne God and his worde, and are wholly giuen to this worlde, reposing their trust on earthly meanes and on the creatures. Needs they must at the last be caught with such feare as will teach them double and trebble to vnderstand their owne state.

Nowe when Moses hath spoken thus, hee addeth what they then say. Who shall assure vs so soe the morning? Howe shall wee ende the day? When men vnderstande once howe frail they be, and with howe many perils and miseries they be enuironed: then haue they no more happinesse. In deede wee can well say, that there is nothing more certaine than death, nor any thing more vncertaine than the houre thereof: but in the meane while wee regard it not, vntill God doe wring vs, and driue vs therunto by force. For then they which did beare themselves in hande that their life shoulde last without ende (as we see howe men deceiue themselves by fancying an immortalitie in this worlde, imagining that they shall liue a hundred yeares after they bee deade,) [doe finde the contrary.] And therefore because men are so blockish, God doeth still constraineth them to beholde present death continually pinching them and holding them at a bay. Thereupon they be in continuall feare; and albeit that they vtter nothing with their mouthes, yet doe they say thus in their heartes, Who can assure mee to see the morning? To be short, to their thinking, the very earth sinketh vnder them. And albeit that this doth not alwayes appeare, yet notwithstanding the despisers of God doe feele that this threatening is not in vaine nor without effect. Wherefore let vs not linger the time vntill God doe execute such iudgement vpon vs, but let vs rather prevent it, by hauing that same willing feare which is spoken of in this wise: Blessed is the man (saith Salomon) which feareth in his heart, that is to say, which calleth vpon himselfe, and taryeth not vntill God inforce him whether hee will or no. When euery of vs doeth stirre vp himselfe, it is the greatest benefite that wee can haue. Therefore where as the worldlings make themselves dull heades, and wander away after their owne vaine imaginations, and sling beyonde the moone as they say to the intent to liue in peace and rest without feeling of any grieue or trouble, whereas they (I say) would thus fall asleepe; let vs looke to our selues, and gather our wittes into some feare, and let euery of vs quicken vp himselfe. And if wee doe not stirre vp our selues in this manner, then must God needes torment and vex vs, and make vs a luely portraiture of that which is mentiooned heere. For in verie deede, after that the despisers of God haue plaide the madde beasts, and bleared out their tongues at all manner of doctryne, and set light by all threatenings, and like chafed bulles haue rushed against God and all his iudgements: they must at the last feele themselves vexed and troubled with vnquietnesse: as wee see howe the great Tyrants that make all the worlde to shake vnder them, haue their part hereof without measure: insomuch that where as they make others to drinke a little glasse of feare and terrour, they themselves must drinke vp a whole potte full, and suppe vp the dregges, according to the phrase of the Prophets, when they speake of the greatest punishment that God sendeth: Namely that when those whom God chastiseth, haue drunke more than their fill, in swallowing vp great store of sorowes; then they which haue liued at their ease and in pleasure, must drinke the leaze, which is the bitterest, and will make them to burst. And in deede, we haue an example of a heathenish Tyrant, Iob 13. 14.

Psal. 119. 109

Prou. 18. 19

Prou. 28. 1.

Esa. 51. 26

Tyrant, who hath verie well proued and declared that all his whole life was a continuall torment, yea euen by his owne witness. For being flattered of one that saide vnto him, O syr, howe happie is your state? Yea (quoth hee) and I will make thee to vnderstande it thy selfe. And thereupon hee made him a feast, and when hee had set him at y<sup>e</sup> table, he put a sworde ouer his heade, hanging by one onely hayre, to shewe vnto him, what manner of state that was, which hee had counted fo happie. The man seeing himselfe in that perplexitie, saide: Let this kingly state be taken away from mee: for I had leuer die a hundred times than to be in such vnquietnesse and perplexitie. This I say, was the confession of a heathen Tyrant: as if GOD shoulde haue helde him vpon the Torture, that it might bee a generall lesion againt all such as make warr with God, and trouble the worlde with terrour: they must spite of their teeth bee made afraide themselues, and finde no rest. After many rossings and turmoylings, hell must euermore waite for them, they must see their graues open which they are to fall into, and they must beholde the great gulfes readie to swallow them vp, and in the meane while can haue no recourse nor refuge to God, but doe stil flee from him, where as he is the onely person to whom they shoulde haue sought for succour.

Nowe ouer and besides that which wee haue saide already, namely, that we ought to preuent this threate, by fearing God of our owne accord: let vs vnderstande, that forasmuch as we be all wretched sinners, and there is not one, be he neuer so well and rightly minded, which ought not to vnderstande that hee is greatly indaungered vnto God: yet when wee haue our Lorde Iesus Christ, who is our peace, and when wee can by his meane rest vpon the fatherly goodnesse of God: then may wee be sure that he holdeth vs for his children, and that hee watcheth ouer vs, and procureth our welfare. And that is the cause why Saint Paul saith expressly, that when we be once iustified by faith, then we be at peace with God. He saith that we must be iustified by faith, that is to say, that wee must haue embraced the grace which is offered vnto vs by the Gospell: knowing that God forgiveth vs our sinnes, and is mercifull vnto vs; in that hee beareth with vs for our Lorde Iesus Christs sake. Vntill we come to this, we must needs be alwayes in doubt and in perplexitie: but hauing knowledge once that God hath buried all our sinnes, so as wee put our trust in the death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ; then wee bee at peace, yea in peace and not in dulnesse like as the vnfaithfull and the despisers of God may haue some peace for a certaine time, as we haue saide afore: but forasmuch as they forget themselues, and do still followe on their wicked traine, they vterly besot, and bewitch themselues. But Saint Paul saith that wee haue peace with God, that is to say, that we acknowledging our selues vndone without him, may boldly preace vnto him and say: Seeing GOD is my father and hee hath shewed himselfe so gracious to mee in this present life, as to giue me some rest heere: surely there is a more blisfull rest prepared for mee, when as our Lorde Iesus Christ shall come to meete vs, for to guide vs, and to bring vs vp, that wee may seeke our God; as in deede that is the place which wee must come vnto, if wee intende to haue a place to rest vs in. And in that respect it is that the Prophets in likewise speaking of the kingdome of our Lorde Iesus Christ, doe alwayes say, that euerie man shall then sleepe vnder his owne figge tree and vnder his owne vine: and nothing shall make him afraide. Nowe then concerning the threatenings which Moses hath set downe heere; the Prophets as true expounders of Moses, and as renewers and bringers of the Lawe to remembrance againe, hauing shewed vnto the people the vnbeliefe and rebellion which they saue in them, and hauing shewed the vengeance of God which was readie to light vpon them for it, did bring those back againe vnto Iesus Christ, which erst were altogether vnreformable. And albeit that it behoued them to suffer smart for a time because of their sinnes; yet doe they giue them hope that God will make a couenant with them, and that then they shall sleepe euery man in his vyneyarde and vnder his figge tree: doing then to vnderstande that although they slept nor in a locked chamber, but lay in y<sup>e</sup> midst of the fields, yet they shoulde be safe ynough because they were vnder the protection of their God, by reason whereof they might sleepe at ease and in safetie.

Forasmuch then as wee haue such assurance, wee ought to bee well settled in our mindes: and sith wee haue vnderstanding of the reconciliation that is made in our Lorde Iesus Christ, wee haue nowe good cause to rest vs in our God, and to be still and quiet; howbeit, so as we forget not to great a benchie. And wee see that our Lorde Iesus Christ is minded to raigne among vs. Let vs therefore suffer our selues to bee gouerned by his hande, and as Ewes and Lambes let vs followe our shepherde, and then shall wee do that which our Lorde hath appointed for vs, so as nothing may hinder vs, but that we may attaine vnto him. Although wee see things turmoyled in this worlde, so as all goes to hauocke, yet shall wee bee able to take breath againe, and to say; Yet hath my God still shewed mee the way: insomuch that whereas other men haue bene posted to and fro, I haue euermore stooode fast: and although I haue bene diuerse wayes troubled and vexed, yet doe I knowe Lorde that thou doest euermore gouerne thy people. Thus yee see that being stayed in our Lorde Iesus Christ, wee may bee assured that GOD will neuer faile vs. Seeing it is so, let vs returne vnto him, and pray him to defende and deliuer vs from all euill. The way then for vs to bee sure of our life, is, that although wee see nothing but continuall warr, yet wee must inforce our selues to fight, and perseure vntill we haue obtained the victorie, and if hee take vs away to himselfe, hee will then bee the keeper of our soules. He will guide vs in this present life, so as both day and night wee shall feele his grace. When the euening commeth, albeit that the night doe bring neuer so much feare with it, yet shall we be in safetie. Why so? For God is that while our fortresse, and we shall not be forsaken of him. Therefore let vs tarie vntill the morning. Thus doe we euer more referre our life vnto him. And although we be not senselesse, yet shall we haue continually, whereupon to stay vs when wee see our owne infirmitie. As for example, when a man perceiueth that hee is not able to stande, but his legges quake and solter vnder him; hee either leaneeth to some thing, or sitteth downe in a chaire, or else stayeth himselfe vpon some staffe; euen so is it with vs. For wee haue not the strength of Gyants, wee be not of such power as to be able to defie our enemies, for wee see well that wee bee too too weake. But in the meane while wee cease not to stay vpon God, and that is our refuge. Neither haue we this assistance for this present life onely; but wee haue it also for the life to come: inasmuch that although our Lord doe put vs into the hands of our enemies, yet will he not misse to be our sauour euen in the midst of death. Let vs not doubt, but that he will safely conuey vs not onely from the morning to the euening, and from the euening to the morning; but also that euen in the midst of the darkenesse of death, we shall alwayes be lightened with his goodnesse, and hee will shewe vs that the life which hee hath promised to his people, shall neuer faile. Therefore doth Dauid vse this manner of speach. Lorde (saith he) thy staffe or else thy shepherdes hooke. He taketh the similitude of a sheepeherd, that hath his staffe or his hooke. Lorde (saith hee) so long as I see thy staffe before me, I am safe, inasmuch that if wee were to goe into the darkenesse of death, yet being in that dark and yrksome dale, yea euen in such sort as I might seeme to be cast into hell: I would not cease to ioyce. After this manner must we practise this doctrine.

Eph. 3. 14.

Rom. 5. 1.

Nowe lastly it is said, that God will carry his people by the waie, concerninge the, which is said: Thou shalt neuer see it againe: & that they should bee caried in shippes: and that being come into Egypt, they should bee set to sale as slaues, & yet no body should buy them. They should not be esteemed, but as a people vterly cast away, and euery body shoulde dildaine them. Now this was all one as if God should haue meant to cut them off, saying, Remember how I meruelously deliuered you out of the lande of Egypt, when I made you to passe through the wilderness, and in like wise to goe through the red sea, or the sea of Bulrushes, (which they call y red sea: but properly it is the sea of bulrushes, because of the Bulrushes that growe in it) for I caused that arme of the sea to shrinke back, that you might passe on drie foote. But now shall you returne thither in shippes; you must passe againe that way, yea, albeit that I forbade you, and inioyned you expressly, that you should not goe that way any more: yet shall you returne thither spite of your teeth. In deede at the other time that you were in Egypt, you sorowed for the oppression which you suffered, and I tooke pitie of you, and tooke you out of it. But at this time, when you shall require any bodie to buy you to be their slaues, and to yeelde your life to the most miseries that may bee: you shall haue no buyer at all. As if hee had saide, Seeing you haue despised the deliuerance that was wrought for you, and haue forgotten such a benedictie; it shall be well known that you bee vnhappy and a cursed people, and that I haue forsaken and refused you vterly. This threat coulde not bee but exceeding terrible to the Jewes. And when the Prophetes expounded Moses, wee see likewise howe the people gnashed their teeth against them. Howbeit, no whit were they meekened thereby, but rather they doubled their confusion: inasmuch that it was alwayes cast in their teeth that their iniquities proceeded to such extremitee as was intolerable. It is saide, that, notwithstanding all the manaces of the Lawe were pronounced vnto them, yet they regarded them not, but helde on still, and became so much the more hardhearted, as though they had ment of set purpose to make warre against God. Soothly it is a horrible thing and against nature, that they which were the householde of God, the holy generation, the children of Abraham, and which from the beginning had bene trained vp in the doctrine of the lawe, and had had the sayings alwayes laide before them which were written by Moses, so as their eares were continually beate therewith: shoulde yet notwithstanding fare neuer the better for it, but still goe on from euill to worse. Was not that a horrible thing? Yes verily: and yet wee see the like example. Let vs make our benefite thereof, and beware that we wax not so hardhearted, least wee be possessed of Sathan, and forsaken of God, so that whatsoeuer is tolde vs & shewed vnto vs, we be touched with no manner of feare, but become like wilde bores which of their owne wilfulnesse doe cast themselves into death. Let vs take heede that we prouoke not our God in that manner.

And morouer whereas it is saide heere, that God woulde bring this people whom he had redeemed, into a double captiuitie and more reprochfull than was the first: let vs repaire vnto that redemption which was once wrought by our Lorde Iesus Christ; and that we may be partakers thereof, let vs freely serue him which purchased vs so deere. And seeing that our God hath redeemed vs in the person of his sonne, to such a state that now we be franke and free from the bondes of sinne and Sathan, let vs hencefoorth feare him and serue him all the dayes of our life, according as Zacharie speaketh in his song, recited by Saint Luke. Seeing then that the case standeth so, let vs learne to walke in such obedience to our God, as hee may make the redemption auailable which is wrought by our Lorde Iesus Christ; and let vs serue him in all holinesse and righteoufnesse, that wee bee not bereft of the fauour which hee hath purchased for vs as wee see this people were, who after they had bene fetled in the lande of Chanaan, were put our a gaine for their vnthankfulnesse. Therefore let vs bee well ware that God dispossele vs not of the grace which he hath bestowed on vs; but let vs learne to take such profite thereby, as all the whole may yeelde fruite to his glory, to the intent he may make vs to vnderstand, that as well in life as in death, hee is cuermore our Sauour and our redeemer, and y<sup>e</sup> we may make our boast that he hath not redeemed vs in vaine, but with condition, that we should henceforth lue in libertie in despite of the diuell and of death, according as wee haue example thereof in Sainct Paul.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the maiestic of our good God, with acknowledgement of our sinnes, beseeching him to touch vs more and more to the quicke, that being stricken with such a feare, as may make vs to see that of our selues we bee deade and forlorne; we may yet for all y<sup>e</sup> not faile to flee for refuge to his mercie. Let vs 20 therefore seeke the way thither, which is, that we acknowledge our selues to be recōciled by Iesus Christ, and that hee is our peace vnto the ende, according as he doeth continually declare and testifie vnto vs by the doctrine of his Gospell. Eph. 2. 14

And that in the meane while it may please our good God, to giue vs the spirite of mildnesse and meekenesse, to the ende wee rebell not against him any more, nor haue our affections any more, striuing and rebelling against his Lawe, but rather that wee may commit ouer our selues to his guiding, and bee confirmed in the assurance which hee hath giuen vs, that hee holdeth vs for his people; so as he may shew by effect, that hee watcheth ouer vs, and that hee will continue with vs to the ende to preferre vs both in life and in death. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth. &c.

THese bee the wordes of the couenant which the Lorde God commaunded Moses to enter into with the children of Israel in the lande of Moab: ouer and besides the couenant which he had made with them in Horeb.

2 And Moses called all Israel, and saide vnto them: you haue seene all that the Lorde hath done before your eyes in the land of Egypt, to Pharao, and to all his seruants, and to all his COUNTRY.

3 The great trials which thine eyes haue seene, and the great signes and wonders.

4 And yet the Lord hath not giuen you a heart to vnderstand, eyes to see, and cares to heare, vnto this present day.

WHEN GOD hath once shewed his wil vnto me it ought to suffice for euer. For what would wee more, when wee vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> we ought to walke in the obedience of our God: euen of him who hath formed and created vs; to whome wee belong, and who hath so dearely bought vs? Needs then must men be wonderfully vnthankful, whē they can forget that which God hath taught them. And that is the cause why it is so often times tolde vs that wee must not turne away from the truth when it is once knowen vnto vs. But we see howe God was faine to ratifie his Law againe the second time, to the end it might be receiued, yea euen of that verie people whom he had chosen; and yet we see that at that time the Iewes ought to haue bene sufficiently reclaimed to obey God: for hee had brought them lowe with long affliction, and surely it is a thing that ought to make men y<sup>e</sup> more pliable to learn, when they haue bin beaten with the scourges of God and their pride bin long punished in them, so as they haue bene driuen to flee vnto God to pray him to take compassion of their miseries. It may well seeme that this should make them as gentle and meeke as lambes. The people of Israel were in that case, but they did forthwith forget the miseries which they had suffered, they kicked against their God, and they could not finde in their hearts to receiue the yoke that was laide vpon their necke. Therefore we haue here a faire looking glasse of the naughtinesse and forwardnes of our nature: for this is not written to this ende onely that we should blame the Iewes: but much rather that we should consider that we our selues doe nothing differ from them, vntill God haue reformed vs by his holy spirite. Here then in y<sup>e</sup> person of the Iewes, God sheweth vs what we are of purpose to humble vs.

Therefore he saith, that God commaunded Moses to make a couenaunt the seconde time wish the children of Israel in the Land of Moab, yea ouer & besides that couenaunt which hee made in Horeb, 10 where the law was first deliuered. It is certaine y<sup>e</sup> Gods declaring of his law was to the intent that euerie man should remember this lesson both night and day, and for that cause was the law set downe in writing. For it is not ynough for vs to haue had God speake once; but the fathers must also teach their children, and euerie man must exercise himselfe in that which he hath heard, y<sup>e</sup> he may frame himselfe thereafter fro day to day, & bee the better edified. Gods intent then was y<sup>e</sup> 20 this people should bee dayly furthered, and for that purpose also were the Priests ordained. For I haue tolde you for what purpose our Lord had chosen them from among the people: It was not for the ceremonies of the Temple onely: but (as it is touched in the Prophet Malachy) it was to sowe good and profitable doctrine throughout all the whole lande: and to that ende also were they dispersed euerie where, that the people might be retayned in the purity of Religion, and in obedience to the lawe. But the question here concerneth the solemne couenaunt. When God published his law in Horeb, we vnderstand that the lightnings did flie forth, that there was a sounde of trumpets, that the heauen moued, that the mountaine flamed, that mens minds were a-fraide, and to bee short, that God there shewed his presence with such maicentie, as all men must needs know that obedience was due vnto him, Marke heere the solemnitie that was kept to 40 make the Lawe autenticall. I haue saide that this ought to suffice vs to the ende of the worlde. Should wee then looke to haue him to doe it againe the seconde time? Seeing that God hath tully certified vs that the lawe proceeded from him, and y<sup>e</sup> it is not a doctrine of mans deuising, but Gods owne vnchangeable wil, and the rule that hee meant to haue kept without breaking, not onely of them that lyued at that time, but also from age to age so long as the world should laste; seeing (I say) that God did so shew forth his power to his creatures, ought not the remembrance of such a deede persuaile to rule vs, without any opening of our lippes against the doctrine contained in the Lawe? Yes surely. Needs then must it be that the people were verie leawd, yea and very rebellious, seeing they could so soone forget that which God had ordained to cause his lawe to bee receiued with all reuerence.

And that is the cause why it is saide, besides the couenaunt that was made in Horeb. Here Moses reprooueth those that should teach their children and posteritie, vpbraiding them that they had forgotten God, and not profited themselves by the wonders which they sawe at the publishing of the lawe, but compelled God to renew it againe at the ende of fourtie yeeres, as though they had not known whence the lawe came, but had cast doubt of it still, and would make none account thereof, vnlesse they were subdued againe by maine force, and fetched home againe by God like a sort of stray cattell. That was a token of great malice. But let vs marke howe God hath turned the euill vnto good, by making it to serue to our saluation. For by this meane wee bee the better confirmed in the doctrine of the Lawe. If it had bene published but onely once in Horeb, it ought to haue bene more than ynough to vs. And seeing that God gaue forth his voice in the aire, in so much that if a beast had come neere the mountaine, it should haue dyed; and men heard dreadful things and all their wits were troubled; the reciting of these things vnto vs ought to make vs to cast downe our eyes, and to yelde our selues pliable to receiue that which is contained in the Lawe of God. But nowe seeing it is saide that God began againe, and that there was a double confirmation, whereby the lawe was ratified anewe, and God auowed himselfe to bee the author thereof, and no mortal man: ought not the hearing of such thinges, to assure vs so much the more to stay vpon the doctrine thereof without any replying? If we doe it not, double condemnation will lye vpon vs. And thus we do see that the rebellion of the Iewes profiteth vs by that which fell out vpon it, inasmuch as it was an occasion that God did yet better confirme the authoritic of his lawe.

Nowe let vs consider whereat Moses doeth beginne. He saith: The Lorde hath wrought dreadfull wonders before your eyes in the Lande of Egypt, there were sensations to trie you: you knowe what hee did vnto Pharaos and to all his subiectes: yes notwithstanding, you haue not considered any of all those thinges; you haue had neither wits, nor eares, nor eyes, you haue bin deafe and blind, senselesse & beastly, and so ye see howe al gods myracles haue nothing auailed you, because of your dulnes. lustily hath Moses begun here with vpbraiding, and iustly doth hee blame y<sup>e</sup> people for that they had not bin more attentive to vnderstande and to marke the testimonies that God gaue them: yea verely. Wherevnto tendeth that, but vnto this which hee addeth for a conclusion, My will was that you should haue knowne that I am the euerlasting your God: Lo howe God declared that his intent was to reforme his people, as if he should haue said, hold ye to me: know ye that seeing I haue taken y<sup>e</sup> charge of you, your life shall be happy, & I will haue care of you: therefore honor me, put all your trust in me, settle your affection vpon me, & glorifie me in al your life. That was gods purpose, when he shewed his wonderful power in deliuering y<sup>e</sup> people of Israel 60 out of the bondage of Egypt. Seeing then that all this profited them not, must it not needs be that they were too too froward, in burying so many testimonies of Gods presence, specially seeing it was for their welfare and felicitie to haue yeluded themselves in subiection vnto God? Seeing then that they were so wiltheaded, and would would not by any meane bee reclaimed. it is a signe of too diuclish malice. It is al one as if Moses thold say thus: Look to your selues: For there is no excuse why you should be thus deaf, blind, and senselesse. Whereas God hath wrought so mightily in the land of Egypt for your deliuerance, it was to the ende that you should be established in the trust of his goodnesse and power, and bee stayed vpon the mightie strength which hee shewed vnto you in so excellent manner: But you haue doone no such thing: and therefore yee be more than guiltie, because nothing hath hindered you to knowe your God, which hath thus shewed himselfe vnto you, but your owne vnthankfulness in refusing al manner of vnderstanding.

In deede it seemeth at the first shew, y<sup>e</sup> Moses doth in this place diminish the fault of the people, by saying, God hath not giuen you eyes to heare euen to this day, neither eyes to see, nor minde to vnderstand. For hee sheweth that it was not in the peoples power to haue either reason or vnderstanding, vntill the same were giuen them from aboue. Nowe if men bee so brutish that they cannot bee taught, vntill God call them vnto him; what can they say, but y<sup>e</sup> they are to be pitied, and that he ought not to condemne them for the same? It seemeth therefore that Moses went about here to cloake the iniquitie of the people, in saying, that it was long of G O D. For it was in Gods power to haue enlightened that people if hee had would, but he did it not. And he sayth precisely, God hath giuen thee neither eyes nor eares. Whereby hee sheweth that it is a singular gift of God, to bee able to beholde his workes and to discern aright of them, that wee may be instructed by them. If we be destitute of the spirite of God, then are we altogether brutish: insomuch that although God speake, yet we heare him not: and although he stretch forth his mightie hand, yet we perceiue it not a whit. Shold not this serue me for some excuse of their ignorance? And in very deede, they that would walke their handes, wil alwayes say, Why? If I haue libertie to doe well, I am to be blamed if I discharge not my selfe: but of whom is it long that I haue it not, but of God who depriveth me of his grace? Thus doe men pleade their cause, and it seemeth to them that they be iustified and acquitted, so they can declare that it lyeth not in them to doe wel, vntill God do assist the. And so saith Moses. But yet is al manner of excuse taken away, insomuch that although men be not able to attaine to well doing, no nor (which more is) to conceiue one only good thought towards it: yet shal they stil abide condemned before God, neither can they haue any colour of excuse for their infirmities, or of the faultnesse which is in their nature. Moses (as I haue already declared) doth here plead the cause of God against y<sup>e</sup> people. The people therefore must rest in their cōdēnation, & be shut out fro al manner of thifs. And what saith he to this? The Lord hath not giuen thee eyes to see. yea euen to this people that is de-priued of the grace of God: and yet are condemned here neuertheless. Let vs therefore make it well, that the vices which bee in vs, serue not to discharge vs, so as God shoulde not alwayes haue his right to reprove vs, yea and also to condemne vs, if we folowe not his truth when it is offered vnto vs. For the better vnderstanding whereof, let vs consider that this is not spoken of the Iewes onely, but generally of all men. For through the offence of Adam, we be so alienated from God, that al our powers be corrupted and faultie. By the powers of the soule I meane the vnderstanding, reason, will and iudgement: All these thinges are vterly peruerted by Adams turning away from G O D. And for prooffe thereof, the reason and wisdom which the first man had, were not in himselfe, sauing in that hee was fashioned after the Image of God: and therefore as soone as hee was separated from his creator, who is the fountaine of all goodnesse, hee coulde not but be depriv'd of all the graces that G O D had earli bestowed on him. Yee see then howe Adam did so banish himselfe into the kingdome of G O D, that in stead of the spirituall riches wherewith hee was first endowed, there is nothing in him now but al manner of wretchednesse. For the heritage which wee haue from him is to bee altogether sequestred from Gods grace. In deed there doe yet still remaine in vs certaine prints of them: to the intent we shoulde not be like the brute beastes, I meane euen by nature. Although the Paynims bee not reformed by the spirite of G O D, yet are they not as Oxen, Asses, or Dogges. Wee therefore doe still beare some marke of that Image of God which was imprinted in the first man: howbeit that wee haue corrupted it altogether. For although that wee can iudge betwix good and euill, yet is not that able to leade vs to perfection of true doctrine; neither is it able to make vs to knowe our God, to honour him sincerely as we ought: but whereas wee haue a certaine seede of knowledge that there is a G O D, wee bee dazzled in our thoughtes, and forge vaine dotages to our selues. Thence come all the idolatries, that euer were in the worlde. For albeit that men doe very well vnderstand that there is a certaine diuine maiestie which ought to be honored, yet are they not able to attaine thereunto: but doe beguile themselves with certaine imaginations, notwithstanding the light which is in them: whereby they shewe, that because of sinne, they be bereft of all good vnderstanding, so as they bee not able to sette one foote forward to march one stepe in the right way. To be shorte, all the vnderstanding and reason which wee haue, serueth but to make vs so much the more vnexcusable; for we cannot pleade ignorance.

Nowe then we perceiue that there is no vnderstanding in men that they shoulde say they knowe G O D, though hee haue opened himselfe vnto them. Therefore sayth Saint Paul that the naturall man is not able to vnderstand the thinges which belong to the spirit. Hee saith not, that men be so forward that they wil not vnderstand: but hee saith that they cannot at all: the power or abilitie thereof is not in vs. And why? Because of the corruption that is crept into vs through the sinne of Adam. Nowe then like as our will is frowarde, so is our vnderstanding darkened, so as we neither discerne ne deeme as were requisite for our saluation. Whereas wee knowe both the good and the euill, wee encline to the euill rather than to the good. What causeth that? Because wee bee captiues vnder the seruitude of sinne, and the diuell who is Prince of this world, reigneth ouer vs, vntill wee be deliuered out of his bands and Tyranny, through the grace of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And like as the will is frowarde in vs, euen so is our spirite wrapped in much ignorance, so that God must inlighten vs by a speciall grace, or else we shall neuer iudge of his word or works, as becommeth vs. Now therefore we see here, that God doth fo accuse the Iewes, as that by that meane he sheweth vnto vs, that we be all deafe, blinde and senselesse. We must make these three things; that vntill God giue vs eyes, eares, and spirite or heart, we can not but goe cleane contrarie to his will. Seeing it is so, let vs learne not to come with a foolish presumption, thinking our selues meete to bee admitted to the knowing of Gods secretes: but rather let vs referre our selues vnto him, that when his word is pronounced vnto vs, it may please him to giue vs the spirite to receiue it: and so worke before our eyes, that we may be so inlightened as we may see the better for his workes, by taking hold of his maiestie and glorie, and by stooping vnto him. I speake awel of his word as of his workes: and not without cause. For when we come to heare Gods worde, we see that many doe retorne from it as they came to it, and beare nothing away; or if they can heare aught, yet are they neuer a whit edified thereby. Whence commeth that? Euen of this, that G O D giueth eyes and eares to whome hee thinketh good. Therefore, let vs not imagine that we be sufficient and capable to discerne well, when wee haue bin onely taught, but let vs referre our selues vnto G O D, knowing that all light, all reason, all skill, and all discretion proceede from his spirite. In deede wee vse that kinde of praying before our Sermons: but yet there are very many which doe vse it but as a ceremony, and are not touched with it at all. But looke how often wee desire God to inlighten vs with his holy spirite; so oft doe wee make solenne protestation, that wee come thither as wretches that are blinde, deafe, and altogether blockish, vntill God haue reformed vs, & drawn vs to himselfe. Then lyke as G O D speaketh vnto vs outwardly by the mouth of men whome hee hath appointed: euen so must he also speake inwardly by his holy spirit. Truly it is a grace that is not to be despised, when as wee haue the pure doctrine vntered vnto vs: but yet shall it not auile vs, vntill G O D hath also touched our heartes and our mindes.

If wee will be edified in the word of God, we must bee drawn with this inward grace when wee bee taught at the mouth of a mortall man.

For lyke as the sunne yeeldeth light, and yet the blinde see neuer the more for it: Euen so the worde of God is preached vnto vs without edifying, vnlesse our Lord giue vs eyes wherewith to behold his countenance as it shineth forth in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ. So much for that poynnt.

Now as concerning the workes of God, it is alike. We doe continually eate the bread which hee giueth vs: we take our fill of his benefites; but yet for all that wee resort not vnto him, neither doe wee any way thinke to come neere him, vntill hee haue giuen vs wisdom and discretion, that so being nourished by his goodnesse, wee may yeelde him thanks, for that hee hath a fatherly care ouer vs. Lykewise wee see the punishmentes and corrections which hee sendeth vpon the wicked, wee be blockish, and passe them ouer, vntill hee haue wakened vs and made vs to vnderstand, that it is for our sinnes, that hee hath his hand so stretched out. To bee shorte, whether G O D speake gently to drawe vs vnto him; or whether hee correct vs, and shewe vs some token of roughnesse, to make vs to stoope: yet all this serueth to no purpose, vntill God giue vs eyes to see, eares to heare, and heart to vnderstand. Are wee thus reprov'd? Let vs learne to mislyke of our selues, and let vs not counterfeite those that kicke against God, as if their sinnes should serue them for a buckler: let vs beware of such blasphemies. For wel may wee reply and say, I cannot tell what to doe, my nature is so corrupted in Adam: and I am thereby disurnished of all manner of power to attaine vnto goodnesse: but when wee haue well debated our cause, it is certaine that wee shall continue still in our condemnation. And why? For the euill commeth of vs. Is it not enough for a man that hee may bee his owne witness, and needeth not to haue any inditement preferred against him by otherfolkes, nor any information against him? If a man enter into himselfe, although he bee a slaue vnto sinne, and be altogether compacted of naughtinesse; and is not any way able to attaine vnto goodnesse: yet is it so, that of his owne proper motion, and of his owne free will (as they terme it,) hee is alwayes drawn vnto euill, howbeit, hee is not forced thereunto. It is certaine that it is not possible for him to doe good: and yet neuertheless the sinne which hee committeth proceedeth not from any where else, than of his owne inclination: his will is so. Now seeing it is proved that we sinne not otherwise than of our own freewill; is not that enough to stop our mouthes? To what purpose serueth it vs to spurne against God, seeing that wee must needs come to this condemnation? Therefore on the one side let vs learne to magnifie the grace of G O D towards vs; and therewithall cast downe our eyes, for that wee can doe nothing else but sinne against him.

Siue wee see such dulnesse in vs, that the workes of God doe passe before our eyes, and wee perceiue them not: let vs sigh and say;

Alas

Alas, must it not needs be that we bee very frowarde, seeing that God sheweth vs here, that how familiarly he offereth himselfe, and that his power is open vnto vs, and yet notwithstanding we remaine worse than wilde beastes? After that manner ought wee to lament; and seeing that God doeth vs to vnderstand, (as I haue sayd afore) that the punishments which he sendeth vs; be for our warning: if we profite not our selues thereby, let vs impute it to our owne hardheartednesse & say, needs must I be too too wicked, seeing that God calleth me to his schole, & driueth me thither w his rod, & yet his word profiteth me nothing, but I continue still in my wilfulnesse; what a dealing is y? Although then y we be both deaf & blinde; yet let vs learn always to giue glory to God by condemning our selues willingly for y we resort not vnto him, and for y we vse not the meanes better which he professeth vnto vs to bring vs backe againe into the way of saluation. Thus much for one poynt.

Nowe on the other parte, when God hath shewed vs the fauor to make vs see his works to our benefite: let vs also looke vpon his very face in the doctrine of the Gospell, that we may bee transfigured into the same, and let vs magnifie such goodnesse, assuring our selues that wee attaine not vnto faith by our owne power or policie, as who shoulde say, we were able men, and had well marked Gods woorkes, and well considered of them. Nay let vs acknowledge that all this cometh of him, and that otherwise wee should haue remained still in our beastly ignorance, as we see many doe.

There is yet more, for when we see that God worketh in vs, and that in the meane while hee suffereth a great many others to remaine deaf & blinde; y same ought to leade vs to a far greater consideration of his goodnes, to y end wee may perceiue our selues to be so much y more beholding & bound vnto him. Dauid did acknowledge y wise he was wel tamed through Gods chastisements, it was a special gift, & likewise when God did reforme him by his holy spirit. And when he speaketh of the vnderstanding that he hath of the secretes of God, and of all the doctrine of saluation, hee attributeth the same to the holy Ghost: shewing that it behoued him to proceede alwayes in profiting more and more. And therefore he hath his recourse to the heavenly grace, confessing that there is not so much as one drop of knowledge in him, but by the gift of God. And when he is to treat of his obedience towards God: he sayth that it is the worke of God to open his eares, and to subdue him thoroughly vnto him. We see then by this, how he by his owne example teacheth vs to doe our homage vnto God for all manner of wisdom and discretion, for all the light of faith which he hath giuen vs, and for all the good affection and desire that we haue to worship him. But as I haue sayd heretofore, when God dealeth not alike with all men, but whilest he draweth vs vnto him, he leauerh others in their vnbeleefe; therein hee magnifyeth his goodnesse yet the more. And when we say that God giueth not men the hart to vnderstand, or that he doth giue it them: our meaning is that he draweth some & letteth other some alone, according to his owne choosing of them, as it is sayd in S. Luke. Yee see how S. Paul preached: and yet all beleued not his doctrine, neither were they wonne to the knowledge of Iesus Christ. And what is the cause thereof? Whence cometh this diuersitie? Euen of this, that God calleth and draweth those vnto him whose hee hath chosen, as S. Paul treateth as well in the viii. Cap. to the Rom. as hee doth more at large in the ix. but he deriueth this argument from the calling; namely that after God hath chosen men, he consequently calleth them vnto him. Lykewise doth hee swel in the first to the Ephesians, as in other places; where hee sheweth that God doth then testifie that he hath chosen and adopted vs for his childre, when it pleaseh him to drawe vs vnto him through his goodnesse. That is the thing which we haue in effect to remember. When we heare Moses in this place reprove the people of Israel, that they vnderstood not the miracles of God: and yet saith: That God had giuen them neither eyes, neither eares, nor heares.

Now if it be demanded why Moses vouchsafed not to expresse the cause why God gaue not his spirite vnto the said people; (for it seemeth that he might in one word more grievously haue condemned the people, if hee had sayd: Thou hast not harkened, thou hast not discerned.) There are two causes thereof. The one is to doe the people to vnderstand that they were so froward, that although God had wrought a million of miracles mo than they had scene already; yet had it bin vnpossible that they shoulde haue bin conuerted by the same. When men see that they be so leawdly disposed and froward, that although God shoulde create a hundred worlds before their eyes, yet woulde it stand them in no stead: ought they not to be the more ashamed of themselves? Yee surely. And again let vs mark farther, that Moses meant to exhort the people to pray vnto God, for that in deed is the only remedy, when we find so grosse and so excessive brutishnesse in vs, that wee forget all manner of good doctrine, and all manner of admonitions which God hath giue vs, yea euen when he stretcheth out his hand effectually to make vs to feel his power. Whē we haue buried all these things, let vs resort to the remedy, which is, that wee pray vnto him to giue vs wisdom and discretion to iudge better hereafter. Moses therefore did aie at those two ends, as if he should say, Wretched people, looke to your selues: for to presume any thing of your own wisdom, or of your virtues, what were it? Sith experience doth shewe that you bee altogether giuen to euil, & that although God work neuer so mightily in your presence, yet it serueth you to no purpose. Therefore acknowledge your selues to be starke blind, and no better than wretched brute beastes. Forget all your glorying, put away al ouerwening, & flatter not your selues, as if you had this or y: For you haue power to do nothing but euil. So much for y point. Secondly againe he sayeth vnto the, Go to, what is to be done? As for to intorce your selues, you be not able, for all your induoring is but vnto wickednes. But wil you the yeld your selues wholly vnto God? Knowe yee that it is his his office to open mens eyes and eares. Therefore confesse your faultes, and desire him to provide for you, and to reforme your mindes in such wise, as yee may from henceforth well consider his workes, and that hauing considered them, ye may be edified in his feare and obedience, so as you may haue eares to receiue the doctrine which is offered vnto you in his name. That is it whereat Moses aimed. Thus wee see that they which giue themselves to ouermuch curiositie, doe peruert the doctrine of God, and fallily abuse it. When it is preached that in stead of freewill (as they terme it,) men haue but a cursed and a corrupt will, and are so blinde, that all their reason is but brutishnesse, and that they cannot attaine to the doctrine of saluation, vntil they bee haled therunto: they fall to making of erroneous disputations. But the meaning of the holy Ghost is much differing from them. For it is to humble men, that they may learne to mislike of themselves, yea and vtterly to condemne themselves, when it is declared vnto the that they can doe nothing. And furthermore wee be prouoked to pray, seeing that God must bee faine to worke in vs. And when we feele our feeblenesse and infirmitie, wee bee driuen to resorte vnto him and to desire him to keepe vs vnder his obedience, for so much as it pleased him once to elect vs. Let vs therefore take heede that wee doe not wilfully wander either this way or that way: but as often as it is tolde vs, that we haue not yet bin taught of the holy ghost, nor bin reformed by him: let vs sigh, at the beholding of our naughtinesse which ceaseth not to make vs euer guiltie. And thereupon let vs resorte to our God, and pray him to haue pitie vpon vs, and to provide remedie for all our faultes, and to giue vs henceforth both eares, eyes, and heart, to see, heare, and to vnderstand the things which he telleth vs.

Now then foras much as we haue here an instruction in the person of the people of Israel: let vs acknowledge our vnrthankfulnesse. True it is y God hath so wrought, as there is none of vs which can excuse himselfe, that he hath not bin instructed sufficiently at some time of his lyfe, to walke in the feare of God. In very trueth, we saw not the giuing of the law in Horeb, we heard not y thunderclappes, wee saw not the lightnings, neither heard we the Trumpets sound: but yet doth God dayly worke in such manner, as he leaueh not himself without witness, yea euē though there were none other thing than y hee causeth the Sunne to shine, and sendeth vs rayne and faire weather: as S. Paul sayth in the Actes. Behold, y heauen & the earth, & the things which we see are witnesses vnto God. And yet for all y, God ceaseth not to doe notable actes & worthy of memory, which ought to waken vs although we were neuer so blockish. Had a man liued but onely fiftene yeres in this worlde, it were time long enough to make him knowe Gods wonderful workes. But when we haue continued here a fortie or fiftie yeres and more, and God in that time hath renewed the memory of his workes, one while comforting vs, and another while cha-stising vs: insomuch that we are forced to perceiue his power so many wayes, and to knowe y he hath deliuered vs from so many and so apparant daungers, & that he hath reached vs his hand to pluck vs, (as it were) out of the bottome of the graue, yea euen when we were as good as drowned in death; if wee notwithstanding such instructions, doe stil remaine deafe and blinde; shall we not bee condemned by this text? Yes truly. And let vs not in this case say, O the time y I remained in papistrice; I was the a blind wretch, but yet I sinned not: let vs beware of such shifts: for they wil serue vs to no purpose. But let vs vnderstand, that we be alwayes to bee condemned for our ignorance, for they y siane without lawe, shall perish without the lawe, as S. Paul saith in the second to the Romanes. For in whom is the fault y we see nor the things which God sheweth openly vnto vs, but in our owne naughtines?

After that maner therefore must we condemne our selues, when we can not learne by any of the means which God deliuereth vnto vs, as when he would drawe vs to his knowledge, & that wee shoulde be inlightened to knowe him to bee our God & father, & that his loue might bee imprinted in our hearts, to y end we shoulde come vnto him freely, & with a pure & right meaning mind.

But yet this acknowledging of our selues to be guiltie, and this condemning of our selues for it, is not all y we haue to doe: but we must also seeke the remedie by praying vnto God to play y phisition in curing all our diseases. And forasmuch as he doth now send vs to our Lord Iesus Christ, vnto whom he hath giuen this charge & office; let vs commend our selues vnto him. It is sayd in the Prophet Esay, that Christ at his coming into the world should make the blind to see, the deafe to heare, the lame to go vpright, and that he shoulde ease the dead. All these things hath he done visibly, as is to be seene throughout all the historie of the Gospel. But S. Matthew telleth vs that y same tendeth to a higher purpose.

For in healing the bodily diseases, he sheweth himself to be the spiritual phisition of our soules, and saith that the same was done to the end that the saying which was spoken by the Prophet Esay shoulde be accomplished, namely, that he did beare our infirmities. Now it is certaine that the Prophet spake not there neither of the feuer, nor of the burning agewe, nor of any other disease that appertained to the body: he speaketh of the diseases of our soules. Seeing it is so, let vs then conclude that it is the peculiar office of Iesus Christ to giue sight to the blind, and to giue hearing to the deafe. And for so much as he hath the spirit of wisdom and discretion in all fulnesse, we must come directly to him to be instructed.

Wherefore let vs not doubt but that God is forward and ready to receiue vs. In consideration whereof let vs giue this honor to Iesus Christ, to acknowledge him to be the light of the worlde, and the phisition of all our spirituall diseases, & that he wil worke toward vs, according as his father hath charged him. And to the intent wee should not bee discouraged, Moses doth expressly vse this word; to day, or this day. In deede he dooth reprove the people, for sleeping so long a while. What, saith he! it is now fortie yeres ago since y<sup>e</sup> law was published & you deliuered out of y<sup>e</sup> land of Egypt: and in al these fortie yeres, hath God preuailed any thing with you? Ye haue had a tabernacle, wherein to doe sacrifice dayly; a nūber of miracles haue bin added thereto, yee haue bin fedde with Manna from heauen, you haue drunke of the water that issued out of the harde Rock: and yet for al that, you haue continued stil lyke bestes, yea and much worse: so as it may well seeme that yee haue made a diuclish conspiracie, to cast off all the instructions that God gaue you; and likewise all the chasticementes, and punishmentes which hee hath sent vpon you. Moses therefore dooth iustly blame the people for continuing so long in their beastly-nesse. But yet hee ceaseth not to encourage them to returne vnto God, (saying: Vnto this day. As if hee should say: your GOD calleth you againe vnto him. For albeit that you haue perseuered in your beastlynesse and ignorance; yet is he at this day ready to enlighten you, whensoever you come to seeke in him the remedy that hee hath shewed you. The thing then which wee must doe, is, that hauing confessed our faultes past, wee doubt not, but that our Lorde Iesus Christ will reach vs his hand, and bee ready to reforme vs. Let vs take heed therefore, that wee shut not the gate, lyke folke that will needes throw themselves wilfully into hell, but let vs commit our selues to our God. And seeing he setteth his worde before vs, let vs pray that it bee not lyke the seeede that falleth among the stones, and among the thornes: but that he will so manure vs by his holy spirite, as we may be edified and established in his feare and obedience, and that he will so worke for vs, as wee may haue occasion to prayse him in all our lyfe, and the very infidels may knowe that hee dwelleth among vs.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the Maicstie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes: beseeching him to vouchsafe so to touch vs with them, as we may vnderstand that there is nothing in vs but damnation: and that in the meane while wee may not seeke any starting-holes; but come offer our selues before him as our Iudge: and perceauing how wee be altogether accursed, and haue none other remedie, but that hee through his infinite goodnes doe recouer vs and bring vs home againe vnto him. And that it may please him to reclaime vs, hauing obteyned pardon of our trespasses, we may become newe creatures through the meanes of our Lorde Iesus Christ, seeing hee hath expressly sent him of purpose to replenishe vs with all manner of spirituall good things. Therefore let not vs hinder him to finish his worke in vs, nor shut the gate against his grace: but rather set it open with all lowlynesse and feare. That it may please him to bestowe this grace not onely vpon vs, but also vpon all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewfday the vij. of April, 1556.

5 And I lead you for the space of fourtie yeres through the wilder nesse, and your garments waxed not olde vpon you, neither did thy shoes weare vnder thy feete.

6 Also you haue not eaten any bread, nor drunke either wyne or beere: that you might know that I am the Lorde your God.

7 And so you came into this place: And Sehon the King of Hesebon, and Og the King of Basan came forth against vs to battell, and we vanquished them.

8 And wee haue taken their lande, and giuen it in possession to the Rubenites and Gadites, and to halfe the Tribe of Manasses.

Proceeding with the matter that was begunne yesterday, Moses dooth here declare vnto the people, that they were too dul-headed in that they considered not the goodnesse of God, which they had seene, and imoyed by the space of fortie yeres. If God should nourish a man but the space of a three or four dayes, without one morsell of bread; it would seeme to bee aboue the ordinary course of nature. But behold, here was an infinite multitude of people nourished with a kind of meate that had not bin common. God made it to raine downe Manna si<sup>d</sup> heauen, and the people were fedde with it; for they had alwayes so much as was needefull, and this miracle was so visible, that it could not bee called in doubt. Yet notwithstanding, the people continued still hard hearted, howbeit, not for want of knowing that they receaued that food from God, If the Iewes had bin asked that question, there there was none of them which would not haue answered therunto saying, Since the time that wee came into the wildernesse, God hath had pittie of vs, and susteyned vs; we shoulde haue dyed through miseries and hunger, had hee not caused Manna to raine downe from heauen. Also he caused water to issue out of the Rocke, that wee might haue whereof to drinke. Every one would in deede haue confessed this. But yet notwithstanding they ceased not to murmur against Moses and Aaron, neither ceased they to haue longinges after their owne lustes, saying that the Manna was nothing toothsome, and therefore they could not lyke of it. Then fell they to fornication, and sedition, and gaue ouer themselves to idolatrie and much filidnes.

Thus dooth it appeare that this people forgate G O D. The matter therefore consisteth not altogether in the hauing of some sleight knowledge; but it must be applyed to the right vse, that is to say, that G O D be honored among vs, that wee doe him homage for the benefices that hee bestoweth on vs, and thereby beginne to put our trust in him, and to haue recourse vnto him. Let vs marke then, that whereas Moses in this place reprooueth the Iewes, for not knowing the fauour which G O D had done vnto them when hee fedde them with Manna in the wildernesse: hee meaneth not that they had giuen forth in speech, that the Manna came not to them through the goodnesse of God: but that they still continued dullheaded, whatsoeuer they did confesse; for that they despised their God, and turned away from his worde, and shut their eyes, euen knowing the thinges as altogether apparant.

But as it was touched yesterday, albeit that Moses doe here speake to the Iewes; yet dooth it also concerne vs. So then wee be condemned here before God, if wee profit not our selues by all the benefices which wee receiue at his hand, as wee may thereby bee induced and prouoked to honor and serue him, and to resort for refuge to his goodnesse, in such wise as wee wander not in our vaine and fraile hopes, ne stay vpon this present worlde, ne presume any thing vpon the creatures. Now therefore let euery of vs looke into himselfe; howe doe wee make the giftes of G O D auailable, by yeelding ourselves pliable to serue him? Nay, it seemeth rather that when he hath made vs fat, wee take occasion thereby to kicke against him: as it is said hereafter in the song of Moses.

In the meane while it appeareth that wee vnderstand nothing that may auaille vs, to leade vs in the right way. For whence cometh so much concoufesselle wherewith men be caryed away, so that some are vsnatable in their greedinesse, some doe burne in their ambition to attaine to credit, some lyke brute beastes doe seeke to fil their bellie, and other some are caryed headlong to silitnesse and fornication? Thus are wee all lyke theycpe strayed from G O D. And whereof cometh this, but that wee neuer taste of his goodnesse, neither doe wee vnderstand it a whitte, whereas notwithstanding, all our wits should bee applyed thereto? When the worlde caryeth vs thus away, we make it manifest that wee haue smally profited by receiuing the benefices which God with his owne hand hath bestowed vpon vs. Forasmuch therefore as this people was at that time blamed by Moses for the vnthankfulnesse which you see here: let vs in these dayes cast down our eyes and confesse, that although God hath mightily wrought toward vs, yet doe we continue as dored, and all our senses bee as it were, dazed by Sarhan: Insomuch that our eyes are blinde, & our eares deafe, and wee haue no vnderstanding nor reason. If a man reply, alledging that God hath not done any such miracle amongst vs as hee did amongst the Iewes when hee nourished them with Manna from heauen, let vs mark wel that which is sayd by our Lorde Iesus Christ in the sixt chapter of Iohn: for the Iewes at that time did take occasion to despise the doctrine of the Gospel, for that our Lorde Iesus seemed not comparable to Moses, because hee also had not led the people through the wildernesse. But it is declared there, that hee hath brought vs a meate much more precious, and of more estimation than the Manna: and that it is no excuse for vs, to say hee made no Manna to fall downe from heauen. And why so? For the sonne of G O D is content not onely to feede our bodies, but bringeth vs also the spiritual food to nourish our soules: which is not such a kinde of meate as Moses did giue. For although the Prophet, (to magnifie the grace of God) doth say that it was the bread of Angels, wherewith the people of olde time were fedde: yet is it nothing comparable to this foode which wee haue at this day. For what esse is our life than the sonne of G O D whose will it is that wee should bee fedde with his owne substance? Seeing then that wee liue in our Lord Iesus Christ, and that hee is giuen vnto vs, so as at this day wee are become fellowes with Angels, and bee partakers of his bodie, and bee made his members: there is no excuse for vs if wee doe not acknowledge so excellent and inestimable a benefice, to bee altogether enflamed with the loue of our G O D, to bee brought to his feare, and to rest stedfastly in him. And therefore let vs marke well the comparison that is made here betwixt the meat wherewith the fathers were fedde in the wildernesse, and the foode that is giuen vs at this day by our Lorde Iesus Christ.

Having spoken thus of the Manna, Moses addeth: That the people did neither ease bread, nor drinke wine, or any other liquor that could make them drunken. That is to say, any mingled drinke, whereof much is made in the East countries, for there they haue excellent frutes, insomuch that they make drinke of Dares and of such lyke thinges: and all the compounded drinks which they make, they call by one common name, Sicera. Nowe Moses sayth that there was no such kinde of drinke vsed among the people: but that the water which issued out of the Rock flowed out euery where, and accompanied them by the way, in sorte that they were

Psal. 78. 25

compassed about with the maruaylous goodnes of God, by reason whereof they were driuen of necessitie to acknowledge that hee had stretched forth his hande, as if he should haue put the meate into their mouthes . That was the meaning of Moses . And this serued to make them to haue the better vnderstanding of the grosse brutishnes which was in them , in that they gaue not God his due glorie . In deede when the earth bringeth soorth corne for our foode, the same ought to suffice to make vs to perceiue that God sheweth himselfe a father to vs. But becaufe wee bee accustomed to it, our heartes are hardened by it , and wee see that men bee not prouoked to yeelde thanks vnto God , when things followe all after one common rate . For this cause ought this circumstance to bee well weyed, according to this saying of Moses which wee haue seene heeretofore, When thou art come into the lande: albeit that thou shalt there eate bread; yet when thou hast tilled the earth, and that it hath yeelded thee her increase; remember that thou wast nourished with Manna, and say not; It is mine owne skill or mine owne hande that hath gotten mee this foode. Looke thou beare still in mynde that thy God nourished thee after a strange manner for the space of fourtie yeares, to the ende it should remayne with thee for a perpetuall remembrance, and that thou shoulddest acknowledge it thus: The same God that fedde mee in the wildernes, is hee that hath giuen mee this lande, and which maketh it to yeelde fruite, that I may bee nourished thereby . Let vs marke well therefore howe it is not without cause, that Moses sayeth: Thou hast eaten no bread, nor drunke wine nor other drinke, and yet wast thou fedde . Nowe a man would thinke at the first sight, that it were impossible for a man to liue without ordinarie foode , becaufe wee would alwayes tye the grace and power of GOD to these naturall meanes , wherewith hee is serued . It seemeth to vs that God cannot worke , but according to our vnderstand-ing, and experience . But on the contrary side it is sayde here, that the people hauing not a morsell of bread to eate, did not sayle for all that to liue in wildernesse. And why? For God hath meanes incomprehensible whereby to sus-teyne his creatures, as hee shewed manifestly at that tyme. In so much that if neede required, God would rather turne the stones into bread, than forsake his people. Also he could as well feede them with milke as with bread.
 To bee shorr, let vs marke , that the power which proceedeth from the Spirite of GOD is the onely thing that mayntaineth and preserueth vs in our state: as it is sayde in the hundred and fourth Psalme . Is not bread a dead or insensible thing? Howe then could wee reueue life thereby, but that it is Gods pleasure? Thus doeth Moses here put the people in mynde of the miracle of the Manna, in such sort as hee had reported it afore . For if the people had incontinently founde Manna in the wildernesse, they would haue thought that the place had brought it forth: but they pyned a while, and murmured against God.

 Then came the Manna, a vertie vncouth and strange thing. Whereby the people were conuinced, that God had regard of their necessitie.
 And when the Manna was fallen, euery man gathered his quantitie, and they distributed it all among them, so as nothing remayned, neither wanted there a grayne of the wonted me-sure. Whereby it appeareth, that the feeding of seven hundred thousande persons with the Manna, yea and that in such certeine & fore-appointed measure as if a man should say, eu-ery man shall haue as much as hee needeth, came not of haphazarde. On the other side, there fell none vpon the Sabboth day, but on the day before fell double quantitie . Wee see therefore that God distributed his Manna, like as when a mans children come about their father for their foode, and hee giueth euery of them his pittance in due measure and proportion. Againe, if they keepe the Manna beyonde the Sabboth day, it rotted: so as they could not keepe it longer than was appointed by God, to receiue thereof any sustenance and nouishment. Wee see then that God vttered his power so many wayes, as the people ought not to haue doubted, but that they were fedde by miracle, and beyonde the common course of nature . That is the thing which Moses declareth heere, in saying, Thou diddest not eate any bread.

But let vs consider well the reason which hee addeth here, That shou mightest knowe that I am the Lord thy God. Here the people bee reprooved not onely of ouer shamefull leawdnesse and stubbotnesse, but also of vtter vnthankfulnes.
 If God vtter his heauenly power, so as it shewe it selfe apparant vnto vs; wee bee touched and moued with feare, to yeelde him reuerence: but yet by the way wee may alledge that hee maketh vs afrayde, and that wee bee astonished at his glory, which is the cause why wee are not able to yeeld him the honor that he deserueth: but when God ioyneth both in one, that is to say, when on the one side hee maketh vs to vnder-stand his infinite and inestimable power, and on the other side draweth vs vnto him gently & with fatherly goodnesse, thereby shewing and witnesing the loue that he beareth vnto vs: then is there no more excuse, wee bee duble condemned. For (as I sayde afore) the glorie of God, ought to make vs to stoope, and to yeelde our selues pliable vnto him; and his goodnes ought to allure vs vnto him. So that vnlesse we be too much blockish, we must needs be thoroughly moued to loue our God. Now then if there be neither loue nor feare in vs atter that God hath ministrd al meanes & occasions of them both vnto vs, is it not an vtter condemning of vs? That is the thing which Moses meant, saying, It is a wonder that you do not otherwise knowe your God; y is to say, That I am the Lord who haue shewed my selfe to bee your father & redeemer,

Deut. 8. 17.

Psal. 104. 30

in that I haue taken you into my keeping and protection, and haue not sayled you in any thing.

Nowe this that is heere spoken of Manna, wee must apply to all the benefites of Gods hande. What then is the thing which he intendeth in shewing himself thus bountifull towards vs? On the one side hee woulde that wee should acknowledge him to bee our onely God, and that hee had in himselfe the fulnesse of all good things, and that hee is our father, and that wee shoulde not gadde here and there as men commonly doe, who swauring aside and fleeing too and fro, doe dayly forget to themselves newe gods. They will easily confesse that there is one soueraigne G O D; but yet for all that, they cannot fynde in their heartes to rest wholly vpon him, they hang alwayes in dout and wauering, with what is this God? What maner of one is hee? Yee see here howe the intent of our God is to withdrawe vs from all outleaping imaginations, and to plant in vs a welgrounded and settled deterrmination, that wee might say, O Lorde, thou art hee which made both heauen and earth; thou hast all things in thy power, and vnder thy dominion; it is to thee that all honour is due; vnto thee belongeth all power. Thus much for that poynt.

Nowe must wee procede to the second; 30 which is, that wee so acknowledge him to bee our father that, wee assure our selues of his loue, and that hee hath care of our saluation. For if wee bee at no further poynt, than to acknowledge him to bee God; it doeth but leaue vs alwayes in feare: and in verie deepe the malice of God doeth of it selfe terrifie vs: inso-much that when as wee shoulde drawe neere vnto him, wee deuiſe to flee away, vntill the timethat hee doeth assure vs of his fatherly goodnesse. The chiefe poynt therefore is, 40 that hauing attributed all power and strength vnto him, wee vnderstande also that hee hath chosen and admitted vs for his people, and that hee will so holde vs in his custodie as wee may bee able to say, that our life is altogether blessed, for so much as hee hath seperated vs from the rest of the worlde, and giuen vs priuiledge to call vpon him, and to haue our recourse vnto him, and to trust assuredly that hee will neuer forget vs, but that hee will furnishe vs with 50 all things that bee requisite not onely for this earthly life, but also for our euerlasting saluation. That then is the true knowledge of God, and if wee procede not to that poynt, then are wee deafe, blynde, and senselesse. Let vs euermore conclude, that vntill wee haue learned to honour our God; to submitte our selues wholly vnto him; to doe homage to his maiestie; and to repose all our contentment and rest in his gracious goodnesse and fatherly loue; so as wee stay our selues altogether there-upon, assuring our selues that our saluation is sure in him: if wee bee not at that poynt, it is a token that wee knowe nothing, and that wee bee still miserable beastes. Wee may well say this and that; but to what ende? All is but confusion. That is the thing which wee haue to remember concerning this Text.

Nowe, that this doctrine might bee of the more authoritie, Moses speaketh in the name of G O D, howbeit that it is hee himselfe that speaketh; wherein there seemeth some contrarietie and loosenesse of matter. For hee sayeth, I haue lead you through the Wildernesse, wee haue discomfied Sehon king of Hesebon, and Og king of Baxan. Thus doeth Moses followe this sentence, as it were by a threed, and sayeth: I haue nourished you in the wildernesse; and yet it was G O D that did it. Meant he to vsurpe the honour that partayned to G O D alone when hee sayeth, Wee did discomfite those kings? Surely the matter is all one in that Moses speaketh in his owne person, and in the meane while bringeth in G O D speaking also: this doeth rather giue vs a profitable admonition, to wit, that although G O D speake to vs by the mouthes of mortall men, whome hee ordayneth for that purpose; yet must not wee therefore diminish the authoritie of his worde. Let vs therefore honour God, and yeeld obedience to his worde, when it is declared vnto vs by men, as if wee sawe him present among vs. That is the thing which Moses meant. In very deepe, hee did acknowledge himselfe to bee a frayle man, and hee exempted not himselfe from the rest of Adams children, hee was a member of the Church. But yet for all that, forasmuch as hee was ordeyned to bee a minister of G O D, and was to carry the worde in his name: hee meant to authorise the woorde, to the ende that it shoulde not bee lightly regarded, nor despised, vnder pretence that hee which speaketh is a creature. The thing then in effect, which wee haue to beare in mynde touching this place, is that when wee reade the things that were written by Moses, and by the Prophets, and Apostles, thereby wee vnderstande that G O D did rayſe vp men to bee as instrumentes and working tooles of his holy Spirit: and yet notwithstanding that hee will not haue our faith turned away from him vnder that pretence, but rather that wee shoulde take holde of his power and maiestie by his worde, and to yeelde due obedience thereunto. Thus shoulde wee practise this place.

Nowe after this. Moses addeth; That their garments and appaue were not worne with oldnesse, nor their shoes appaue for the space of fouretye yeres. This serueth to aggrauate the peoples vthankfulnesse, to the ende they shoulde acknowledge themselves the more guiltie, for not hauing acknowledged the goodnesse of G O D which had appeared so many wayes. Let vs then consider well, that the more G O D doeth multiply his benefites towards vs, and the greater diuersitie that there is of them, hee vsing it as a meane to instructe vs after many fashions: so much the greater and more more heynous is the offence, if wee profite not thereby.

True it is, that notwithstanding, although God giue vs a taste of his goodnesse and power, but in some one only thing, yet is that ynough to conde mne vs, if wee bee not edified thereby. But when G O D multiplyeth his goodnesse by vttering his power to our eyes, to our eares, to our handes, and to our feete, so as the faulte is onely in the hardnesse of our heartes, that wee bee not exercised in his benefites; it maketh our sinne so much the greater. Wherefore let vs beare well in mynde the meaning of Moses, that wee may the better doe our endeuour to consider howe many wayes God hath made vs beholding vnto him, and howe greate the diuersitie of his gracious doings is towards vs, as in dede the number of them is infinite. Let this (I say) the more inforce vs to sharpen our wittes, that wee bee not dulheded. Whil-left God sheweth himselfe to bee neere vs, let vs not goe farre from him, vnder colour that wee bee turned away alreadie: but let vs gather our wittes to vs, and consider wel howe he worketh towards vs. And notwithstanding that our garments at this daye be not preserved after that miraculous manner; yet let vs not omit to confesse alwayes that wee be clothed through the free fauour of G O D, and that if hee did not furnish vs with woll and all other things that serue to couer vs withall, there would be such a want, as wee should dye of penurie and wretchednesse, and there would be no meane to leaue it. Let vs acknowledge this (I say) and let vs profit our selues better thereby, than wee are wont to do.

Nowe Moses addeth more ouer, that when the people came into the lande which was promised them, then Og king of Basan, and Sehon king of Hesebon came forth and gaue them battell, and were discomfited by the people. Moses doeth heere againe lay soorth the goodnesse of God, such as hee had shewed it to that people. Yet therewithall hee repproueth them still for their leardnesse, and vnthankfulnesse. This meeting of them came to passe contrary to the expectation of the people: for they did not looke that Og and Sehon should haue slued themselues enemies: but rather that they would haue suffered the people to passe. These then were newe enemies that prepared themselues on the sou-deme; wheret the people became abashed. And in very dede they had deserued to be quite destroyed: for there was too shameful distrust to be seene in them. When worde was brought them that it behooued them to goe to battell; beholde they were discomfited before they came at their enemies; & they considered not the power of this promise, namely, I will fight for you, you shall stande still, and winne the victorie by my power. Although that God had offered to be their captayne and guyde in the warre, and had giuen them so good prooffe aforehande, as they ought not to haue doubted at all: yet were they in such perplexitie, that all was forlorne and past hope of recouerie with them.

Nowe we knowe that if men winne one battell, their heartes bee commonly puffed vp, and they take better courage to goe forward: and that contrariwise, if they bee repuffed, then their heartes quayle. To the ende therefore that the Lewes should not bee at that poynt, it behooued God to prouide a remedie for it, and in dede so did hee of his inestimable goodnesse. Inso much that Moses nowe vpbroyding them with it, sayeth, That ouer and besides that God had sedde them fourtie yeares in the wildernesse, without bread or wine; hee had also fought against their enemies; and it was the handy worcke of God, that they had vanquished the two kinges, which came soorth against them, and had conquered their countreyes, and settled there the two trybes of Ruben and Gad and the halfe Trybe of Manasses. By meanes whereof one quarter of their people or thereabouts were prouyded of a sufficient portion to dwell vpon. Sith it is so, ought they not to haue bene wakened, though they had bene asleepe afore? Ought not this victorie to haue giuen them both courage and skill howe to honour their God, who had so shewed him selfe towards them, and to haue caused them to put their trust in him, seeing his grace had bene so visible? But seeing they continue still in their stubbornnesse, doeth it not appeare that they bee vtterly past hope of recouerie? Therefore as nowe we see the meaning of Moses. And heereupon let vs learne, that wee must acknowledge the goodnesse of God, not onely in that hee doeth preferre and nourish vs; but also in that hee doeth fet himselfe against our enemies, and suffereth vs not to be made a pray. When wee be in this wise defended by God, and that hee is our buckler and our fortresse; wee ought to magnifie his mightie power in that behalfe, and to acknowledge him to be our God and father, and to yeelde him the prayse that is due vnto him.

True it is that wee haue no such victories as Moses speaketh of: howbeit, if we did wel consider the hatred that a great many beare toward vs, and how eager they be to deuoure vs and swallowe vs vp: wee could not but confesse that they be brydled by some secrete working of G O D, seeing wee be preserved all this while, euen without the power of man, and without any vanquishing of them with our owne handes. This is a marueylous goodnesse; which it would behooue vs to perceiue, and which wee doe very slenderly acknowledge. Nowe there are also ghostly enemies, against whome wee be defended. For what should become of vs, if G O D should not fight against Sathan, and against all the powers of hell? There needeth no greate fighting against vs; (as wee see too much by experience) any one temptation bee it neuer so light, maketh vs by and by to slip away.

And what woulde then become of vs when wee be assailed on all sides, and when the diuell inforceth him selfe to the vttermost to entrappe vs? If G O D did not helpe vs then, what woulde become of vs? Now then, let vs haue our wittes better wakened than wee haue had them heretofore, that wee may perfectly perceiue howe many wayes G O D sheweth him selfe to bee our protectour, and that it bee not cast in our teethe, that wee bee deafe and blynde, and vtterly bereft of discretion and reason.

Nowe in the ende Moses addeth; Therefore keepe the wordes of this couenant, to doe them, that thou maist prosper: and that in all things which thou doest, all may goe well with thee. Here wee perceiue, first that which was more largely spoken of yesterday: to wit, that whereas Moses had declared vnto the people, that God had not giuen them eyes, nor eares, nor reason: his dooing was not to make them carelesse, or to rocke them asleepe, or to diminish the faulte whereof they were guiltie, but rather to driue them to seeke remedie where it was to be found.

After that manner therefore must wee expound the doctrine that is contained in the holy scripture touching the fauour which God sheweth vs, in that hee vouchsafeth to enlighten vs, & to reforme our heartes to the obeying of him, that hee may drawe vs vnto him. True it is that many scorners will profite but litle by this doctrine, and that they will rather take occasion by it to blaspheme God, and to say: Very well, if I cannot doe aught that is auaylable, let God blame himselfe. For seeing that hee hath not giuen mee the grace to doe better, what shall I doe? If I inforce my selfe to no purpose: to whome shoulde the fault bee imputed? There bee very many dogges, that doe thus barke against God. There bee others that fall fast a sleepe in their rechelessefnesse, saying: Seeing it is so, I will keepe on my course still. If God list to amende mee, let him doe it: I can doe nothing, it is but labour lost for mee to goe about it. Thus doe the wicked falsely abuse the doctrine of God.

Moreouer there bee some that haue their eares so tickelish, that they cannot abide that wee shoulde sincerely and plainly preache that thing which is manifestly declared in the Scriptures; to wit, that it is the peculiar office of God, to enlighten vs, to giue vs eyes and reason, and to drawe vs vnto him: and that otherwise wee bee so vtwardward, that wee cannot applye our eares, or eyes to any thing else than to euill, but are holden in the bondage of Sathan, so as wee bee not able to stirre one finger, nor to haue one good thought, vnlesse it bee giuen vs from aboue. When wee speake thus, there bee some that are ouer dayntie, which woulde sayne that this doctrine were butyed. And wherefore is it, that they profite so litle thereby, and that they doe thus kicke against the Spirit of God? Is it not wisefolde ynough for vs to declare that which wee must vnderstande by the holy Scripture? We heare what speach God vseth; namely, that in man there is no goodnesse, nor vnderstanding of the trueth; that hee is so corrupted through sinne, that all the light which wee suppose our selues to haue is but meere ignorance: that our lustes bee rebellious against God, that wee bee so dull, as wee vnderstande not what is profitable for our saluation; but doe drawe cleane backwarde. Let vs speake simply on that manner, seeing that God doeth so teach vs. But yet let vs vnderstande, to what ende this doctrine must bee referred. It is not to the ende that men shoulde passe their boundes, or not consider what they are; & that they shoulde be past shame & mocke God, as though they were not guiltie of euill: but rather that knowing themselves to bee men, (that is to say wretched creatures, vnprofitable to any good, and that this serueth not to make them carelesse so as euerie man might say, I can doe nothing, let God worke if he wil) they should flee to him for refuge, knowing that it is his proper office, to remedie our sinnes, and defaultes. And therefore Saint Paule sayeth, Let vs followe our saluation, euen with feare and carefulnesse. And why? Because God giueth the will, and the power to performe according to his owne free goodnesse. Loe howe Saint Paule sayeth, that it belongeth to G O D to reforme our heartes, that wee may will well: for of ourselues we are not able to attaine thereunto, but are altogether giuen to euill, vnill G O D doe prepare vs. Haue wee once a good will? That is not all, for G O D must also giue vs the power to doe it. His doing thereof then is, not for that he is bound thereunto, nor for that we on our part be readie thereto, or haue any disposition or desert in vs: but of his owne free goodnesse. Thereupon Saint Paule sayeth, O is it meete that euerie man should take his ease, and bee carelesse? Nay, clean contrariwise he exhortheth vs to performe our saluation with feare and carefulnesse. And seeing that wee can doe nothing, but it belongeth to God to giue vs the good that we want: lette the same teache vs to stoope, and to call vpon our G O D, and to seeke all our welfare in him. For otherwise, in what case were wee? Wee shoulde bee quickly satisfied of Sathan. That then is the thing which Moses meaneth in that hee addeth for a conclusion, Keepe this commauement. And whence then proceedeth this conclusion? Euen of this, that God had not yet giuen the eyes and eares, and that hee had not giuen them an heart to vnderstande. Moses maketh an argument thereupon, and telleth the people that they must thinke themselves to returne vnto God, and to giue ouer them selues vnto him; and then shoulde they bee wel assured that God woulde so worke, that as many as sought him in lowlinesse, should bee governed by his holy Spirit.

Moreouer, let vs mark wel, y where it is sayd, Thou shalt keepe the wordes of this couenant for to doe she: Gods so saying vnto vs is not to y intent we should

shoulde but only be talkers of the things, which wee haue learned in his schoole, but also that wee shoulde endeavour to practise the doctrine which wee haue heard. Therefore, let not our resorting to heare the worde bee to learne onely to take thereof: but let vs also vnderstande, that it must reforme our life, so as wee may shewe by our deedes that wee haue not lost our time, and that the labour also which is taken for to teache vs, hath not bene bestowed in waste. After that manner ought wee, to keepe the wordes of this couenant. And hee sayeth moreouer, All the wordes, to the intent wee shoulde put the more indouour thereunto. For wee take some worde at a glance, and thinke that to bee sufficient. But God will haue vs to giue so attentiu eare, as nothing may escape vs; and in verie deede there is nothing superfluous in his doctrine. Is it meete then that when God doeth teach vs, wee shoulde haue our eates otherwise occupied, or wandering hither and thither? The thing which we haue to remember (as hath bene declared more at large already) is not that God wolde haue vs to learne but some little peece, and to bee able to talke of it, and so to let it slippe away againe: but that wee shoulde in all poyntes and in all respects be wel aduised to yeeld him obedience. True it is, that this shall neuer bee doone perfectly, so long as wee be in this worlde. Hee doeth no more but shewe vs the ende whereunto it behooueth vs to tende. Let vs enforce our selues thereunto as much as is possible for vs; and if God doe supply our infirmitie, wee bee so much the more bounde vnto him, for that hee beareth with vs. But yet howsoever the case stande, let vs not flatter our selues, nor fall asleepe, vnder colour that wee be weake yea and vtterly vnprofitable; but rather let that prouoke vs to goe farther, specially seeing wee knowe, that GOD hath not set downe one peece of his lawe for one man, and another for another, but will haue vs all to bee all of one faith.

As touching this worde where it is sayde, That thou maist prosper, or else that thou maist goe aright in all that thou doest. For this phrasis of speeche signifieth two things, as is to bee sene through all other textes of the Scripture. For sometime it signifieth to walke wisely, or to behaue a mannes selfe discretely; and some times it signifieth to prosper: and both these may bee verie well agreeing to that which Moses treateth of in this place. For it was first of all declared heere aboue, that when men will needes bee wise in their owne conceits, and forge vnto themselves any newe rules to lue by, then they bee blynde wretches, and doe nothing but wander from the right way. In deede there is a shewe of reason when men giue themselves ouer to their owne brayne, and saye, I fynde it good. They may well please themselves, and also pretende some prooue of the peltung traile which they haue inuented; according as Saint Paul sayeth, that the traditions of men haue in them a kinde of wisdom, yea, and a kynde of gloriousnesse, which is counted wisdom in the opinion of the worlde; and yet euery whit of it is but meere deceyt. For whatsoever is counted high and excellent in the sight of men, is abhominacion in heauen, as it is layde in Luke: and so also hath Iesus Christ the soueraigne Iudge pronounced sentence thereof. Seeing then that the case standeth so: let vs consider that wee cannot walke wisely, nor our life bee well ordered, vnlesse it bee wholly and thoroughly conformable to the will of our God, so as wee gad not in and out at all aduenture, nor imagine that wee may doe what wee list, but onely giue eare to that which God sayeth, and holde vs to the same, without separating either to the right hande or to the left. This I saye is our wisdom and our reason: namely, that wee yeeld our selues teachable vnto God, and attempt not any thing of our owne motion and rashnesse: but holde our selues contented to obey Gods ordinance. And thereof also commeth all manner of prosperitie. For although men beare themselves in hande, that they gayne much by following their owne imaginations and deuises; and that God also doe often times permit them to haue advancement and furtherance for a time, of purpose to blinde them; yet doeth it fall out, that our end is euermore accursed, when wee followe our owne deuices, and giue the raynes of libertie to our lites.

God (as I haue sayde afore) doeth in deede suffer the backelyders to haue successe in their doings; but surely they see not howe it is the iust vengeance of God, and that Sathan doeth carye them away, because they flatter themselves, whereuppon when they haue all things at will, they despise GOD and become vnreformable. I confesse it commeth so to passe: but woe to them which for a time haue any such prosperitie: for their laughter must needes be turned to weeping and gnashing of teeth, as it is in like wise accursed before GOD. Will wee then haue a true and a continuall happinesse, and that God blesse all our labours, and all that wee goe about? Let vs then continue in that which is spoken in this place, namely to submit our selues wholly vnto God, and to attempt nothing but that which hee giueth vs leaue to doe. For when the worlde decemeth vs most miserable, and our case seemes to goe altogether backwarde, and that GOD tryeth our patience many wayes, so as wee bee at the poynt to creepe out of the way into holes: then doth God make it manifest that there is none other happinesse but to sticke vnto him, and to yeelde obedience vnto his worde. This is the thing that Moses meant, according to that which wee saue heere before, namely, that our Lorde promised his blessing vnder the yoke that hee had layde vpon their necke.

Let vs therefore marke it well, that Sathan must needes scatter vs, as often as wee thinke to bee of abilitye of our selues. For when wee shake off our God, and prouoke his wrath; then must hee make it apparant vnto vs, that all happinesse lyeth onely in him; and then when wee begone away from him, there remayneth nothing but a manner of miserie; and although hee shewe it vs not at the first dash, yet shall it appeare in the end. Let vs therefore giue place to our faith, that wee may alwayes sticke fast to that which is declared heere.

Now let vs fall downe before the maicstie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our sinnes, beseeching him to vouchsafe to touch vs more and more to the quicke; that being beaten downe with true repentance, wee may who-ly reaire vnto him, seeking to bee gouerned by his holy spirit; and that hee so reforme vs as we may no more liue after our wicked affectiōs, but that all manner gainstrying may bee quite displaced in vs: and that therewithall he make vs to feele the power of his grace, so as wee may stay vs altogether vpon the same, and not cease to call vpon him, as vpon our father & sauour, in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, albeit that wee bee vnworthie, because there are so many things in vs, to make vs as strangers vnto him. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The CLXVI. Sermon which is the third vpon the nine and twentieth Chapter.

9 You shall therefore keepe the words of this couenant & do them, that thou mayst prosper in all that thou hast to doe.

10 You be all standing at this day before the face of the Lord your God, your heades of your Trybes, your Elders, your captaines, and all the men of Israell:

11 Also your children, your wiues, and thy stranger which is in thy campe, euē from the clyuer of thy wood, to the drawer of thy water.

12 That thou mightest enter into the couenant of the Lorde thy God, & into his othe, the which the Lord thy God couenanteth with thee this day.

13 That hee may establiish thee this day to bee his people, and he to bee thy God, according as hee hath spoken vnto thee, and as he hath sworne to thy fathers Abraham, Isaac & Iacob.

14 I make not this couenant and this othe with you onely:

15 But also with him that is heere present with vs this day before the Lorde our God: and in likewise with him that is not heere with vs this day.

16 For you know that wee dwelled in the lande of Egypt, and that wee haue passed through the middest of the people that wee haue gone by.

17 And you haue seene their abominations & their images of wood & stone, of Siluer & gold, which were amongst them.

18 That there shoulde not bee among you either man or woman, housholde or Trybe that would this day turne away his heart from the Lorde our God, to serue the gods of those people: and that there bee not among you any roote to bring forth gall and wormewood.

WE haue declared heeretofore that Moses in this place did not handle a cōmon doctrine: but that hee recited the solemne couenant y<sup>e</sup> was made the second time when the people were in the lande of Moab. And that was, because that all they which were at mount Horeb, were dead in the wilderness. God therefore intending that the memorie of that solemne couenant which he had made, should not be forgotten, cōmanded y<sup>e</sup> the people should be bound again, & that the same should be made thoroughly knowne, so as their posteritie might vnderstand that they were a holy people, as wee see that Iosua did at his death. And then was the third ratification. For this cause it is sayde; That they be there in the presence of God. True it is, that as oft as the people came into the sanctuarie to offer sacrifice, God shewed them a token of his maicstie, iestie, whereby they were assured that they sought him not in vaine, forasmuch as his power was neere at hande vnto them. But Moses taketh this word in another sense, because there had bin at that time as it were a solemne couenant, and a more familiar & certain setting forth of Gods glorie. In effect he signifieth, that it behoueth them to bring a certain vprightnes and foundnes of hart in entering into covenant with God to serue & honor him. It is no iesting matter (saith he,) you haue not to deale with a mortall man: thinke not y this thing vanisheth into y airc. For it is not some notary y is to take your promise, neither is it some worldly solemnitie or ceremony wherewith you nowe deale: but it is God himselfe which receiuethe the bond which you enter into, & for his part he is faithfull, he will not disappoint them whom he reckoneth for his people. Therefore he wel aduised y you bring not with you any disloyalty or hypocrisie: but rather see that ye tremble before him which is heere present to receiue the protestation y you make vnto him. Nowe we see what Moses meaneth.

 It remaineth y we apply this sentence to our owne vse. It is true that God doth not euery day passe such couenant as that was. But yet so often as we be assembled in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, he is in the midst of vs, as he hath sayde: and when the gospell is pre-ched vnto vs, it is asmuch as if he spake to vs in his own person: and it is our duetie to be answerable againe that we seeke nothing but to be his, and to giue ouer ourselues vnto him. Therefore if there be any counterfaying, let vs not thinke to hide it; it must needs come to reckening. For whosoeuer cometh not to him with right foundnesse, doeth plainly mocke the sonne of God.
 Wherefore lette vs consider well that wee must not be double minded when wee come to a sermon, least Iesus Christ blanie vs for falsifying our faith and promise, by our wicked a busing of his worde and by turning of a thing of such ho-lineffe and maiestie to a iest and scoffe. For when he calleth vs to be members of his bodie, and would haue vs to doe him homage, it is an excellent benefite, and such a one as can not be sufficiently esteemed. And therefore so much the more diligent ought we to be to subdue ourselues vnto him. To be short, as often as wee goe to the Church, if we steppe but one step thi-therwarde, whensoever the bell calleth vs: it ought to come to our remembrance, that our Lorde Iesus Christ commeth thither himselfe to receiue the obedience which we yeelde vnto him, and that wee come hither to make our musters before him, thereby to shewe that wee be his people, yea and his verie body. Nowe as it importeth an infinite reioycing, when our Lorde Iesus is neere vnto vs: so ought wee also to tremble before his royall maiestie, which was giuen him of God his father, and to resorte thither with a true and tight meaning heart, as I haue tolde you afore. And Moses speaketh ex-pressely both of men women, litle children, gouer-nours, the Elders of the people, all the chiefe of the people, and the handie crafts men, euen from them that clymed the wood to them that carryed water. Also among them he comprehended the straungers, which were vncircumcised and dwelled a-mongest the people: and hee sayeth that purposely to the intent that the great ones shoulde not thinke themselves exempted from the common sort. For the greatest honour that kinges and princes haue, is to bee of the bodie of the Church, if they consider it well. But certainely the Pompes of the worlde doe so blinde them that they woulde bee diuided from the rest of men, and woulde haue a worlde by themselves; so as they will not in any wise bowe to submitte themselves vnto God. Neuertheless it is ex-pressely shewed heere, that euerie high thing must stoope: and that when God vtereth himselfe, then euen the highest ought to vnderstande that they must shewe the way to others, and goe afore to prouoke them by their example. Thus much concerning that which Moses speaketh of Princes and Gouernours. And in likewise when Ioel exhortheth the people to bewaile and lament their sinnes, and to conde-mne themselves, hee beginneth with them.

 Albeit that at the first sight it may seeme to be an vnseemely thing, and to import a certaine shame that the great ones shoulde come to acknowledge themselves offenders before G O D: yet because that oftentimes they bee most faultie, the prophete sayeth; that they must beginne the daunce, and that the litle ones must followe their trace, when they see that there is none exempted, no nor euen of them that bee in any authoritie. Let vs therefore vnderstande, that Moses in this place obserued great order, in saying that the heades, and Rulers, and the greatest of the people, were there to binde themselves vnto G O D, that there myght bee no greatenesse in this worlde which shoulde not stoope vnto his maie-stie.

And hee addeth, the women and children, that the people might knowe, howe there was no person which shoulde not be comprehended in that couenant. And forasmuch as G O D did this fauour to their litle children to receiue them into the number of his people, it was meet that they should be taught the Lawe of G O D as soone as they came to the age of vnderstanding, to the intent they might knowe that they were that blessed offspring which G O D hadde adopted and chosen out of all the world.
 And heereupon Moses exhortheth the menne to haue care of their families, and to consider that seeing all were dedicated vnto G O D, all ought to be referred to that ende, and it behooued men to yeelde him his due, and not to disappoint him of his right. To be shorte, husbandes were taught by this worde to take paynes to guye their wiues and children in such order, as G O D might bee honoured in all the house, and that there might be one common agreement in the same. Yea, and hee sayth that the verie straungers which were vn-circumcised were to resort thither, notwithstanding that they hadde not the marke of sal-uation,

uation. And wherefore? Because God was to be honored in the Lande of Chanaan which he gaue to his people for an heritage. Albeit then, that (to speake properly) these strangers were not of the bodie of the Church, yet behoued it them also to be bounde. To what end? Because it was not meete that they should haue leaue or libertie to mocke G O D, to vnhallo his Religion, and to peruert the order which he had appointed. That in effect was the meaning of Moses.

Nowe must wee apply the same to our owne vse. For we be neuer assembled or come together in the name of G O D, but we make protestation that wee be of his flocke. It is not enough that euery man come thither for himselfe: but the great ones must vnderstande that they are to shewe the way to their inferiours, and vnderlings. And they must consider that they be bounde with a straiter bonde because G O D hath fet them on high to the intent they should be as Lamps to giue light vnto others. And therefore if they doe not endeavour and enforce themselves to discharge their duties in that behalfe, it is certaine that they be double guiltie. Againe, euery man ought to bethinke him of his houtholde and family. They that will haue their wiues quiet and obedient vnto them, ought much rather to be diligent to cause them to serue G O D, and to take such paynes fo to tute their children, as God may be the chiefe father, husbände, and master of the house. That is the thing whereof we be admonished heere. And if we doe not so, then looke how often we come into the Church, so manie witnessings haue we to reprove and condemne vs before God, because wee doe not appeare in his presence with such humilitie as is requisite: but haue wickedly broken couenant with him.

And Moses speaketh expressly of strangers, to the intent we should vnderstande that when God hath giuen libertie to a Countrey, and established the certaine order of his seruice there, no abomination must bee committed in that place, by the inhabitants thereof. For if they say, my seruauit holdeth not this religion: I graunt it lieth not in vs to conuert him to God at the first day: yet notwithstanding, that it should bee lawefull for him to skorne G O D and his worde, and to vse superstitious wickednesse, and to bee disobedient to the common rule; that is too great and vnollerable a disorder. And therefore it is shewed vs heere in this Text, that if we couet to be serued of them that haue not yet the knowledge of G O D, we must keepe them in awe, and not suffer the name of God to be blasphemed amongst vs, what soeuer excuse be pretended. Thus much in effect haue we to beare in minde concerning these wordes of Moses.

Nowe he speaketh also of a Couenant and an othe, and sheweth that the same were mutually giuen and taken betwixt G O D and the Iewes. In dede this matter hath bene partly handled heerebefore. But yet wee must remember, that when God maketh vs to passe any solemne bande with him; that first of all he bindeth himselfe vnto vs. And it is a thing that ought to mollifie our heartes, though they were as harde as stones. What are wee that our Lorde should stoope so lowe, as to enter into Couenant with vs, promising to beee our father and Sauour, and to beee as it were a man that made a bargain of a gift? God in dede requirerth euery of vs to consecrate himselfe vnto him, and to forsake all manner of libertie, and to become his subiectes, and to continue quiet vnder his gouernance; but ere he require this, he maketh a gift of himselfe vnto vs. That is a matter which ought to rauish vs in such wise, as wee should make no difficultie fully to dedicate ourselues to our G O D, seeing that hee himselfe allureth vs therunto by his owne example, and doeth guye vs thither. And wee perceiue the same yet further as often as the worde of G O D is preached vnto vs: for that is the message of Reconciliation (as Sainte Paule sayeth) and God is come neere vnto vs, to be our leader. Iesus Christ sayeth that hee was sent vnto vs, to haue care of our saluation and to holde vs in his keeping and protection, and also to dwell in vs, that wee might liue in him. Seeing it is so, is it not a brutish blockishnesse, if we come not with pure and right meaning affection, to giue ouer our selues vnto our G O D, who hath giuen vs the blessing and priuiledge to become our heritage, shewing thereby that he would bee possessed of vs? So then lette vs vnderstande, that there is no excuse for vs, if when wee come to heere the doctrine of the gospell, we runne euery of vs astray after his owne lustes and affections, and behaue ourselues disorderly in our conuersation, whereas in verie dede we should consider, that when we come from a sermon, we bring such a marke as can not be blotted out; that is to wit, that before G O D and in the presence of his onely sonne, we haue professed to be a holy people vnto him, and to be separated from all manner of defilementes of this worlde: and that although it be not so tolde vs in expresse wordes, yet the order that G O D hath set in his church doeth of it selfe importe the same. Albeit therefore that those wordes be not vttered by mouth, yet doeth G O D holde vs fast tyed to that bonde: namely, that wee should be his heritage, and that he should enioy vs quietly, as them whom hee hath taken to himselfe to be of his houtholde. If it be demanded, howe it is possible that men should discharge themselves of such promise; it is easly answered: namely, that we promise not any thing to our G O D as presuming vpon our owne power, but receiue the grace which he offereth vnto vs, and thereupon haue boldenesse and libertie to promise that we will be his people. And why so? For when G O D calleth vs vnto him, it is not to the ende that we should bring vnto him that which we haue of nature, for that is altogether euill: but because he receiuerth vs with this condition, that hee will gouerne vs by his holy Spirit, rite, and holde vs fo in awe, as the rebelliousnes of our flesh shall be alayd by his grace, and wee so strengthened as we may be able to withstand all manner of temptations and encounters, and that he will to imprint his lawes in our heartes, according to his owne saying, as hee will cause vs to walke in his feare, by giuing vs the Spirit of holynesse, righteousnesse, and truth. Loe after what manner G O D calleth vs vnto him.

Moreover hee presently addeth a promise, that he will still beare with vs in our weakenesse, and in our sinnes, so wee trauell still towards him. Infomuch that although there be manie things amisse in vs, and wee come not to him with such a perfection as is requisite; yet will he handle vs with fatherly gentlenesse, in such wise as our sinnes shall not be imputed vnto vs. When we haue these two pointes, we may freely promise vnto G O D that we will be his people. And why? Because wee staye not vpon our owne freewill, neither presume we to haue such perfection, as we enter into account with him, to say, we be not beholding vnto him: but we presuppose that he is euer mercifull vnto vs, to forgie vs our sinnes, and that he will succour our infirmities and imperfections, holding vs fast by his holy Spirit. Thus did the people of olde time make their othe. And so, wee see it is no point of rashnesse for vs to vowe vnto G O D in promising to serue him, so we haue an eye to that which hee setteth downe vnto vs on his part.

Moreover we must remember, that G O D speaketh first and wee doe followe. If a man shoulde beginne and putte fourth himselfe to say, I promise my G O D to serue him in all purenesse of life, it were too great an aduancing of himselfe. And why? For (as I haue already sayde) there is nothing in vs but vtter corruption. And although G O D haue reformed vs, yet are we continually hindered from discharging vs of our duetic, so as wee doe not the tenth parte thereof, I meane euen them that haue profited best, which are most holy, and as it were little Angelles. Moreover when G O D hath once begunne, and hath sayde vnto vs: No, I knowe you can doe nothing, and that you be creatures destitute of all goodnesse, and that there is nothing in you but naughtinesse and rebellion; howbeit forasmuch as I accept you to be of my flocke, I promise to gouerne you with my Spirit. If we receiue that promise with assured faith, and accept the offer which G O D maketh vnto vs, wee may then say, Well Lorde we come hither, not presuming anie thing vpon our owne power, but beseeching thee to gouerne vs: our onely desire is that thou shouldest holde vs as captiues to make vs to forelake our owne lustes and affections, with all the frowardnesse and wickednesse of our owne nature. Nowe then we see that this othe is lawfull, and that there is no rashnesse nor presumption in men.

The seconde point also is in like wise worthy to be well marked; that is to witte, that wee ought alwayes to confesse, that if G O D listeth to examine vs with extremite, notwithstanding that he haue giuen vs his grace, and strengthened vs against Sathan and all the temptations of the worlde, yet should wee be alwayes in his daunger, yea euen to our condemnation, were it not that hee did beare with vs. So then in making this promise, wee doe euermore remember that G O D will not enter into account with vs, to iudge vs according to our desertes; but will vse his infinite goodnesse towards vs, and haue pitie on our infirmities. Thus much as concerning the othe. In the Popedome, when Monkes, Nunnes, and Pricsts make their vowes, they sweare to abstaine from marriage, wherein they make open warre against G O D, and desie him. And why? Because they take that vpon them which is not graunted them. They suppose that they shall be able to forebeare the remedie of marriage, and yet they can not tell whether G O D hath called them thereunto, or no: they haue not one worde of promise; God hath neuer required such thinges of them. Therefore is it a diuelithe arrogancie, and we see howe G O D hath punished it. But it is a farre other matter, when we make no promise vnto G O D, but of that which he commaundeth, and which hee alloweth by his worde. Againe, wee goe not about it with opinion to bring it to passe by our owne power and abilitie; but because hee hath rolde vs that hee will helpe our infirmities: so much as wee be euermore grounded vpon his free goodnesse, whereof we may assure ourselves in our Lorde Iesus Christ. Thus must we make our solemne othe before G O D: As in deede wee bee already bounde vnto him in Baptisme, vpon such condition as he maketh vs his promise, and wee for our parte must make good the same when wee come to the age of knowledg. Thus yee see howe our Lorde continueth firme and constant to gouerne vs as his people, and to holde vs in his keeping to the ende: and also that wee in like case shall beare our selues quietly towards him, so as hee may wholly enioy vs. That is the thing in effect which we haue to beare in mind concerning this text of Moses.

Nowe hee ioyneth therewithall, that the people must enter into this covenants, that they may be adopted as the people of G O D. This worde Enter betokeneth that all men be of one condition, and that infomuch as they be the children of Adam, they are all strangers from G O D, and confusedly mingled together: and that God drawing his Church to him, shoulde it out in such sorte, that it is as it were a newe worlde. True it is that we must dwell heere beneath amongst the vnbelecuers: but yet neuertheless if we be the children of God, after wee bee once ioyned vnto him; we must withdraw ourselves from such as hee forsaketh, and who also turn their backs vpon him. The thing the which Moses ment chiefly by this worde Enter, is that we must be well aduised that wee rest not vpon our first nature, if wee intende to be taken for Gods Gods children: but that wee must resort vnto him, nor on our feete and legges, but with the heart carried out of the impedimentes of this worlde, in such wise as wee faile not to dwell in the kingdome of heauen, as fellows with the Angels and with all the saintes, notwithstanding that we dwell in the midst of this world, Marke that for one point.

Nowe heere withall, Moses doeth giue the people to vnderstande, that this couenant must be receiued with seruent affection, seeing that GOD did it not, but for the welfare of them that were there assembled. He sayeth that the onely intent of GOD was, that Abrahams children should bee his people, and that hee would holde them for his Church. Is there anything more to bee desired than that? It is sayde in the three and thirtieth Psalme, Blessed is the people whose GOD is the euerslasting God. That is all our felicitie and all our ioye. The onely thing wherein we may glorie, is that God sheweth himselfe to be our protectour, and that hee receiue vs vnder the couering of his wings. Nowe if he offer himselfe thereunto, and doe freely allure vs vnto him, requiring nothing but that we should be his householde folke: ought we not to bee inflamed with so vehement desire, that we should forgette the worlde, and that nothing should hinder vs from comming vnto him? Yes truly. The thing then which wee haue to remember concerning this Texte, is that wee be dubble guiltye, when we will not bee prouoked to submitte ourselues to our GOD, seeing he seeketh neither profit nor aduantage to himselfe, nor wee are able to yeelde him any; but he would that we should be his people for our owne welfare, and he hath no respect but to his owne goodnesse and infinite mercie, by reason whereof, seeing vs to be cursed and forelorne, he accepteth vs to the inheritance of Saluation. Seeing then that our Lorde vseth such louing kindnesse towards vs, and powreth forth the treasures of his goodnesse vpon vs: bee not wee too heaude, if wee come not to him with all our heartes?

Moses addeth morcouer, that GOD doeth this, for none other respect, but because hee hadde so promised afore, And that he hadde erst sworne it to the holy Patriarkes Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob. Heere in effect, Moses meant to take away and to abolish all manner of imaginations, which the Iewes might conceiue of their owne desertes and worthinesse: for men are commonly giuen to beare themselves in hande that GOD is much beholding to them; and that they haue the forehande of him, and that they were already disposed, and that he findeth in their persons some thing to like of, or to loue them for. Forsomuch therefore as men are wonted to deceiue themselves after that manner, by supposing that GOD hath founde them better than others when hee chuse them: heere Moses cutteth off all temptations of Satan, and sheweth that GOD did not choofe the Iewes, for that they hadde more vertue and noblenesse or worthinesse in them, than all the rest of the worlde: but that his choosing of them was altogether grounded vpon his owne free goodnesse, because he hadde so promised. And the same is common vnto vs all. And therefore lette vs learne, that if GOD doc nowc aduayes come neerer vnto vs than to a greate manie of other nations; it is not because wee bee more worthie, or more able to receiue it than they be, which are destitute of his grace: but because it is his good pleasure so to do. Now therefore, let vs learne to put away all manner of pride and presumption. When wee see that the Gospell is preached vnto vs at this day, and that we haue some order in the Church: it is an inestimable benefite. But wherefore is it giuen vnto vs? It is not because wee haue obtained it by our owne trauaile, nor because wee haue pruced the grace of GOD through our seruiceablenesse; but for that it was his wil to shewe himselfe kinde hearted towards vs after this manner. Thus much haue we yet to beare in minde concerning this text.

Nowe finally Moses addeth. Remember yourselves (sayth he) for you haue seene the abominations of Egypt, and also the Idolatry that is among all the heathen through whom you haue gone: therefore be not deceived, neither lette there be either man or woman, householde or Tribe among you, that will turne away or slide backe, and forsake the euerslasting your GOD, to giue ouer himselfe vnto Idollis. Heere Moses, to confirme the people in the obedience of faith, and to holde them vnder the yoke of good doctrine, doeth vse an argument which at the first sight might seeme strange: for wee bee easily thrust out of the right way, when wee see the worlde corrupted and ouerthwart. Albeit that we haue some good motion, and be disposed to serue GOD: yet notwithstanding, as soone as any stumblingblocke comes in our way, by and by it maketh vs to turne heade, as we see examples thereof euery day: insomuch that the man which is well instructed, and brought to a good point, runneth after the mockers of GOD, as soone as hee seeth them. Another which hath tasted of the truth of the gospell, beholdeth some foolish toy, and some hypocrite seduceth him so as he is chaunged. Such lightnesse and vnstedfastnesse doe wee see in many folke: and yet doeth Moses take the same as a confirmation to make folke the better resoluod to serue GOD: as if he should say, My friendes, you haue the lawe which is certaine and infallible vnto you, for it is the truth of GOD which can not lye. Seeing that GOD hath reuiled himselfe vnto you, it is reason good that you should obserue your faith and loyaltie towards him. But if you say, Why so? Other people deale not after this manner; wee see many fashions through the worlde, euerie nation hath his God by himselfe; euerie man hath a religion after his owne fantasie. Well might you be astonished at these thinges (sayeth Moses) and well might you be offended at it, if it were newe vnto you. But you haue seene the abominations of the Egyptians, you haue seene howe foolishly the heathen doe worshippinge their Idolles; and therefore if you be nowe moued and offended through the same, what excuse is there? For Goddes meaning was to arme you and to furnish you afore hande against these temptations, to the end you should not be in daunger to slide backe. We haue a good and a profitable lesson to gather out of this text, to witte, that the more we knowe superstition and Idolatrie, so much the more must wee eschewe the same. And euen so it is of all other things that are repugnauit to the will of G O D, namely, that we may be seduced by them by the sodaine beholding of them, for want of knowing them aforehande: for wee haue not the discretion to keepe ourselues from them; but are surprisid for want of foresight, by reason whereof wee perish, and Satan doth forthwith trap vs in his ginnes and snares. Let vs therefore marke, that when we once knowe the corruptions that be contrarieto the seruice of GOD, and to the doctrine that is contained in his woordes, wee must take so much the surer holde, that wee be not any whitte moued, but goe on forewarde stedfastly, following the way whereunto GOD hath called vs. As for example; if wee haue once knowen the wretchednesse that is among the Papistes, wherein wee ourselues also haue bene plunged in time past, or if we haue seene the mockeries of GOD, which are there vsed, and the blasphemies, and all the rest of the trash which the Papistes call the seruice of G O D: we can not but perceiue that they be the vetic inuentions of the deull, to turne vs away from the obedience of our G O D, to darken his maicstie, to cause him to be mocked, and to blind the wretched worlde. Wee haue bene sufficiently warned thereof, yea and we haue hadde the experience thereof. Nowe if any of vs doe hence forth turne away, and yelde himselfe againe to such abominations, is he not somuch the more vnfaithfull towardes G O D? See you not howe his wickednesse is so much the greater, seeing hee doth it not through ignorance, nor as a thing that is straunge vnto him, but as one that is altogether saped in it? Let vs therefore vnderstande that when G O D hath once made vs to perceiue the filthynesse and abominations which are among the Idolaters, the same ought to settle vs the better, to obey him and to perseuere in his holy calling. And I haue tolde you howe it is after the same manner in other vices. When G O D sheweth vs any shamefulnesse, as to bee giuen ouer to whooredome, or giueth vs examples of such as are disolutely giuen to swearing, drunkennesse, or such like things, and that these things be so vilanous that they make vs ashamed: if we be ouercome of them, is not our damnation doubled? Yes surely. It is not therefore without cause, that Moises sayeth heere, You haue seene. For thereby hee sheweth that wee may despise all that the worlde can doe; and that although the misbelcuers bee more in number than wee, and doe vaunt themselues to haue all the sway, as concerning the worlde, so as wee be but a litle handefull of people, and they triumph ouer vs; yet wee may desie them, because wee doe knowe what difference there is betwixt the pure doctrine of the Gospell, and all the abominations and Idolatries that Sathan hath brought into the worlde: insomuch that hauing the truth of G O D once manifested vnto vs, we ought to stay vpon the same, we ought neuer to be shaken for anie thing that can happen vnto vs. Loe to what purpose this admonition ought to serue vs at this day. Nowe therefore when we looke vpon al the whole worlde; beholding the horrible diuisions that be in the Popedome on the one side, and howe Mahomet the deceiuer hath seduced all his sect, and thirdely howe blinde the wretched Iewes are: thereby we ought to be the better assured, that seeing our G O D hath called vs vnto him: and familiarly vttered his sauiour towardes vs (according as our Lords Iesus Christ doeth protest that he will call vs his friends and not his seruantes, because the secretes of the kingdom of heauen are reuealed vnto vs by the Gospell): we ought thereby to learne to apply the same to the certaintie of our sayth, and not to regarde though the faithlesse doe sooth themselues in boast of their abominations, because we knowe well that G O D condemneth them altogether, and that wee ourselues maybe iudges the rest, forasmuch as we haue the worde, whereby the worlde must be iudged.

In doing heereof, Moises keepeth heere a certaine manner of proceeding which is worthy to be noted, saying, That neither man, nor woman, house nor tribe, ought to turne away or goe to serue strange Goddesses. Nowe hee docthr vs to witte, that when mischief is begunne, and a breache made, the deull will finde meanes, to spreade his poyson farther, if it be not preuened and remedied in dewe time and place. When some one man steppeth vppe to peruert the pure religion, it seemeth at the first to be a matter of nothing: but if it be let slippe, that one man will leade a whole house, and that house will leade the Tribe, and so at the length the whole people is peruerted. So much the more vigilaunt therefore shoulde wee bee, specially seeing that the Spirite of G O D doeth stirre vs vppe wee ought to bee moued to keepe good watch in this behalfe, for we cannot be too diligent therein. Nowe then let vs not foreflowe the redresse of any manner of corruption bee it neuer so small. When wee see a wicked man that goeth about to infect the focke, let him not be suffered: for if we suffer him, the corruption will forthwith spreade it selfe both into smal and greate. After one man followeth a whole house, and after a house goeth a whole kintred, and woulde G O D there were not so notable examples thereof. But what? Albeit that G O D doe shewe vs this by his worde, and although experience ought to make vs wise; yet is it not regarded. For men doe euetmore beare with some euill or other, and suffer it to slippe. And why? It is not yet common (say they,) it is not yet hurtfull. No but they foresee not the daunger. Neuertheless there is a daunger, which I pray GOD wee feele not in the ende too much to our cost. So much the more therefore ought we to marke well this doctrine, where Moses sayeth not at the first dashe, Looke that all the people swarue not, or that one Tribe giue not ouer it selfe to the superstitions and Idolary of the heathen: but he beginneth at one man alone, and then setteth downe the woman, and after proceedeth to the whole house, and consequently to all the people. For if there be but one serpent, he poysoneth all things out of hande with his onely byting. And if Serpents can also infect the ayre with their verie breath: surely when men are poysoned by Sathan, they carrie abroad so much the more venomous corruption: infomuch that if anie bodie come nygh them be it neuer so litle, it is a wonder if they be not infected and marred with the very breath of them. Seeing then that wee haue made a couenaunt with our GOD according as hee hath gathered vs into his flocke, and doth dayly make it manifest to our eyes y we be his church; let vs continue in that obedience, and let euerie of vs first of all watch ouer himselfe, according as is seene heereafore, where it is sayde, Take heed to your soules: let vs take good heed, for every man is commanded of God to watch ouer his owne soule. But yet thereupon wee must yet goe further, namely, to haue care of our neighbours, that euerie man helpe to amende them that haue doone amisse, without any bolstering or bearing with the cuill committed. Otherwise it is a wonder to see howe that after one man hath once infected his wife or familie, the corruption will spread it selfe ouer a whole people, in such wise as the mischief can not bee holpen any more because it hath gotten so farre.

And Moses doeth purposely vse a similitude, which is worthy to bee well weyed, where hee sayeth; that there be not founde among you any roose that bringeth fourth wormwoode and gall. Whereby he warneth vs, that as often as Sathan sendeth fourth his vnderlings to turne vs away from GOD, and wicked people goe about to bring Religion into contempt, and to bring to passe that all things may be so turned vpside downe and mingled together, as there may be nothing any where but vngodlynesse: it is all one as if there were some secreete roore, which afterwarde will sprout fourth, and wee must needes be poysoned with the fruite which it shall yeelde. Nowe therefore let vs in good time plucke it vppe. We see whereto this similitude tendeth. Let vs adde thereto the exhortation which the Apostle maketh in the Epistle to the Hebrews; for he hath respect to this text and expoundeth it, and applyeth it to our instruction. Forasmuch (sayeth he) as the despisers of GOD, which goe about to seduce the people, and to turne them out of the right way, be bitter rootes, we must not looke y they shall yeelde fourth good fruite. For we can not easily plucke vppe an euillweede, when it is overspred so as it hath choaked and corrupted the good seede, because it was not taken in time. Lette vs therefore bee diligent and carefull to plucke vp cuill rootes: and when wee see any bitter weede, although it beare no fruite, yet let it be looked vnto in due time. For GOD worketh a great miracle, when hee deliuereth his people, at such time as they be carelesse. And woulde GOD that the examples thereof were not so common in the worlde as wee see them. For then would not men giue so much libertie to the wicked, nor suffer them to preuaile so mightily. When they haue infected al; then men sigh and lament, but in the meane while they seeke no meane to prouide for it. So then let vs marke well, that (as the Apostle telleth vs) wee must not bee carelesse and slowe in this behalfe: but as soone as we see any leaude-disposed folke which obey not the direction of GOD, ne yeelde any reuerence to his worde: let them be cutte off. If we see them sow abroad wicked matters as cockle or darnell, to make men to swarue which were in the good way; let vs resist them with all our power, and let them y be in authoritie bende all their force and diligence thereunto, and let every man in likewise apply himselfe to further the same, so as we may be the true seede of GOD, and continue in the puritie of his Gospell, and bring him fourth such fruite, as he may be glorified throughout all our life.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the maiestic of our good GOD, with acknowledgement of our sinnes, beseeching him to make vs so to feele them more and more, as wee may bee touched with true repentance, and we come vnto him, not onely to obtaine foregiuenesse of the sinnes that wee haue committed, but also to bee gouerned by his holy Spirit, and to bee kept in such sorte by him, that albeit Sathan fight against vs, yet neuertheless wee may continue in the seruice of him which hath once called vs, and purchased vs for himselfe. And therefore let vs also say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

that there bee not among you any roote that bringeth fourth Gall and woorme-wood:

19 And so it come to passe that some man hearing the woordes of this curse, doe blesse himselfe in his heart, saying: I shall haue peace, notwithstanding that I walke after the purpose of mine owne heart, and so put drunkennesse vnto thirst.

20 The Lorde will not agree to forgiue him: for then the wrath and Ie- lozie of the Lord will kinde againt that man, and heape vpon him all the Curfes that are written in this booke.

21 And the Lorde wil wpe out the name of him from vnder the heauen, and the Lorde will shoole him out from all the Trybes of Israell to mischeefe, according to all the Curfes of the Couenant that is written in the booke of this Lawe.

He beganne yesterday to declare, wherefore Moses dyd put fourth this similitude of the euill roote, which bring-geth forth bitternesse and gal.

For we do not perceiue at the first fight, when the diuel beginneth to worke in vs, vntill wee be corrupted and marred, yea and that the thinges bee past remedie, which at the first might haue bin taken away. Therefore wee cannot be too circumspect in keeping ourselues, seeing that of nature wee be inclined to euill, and we bee so fraile; that ere wee bee aware, the diuell taketh possession, and then euery man in-fecteth his neighbour, and so the corruption is spred throughout all. Heere hee sheweth the principall daunger that men ought to beware of; which is, that they become not hard hearted againt the threatenings of G O D. For it must needs be that we are altogether senselesse, when wee feele no more any remorse or grieffe of conscience, but rather doe spyte God through diulish pride. For men to ouershoote themselues, it is too ordinarie a matter; to be slowe when they are driuen and prickted forward, is yet a common fault; againe, not to beleeuue good counsell at the first, is a thing to bee seene dayly. But if a man become a scornier and take the bridle in the teeth to dally with God, perswading himselfe that all the threatenings, which are layde before him, bee nothing, and that all is but a fable whatsoeuer is sayde concerning the iudge-ment of G O D, so as hee taketh leaue to doe what hee listeth, and will be ordered by no meanes, but followeth his owne swindge lyke a horse that will not bee tamed, and resisteth all that may bee doone vnto him; when a man ou-ershooteth himselfe so farre, it must needes be that hee is like a desperate creature. Thus yee see whereof Moses admoniseth the people in this place. Let a man beware (sayeth hee) that when hee heareth the curfes which are set fourth in the Lawe, hee say not? Well, yet shall I not sayle to haue peace still although I giue my selfe ouer to all mine owne wayes, and followe my lustes. In deede G O D saith that I shall bee accursed, but I see it not, I will abide the hazard come what will: in the meane while I will not vexe my selfe with melancholy, I will make meerie, come what come will.

When men lest thus desperately, they bee vndoone, and they become altogether vnreformable.

Nowe first of allet vs marke howe it is sayde heere, that when wee haue heard the curfes that are contayned in the Lawe, it is a token of a spitefull and bitter minde to say; Tush I care not a whit what God speaketh. Albeit that we were not taught by any doctrine: yet haue wee a wit-nesse within vs which speaketh vnto vs, namely our owne conscience, whereby euerie of vs is reprooued, and driuen to vnderstand that God is our iudge, yea, euen when wee bee absolued by men, as they bee which escape by bribes, presentes, fauour, sleightes and suttelties; who being absolued by men, faile not to beare their condemnation still about them in their owne hearts. But if when God sheweth vnto vs that we must come to an account, and wakeneth vs vp, by confirming and ratifying that which wee doe alreadie knowe and perceiue, concerning the difference betwixt good and euill: if wee then continue still hardhearted; is it not to bee sayd that wee bee as good as bewitched by Sa-than, and that hee hath bereft vs of all vnder-standing and reason? To bee shorte, let vs learne to walke in feare and carefulnesse, whensoever our Lorde speaketh vnto vs, and quickeneth vs vp by good warnings and admonishments. Let vs beware that wee stand not stubbornly against him: for wee see what they gaine in the ende which bee fo cankerhearted against GOD. Therewithall let vs call to minde that which I haue sayde alreadie; namely that the hyghest poynt of all wickednesse is when men bleise themselves in their heartes, that is to say, when they beare themselves in hand, all that goe well with them notwithstanding that God doe threaten to bee their enemy, and to make them to feele his wrath. And this is written more at large by the Prophet Esay. For there GOD complayneth of such as scotned the Prophetes; for there were in those dayes the lyke scorners that are to bee seene in these dayes. Tush (say they) let vs make good cheere, wee shall die to morrow. They had made that saying a common proverb. Therefore when the Prophetes perceiued that all things were so far out of order as was horrible to see, and that iniquity was become like a waterflood; so as men kindled the wrath of God more and more: they dyd not cease to crie: Wo, wo, it is impossible that GOD should forbear vs or suffer vs any longer: he hath vsed so long patience, that now wee must needs perish all of vs. They hearde nothing but dreadfull threatenings. When the Prophet spake to them, it was not to qualifie the plagues, but as it were to say, you doe not yet heare the hundredth part of the punishmentes that shall come vpon you: and for so much as you make none account thereof, but shew such hardnesse of heart and stubbornnesse against GOD and his Prophetes, you must bee all confounded. These Galantes scoffed at such threatenings, saying: Loe, wee must dye to morrow, let vs therefore make good cheere to day. Loe at what poynt they were. Would GOD that such scorning of GOD and his worde were not yet still in the world. But our Lorde addeth, saying, I haue called you to sackcloth and Ashes: I required nothing but your repentaunce and amendment, that yee might obtaine mercie. Howsoever the case stand, I am desirous to soften the cursed hardnesse and stubbornnesse of your heartes; and you hold on still, and scoffe out all things. But as truly as I am God (sayth hee) this sinne of yours shall neuer bee blotted out. As if hee shoulde say, neuer thinke mee to bee GOD; nor neuer take mee to bee the Iudge of the worlde, if euer this sinne of yours bee forgiven you. It is an offence not pardonable, when men doe so harden themselves against mee. Soothly, it is a threatening that should make vs to tremble, and cause our hayre to stand on end, when GOD sweareth by his name, and protesteth that he will be no more known for God, if he punish not those scorners with all extremity, which will not bow their neckes when hee would haue them to feele their sinnes, that they might repent.

This sentence answereth to the Text of Moses where he sayeth, Beware that none of you haue heard the curses which bee set downe here, do bleise himselfe in his heart, and that he say not: God will easily forgieue mee: and thereupon foadeh himselfe with hope of ease, notwithstanding that GOD denounce warre against him. Now therefore as soone as GOD summoneth vs to his iudgement, let vs learne to enter into our selues, and let euerie one of vs make his owne inditement, and let vs looke aforeshand a farre off at the curses whereof hee speaketh. Albeit that they doe not appeare at the first, yet let vs behold them by faith, like as it is said, That Noe sawe the flood aforeshand when all was at rest, and when men were most drowned in their delights: for the world was faire and pleasant, and it seemed that all should goe well. But Noe in the meane while stretched out his sight about a hundred yeeres before him; euen fixe score yeeres aforeshand did hee beholde that which God had spoken. And euen so must wee doe. Let vs not taine till GOD smite vpon vs with mayne strokes; but as soone as wee haue offended him, let vs by and by looke into his lawe what our state and condition is. And forso much as wee see there how God declarcth that he will punish the despisers of his Maieste, and all such as striue against his worde; threatening specially all adulterers and whooremongers, all drunkardes and blasphemers, and condemning all extortion, deceyte, periuire and enuie: let vs beware that none of vs promise himselfe peace and rest, whilest hee seeth that God exhorteth to repentaunce. For it must needs come to passe, (as he sayeth in another place,) that when they say, Peace and all is safe, then shall they bee suddenly confounded. Certainly it is a monstrous matter and against nature, that men can thinke themselves blessed, when they heare that GOD doeth curse them. And heereby wee see howe frowarde wee are, if GOD restraine vs not: yea and wee see howe it is a common and an ordinarie faulte. For GODS threatenings bee not secreete, they sound continually, and wee haue our eares beaten with them; and yet who is hee that is inuocued at them? True it is that with our mouthes wee vter not the wordes that are set downe heere: but yet wee neuer haue any such obedience, neither are wee euer so beaten downe with our sinnes, as to bee afrayde of GODS threatenings: Nay, wee rather deseie him and all his power; and to our seeming, all the afflictions wherewith wee bee threatened are nothing, vntill wee feele them. So much the more therefore ought wee bee warned to looke to our selues, or else wee shall haue our eyes and our senses so blynded, that wee shall not vnderstande any thing of all that is tolde vs. Wherefore let vs benefite our selues by the lesson that Salomon giueth vs, where hee sayeth, Blessed is the man that is at rayde in his heart; to the intent wee bee not desirous to cheere vp our selues, as it were in despite of God.

Also wee haue heereupon to marke that which is sayd of the undertaking or double dealing of the heart. This word comprehendeth all things that men forge of their owne fantasie. Soothly the imagination of man is a dreadful dungeon; and when wee be once plunged into it, there is no way to get out againe; and yet there is none of vs all but hee seeketh to followe the imaginations of his owne hearte. Seeing therefore that on the one side, when a man giueth himselfe libertie to doe whatsoever hee hath deuised in his owne mynde, hee plundgeth himselfe as in the gulfe of hell, and yet neuertheless euey one of vs is drawn and driuen that way: let vs haue so much the better consideration of this that is spoken heere. Nowe Moses intendeth to make men ashamed, by setting before them the pre-fumings of their hearts; together with the Rule that God hath giuen them. Wee cannot doe amisse in following the will of God, as heereafter wee shall see more at length: it is a ready way; and hee doeth euermore reache vs his hande, wee doe see whether hee calleth vs. The way is certayne and infallible, when we obey GOD. Nowe if wee notwithstanding, doe wittingly lyke better to blinde our selues with our owne vaine fantasies, and to intangle our selues in them, so as wee wote not which way to turne, but wee bee carryed hither and thither, and one mischeefe haleth an other, without ende or measure; must it not needes bee, that wee bee too much bewitched? So much the more therefore behooueth it vs to weye well this woorde of Moses where he speaketh of the vndertakings of the heart.

Moreouer, men followe the deuises of their owne heartes in two manners; the one is when they forge vnto themselves a Religion after their own lying, and thereupon will needs serue God after their owne fantasie; or else when they sooth themselves in their sinnes, although they haue them laide open to their faces. The Idolaters thinke not that they doe yll, when they bring their owne peeing trash vnto God; as for example when they set vp a puppet and kneele downe before it, they thinke that GOD is well honoured. Agyne as wee see amongst the Papistes, howe they trotte on Pilgrimage, and cause Masse to be sung, and babble before an Altar, and carie Candelles, and fast some certayne dayes; when the Idolaters doe thus torment themselves in vaine, it seemeth to them that all is well, and that it is acceptable to GOD, and that he doeth them wrong, if hee take it not in good part. And yet in the meane while they bee but inuentions of their owne braine, such as God vtterly mislyketh and condemneth. And therefore let vs marke well that Moses in this place meant chiefly to plucke men away from this kinde of madnesse, which is in all Idolaters, in that they would serue God after their owne fashion, hauing no respect to that which he hath commaunded by his worde. Albeit then that at the first they doe not per-ceiue their leawdnesse; yet is it not to bee sayd that they be cleare; neither can it serue them for an excuse. Marke that for one point.

Nowe if they bee to bee condemned, which thinke themselves to doe their dutie, and haue a good intent, as they terme it: what shall become of such as weetingly prouoke the wrath of God? They knowe well it is nought, and that it shall not scape vnpunished, and yet neuertheless they cease not to harden their heartes. And wherefore? For their lust doeth driue them thereto, which boyleth so in them as they must needes accomplish that which they haue imagined. Now when men do thus harden themselves against God, notwithstanding that their conscience doeth reprove them, and they knowe that they doe yll: what is to bee saide to it: Let vs learne therefore to behaue our selues well in these two pointes, and generally let vs not fight against GOD; but when our heart draweth vs eyther one way or other, let vs vnderstand that all that euer proceedeth from our selues, is contrarie to the rule that our Lord hath deliuered vs: and let vs knowe that there is none other meane to discern what is good and what is euill, but by submitting our selues to the doctrine by the which our Lord holdeth all our senses, thoughtes and affections captiue. That is the effect of the matter which we haue to beare away in this place.

Nowe Moses addeth another similitude, saying, That such folke doe mingle drunkennesse and wickednesse together. The wordes import as much as if it were sayd, that they doe mingle drunkennesse and thirst together: but wee will take it as it is here set downe. In deede this place hath bin expounded diuerse wayes: in so much that some to play the fine headed fellows, haue said that by the phrase which hath y word Thirst or Thirstie, Moses meant that part of the soule, which yeeldeth it selfe to be governed by reason, for as much as it is desirous of knowledge and seeketh after it: and yet neuertheless doeth intermeddle with the other which maketh hir drunken with hir owne voluptuousnes and delights, and hath neither measure nor stay of it selfe. But these be vaine speculations which we must let alone: neither had I spoken of them, but to y ende y none should deceiue themselves w them. Let vs come to the playne meaning of Moses. We haue scene heere afore the matter which he treateth of in this place; and no doubt, but this serueth as an exposition, for the better declaring and confirming of that which we haue scene already. By the Thirstie therefore or by Thirst, hee meaneth the appetite of man which is alwayes hungrie: and I meane not the appetite of eating and drinking, but the appetite of all our lustes. Yee see then howe man in his owne nature is as it were thirstie, so as wee bee alwayes sharpe set, and can not be satisfied by any manner of meanes; for as soone as we haue beene tempred with one with, by and by wee come to another, and there is no man but he is vexed with diuerse chaunges and fortes of thirstinesse. For albeit that vices raigne more in some than in other some; yet notwithstanding the man that is giuen to couetousnesse misserh not to haue other lustes, in so much that couetousnes is not without cause counted the roote of all mischief. Likewise a whoremonger is caried away by his affections, and wicked lustes, and yet hath he other vices also therewithall. When we haue well examined the nature of man, it will be founde that Moses could not better compare them than to such as bee thirstie. And why so? For they are neuer at rest, they bee neuer contented, they are alwayes sharpe set, and they bee euermore eage of their desires. Hee speaketh it expressly in the Feminine gender and sayeth, Shee that is thirstie, by cause the present case concerneth the lust of man. Hee putteth it in the person of a woman, but yet neuertheless we see what hee meaneeth. And therefore doeth hee put in Drunkenesse? By cause men bee so farr out of order, that they seeme to haue no discretion at all; and when they bee once a little disguised, anon they become starke drunken, in so much that they seeke prouocations to drinke still, and to guzzle wine, and to swill it in more and more. Ye see that when a man is once out of the way, he layeth on drinke still, and the more he drinketh more he may (as they say) and experience sheweth it. Now then, when man is accustomed and thoroughly nussed in drunkenesse, hee becommeth a winesacke, so that although hee poure in neuer so much wyne, yet is he neuer filled, but doeth still gulp it vp without ende of drinking. Wee see these great drunkardes, how all men woonder at them, and it is a maruailous matter where they bestowe the drinke which they take in. It seemeth vnpossible that any stomacke should holde it. Again wee see that they are past all shame, and at all their venting places doe cast out the wyne which they had taken in. And be they once emptie, they be as ready to drinke againe as euer they were: and when they fauour not the wine, then must they haue new demises to procure appetite. If wyne mislike them, though they be ready to burst, yet must they eate some strange meate, as either a Carbonado, or the verie snuffe of a Candle, or a pickled hering, and I wote not what else; so that to all seeming they meane rather to murder themselves, than to haue any honestie in them.

Nowe let vs looke to the course of the Text, and wee shall finde that this similitude is so fit, that Moses could not haue set forth the lustes of men better than by comparing them to men ouerfurfited with drinke: for it is certaine that wee shall neuer bee so well stayed in our affections, but that we finde this in them, I meane vntill God hath reformed vs by his holy spirit. In deede we see some haue more honestie in them, and which leade not a dissolute life, neither in whoredome, nor in drunkenesse, nor in swearing, nor in theft, nor in any hurtfull thing. Well then, in these there is some shewe of vertue, but yet it is impossible that a man should not be vn-cleane in his heart, vntill God doe gouerne him: for our nature must needs bee euermore sinnefull: and that which is sayde in Genesis must needs be accomplished in vs: namely that all that euer the heart of man doeth imagine, is forward and wicked. Now seeing it is so, Moses telleth vs heere, that it is ouer much for vs to haue this cursed inclination by nature; and therefore wee must fight against our lustes: like as when a sicke man sees himselfe out of temper, he must thinke that if he fulfill his owne fantasie, he shall bring himselfe to a horre and continuall ague, and so kill himselfe. Hee must therefore re-straine himselfe. And why? For his desire is disorderly. Euen so it is with vs; and so must wee fight against our lustes and affections; and it is a difficult combat. Let vs labour therein by all the means wee can, and yet shall we not so much preuaile, but that somewhat will bee still amisse. Now if in stead of repressing our lustes & of holding them strait curbed, we flatter our selues and nourish them: is it not a wilfull throwing of our selues into destruction? I knowe a vice that doeth raigne in mee, and I am to fight against it: that is my right exercise, vnto the which God hath called mee. Nowe I conspire with my naturall inclination, which is wicked; I see it is a disease that will kill mee; vnlesse I provide for it and keepe good order: and yet neuertheless I will as it were compact with the sickenesse, and followe myne owne appetite: what is to bee sayde to it? The greatest mischief of all is this, that Moses letteth downe heere: namely that men bee not content to foster their lustes, and to soade themselves with vaine flatteries, but they do also cast themselves to the spoyle lyke madde men, and become drunken to bereaue themselves of discretion; yea they become verie bestes, to the intent they may haue no more feeling of their euill; they cast away all shame, to become like vnto brute bestes: they haue no grieue of conscience, and they proceede so farre as to bleare out their tongues against all manner of admonitions that bee giuen them. When men come to that poynt, it is a right adding of drunkenesse vnto thirst. But nowe let vs learne, that when our Lorde sheweth vs our faultes, it is to the ende, that euer of vs should enforce and straine himselfe to correct his wicked lustes, and beware that we maintaine them not. But about all things lee vs take heed that wee tempt not GOD, ne make warre vpon him openly, ne proceede to adde drunkenesse vnto thirst, that is to say, that wee adde not beastly disemperance to our owne wicked inclination. It is too much that wee should bee allured by our desires, and lustes; but to become so drunken and beastly in them, as to haue no consideration at all of them; and to bee saped in our naughtinesse that we fall to seeking of monstrous things after the manner of drunkardes: Alas, whereto tendeth it? Is it not an vtter defacing of GODS image in vs, as much as wee can? And yet is it too much seene in the worlde; for they that flatter themselves in common vices, doe fall in the ende into so heynous and great enormities, as it seemeth, that they would confound heauen & earth together.

When a man hath a long while made none account of God, and is become drunken in his filthinesse; what will he doe after he is so beforted? He will passe the boundes euen of naturall honesty, in so much that the verie heates do hold their lustes in order: but man, not knowing at all what he is, transfigureth himselfe: and that is it that Saint Paule meaneth in saying, that when men haue despised G O D, they fall into many concupiscences, and they must needs forget themselves, and throwe themselves headlong into so shamefull enormities, as a man cannot tell how to worke them greater reproche than they doe to themselves. Wherefore let vs bee a frayde of such vengeance, and let vs alwayes be mindefull of this drunkenness whercof Moses speaketh in this place, that wee may beware of it.

Then he addeth, That GOD will neuer bee mercifull to such a man: but his wrath shall kinde against him, and his indignation shall be moued against him, all the curses contained in the Booke of the Lawe shall be heaped vpon him and rest vpon him, and hee shall bee cutt off from the Tribes of Israel to his undoing. This is the same thing which I alleged ere while out of the Prophet Esay, where God sweareth, that hee will neuer forgieue such people, as haue so abused his patience, and made a iest and a scoffe of the warnings that he gaue them. As much also doeth Moses say thereof here, though in another phrase. God (sayth hee) will neuer forgieue such a man. Heereby we are admonished, that although wee haue offended God, yet there is place to obtayne mercie and forgieuenesse, so we be not hard hearted, but do lament, specially when we be admonished, and when men shewe vs more plainly that we must repaire to the goodness of God. When wee deale so, then there is a conuenient helpe already prepared for vs. But contrariwise, if we continue in our stubbornnesse, and for the hauing of more libertie, doe proceede to wilfull stubbornnesse against all counsaile, and become deafe to all the threatenings of the Scripture, bearing our selues in hande that there is no iudge in heauen: when wee deale so, let vs not thinke that our Lord wil suffer such stoutnesse, for it is too diuclish. Needs must men haue vtterly forgotten what they are, when they can so prouoke their iudge. G O D therefore wil neuer forgieue such a man. Now then, are we called to repentance? Let euerie of vs bow downe our neckes, and bee touched with such a feare of Goddes iudgement, as may holde vs in awe, and make vs to repaire to him when he calleth vs, whyle wee haue time, and whyle the gate is open let vs enter, for if G O D doe once thurte it, we may knocke, and wee may wayle and howle as Esau did: but it is too late. To bee short, Moses telleth vs, that whylest wee haue meane and access to returne vnto him to obtayne grace, we ought to stepp to it without mocking of his worde: and that when wee bee exhortid by it to consider our finnes, wee ought to beware that wee make a right confession of them, and not resemble other men which are so dull that they haue no vnderstanding of the vengeance of God wherewith they are beset.

Moses sayeth farther, That the wrath of G O D shall kinde, and his indignation shall be moued against such a man. Whereby hee signifieth, that G O D will neuer pacifie his wrath against any of those that doe so abuse his fatherly gentleness, and haue hoorded vp the treasure whercof Saint Paule speaketh in the second Chapter to the Romanes in the time of G O D S long sufferance. For certesse Gods sparing of vs, is to giue vs leasure to come to repentaunce. Hee wayteth for vs, and if wee make no account of returning vnto him, specially when he doeth prouoke vs, but doe yet worfe: is it not good reason that hee turne our wilfull stubbornnesse backe vpon our owne heades? Yes: For wee doe but heape vp so much the greater cursednesse vpon our selues. Vpon whom shall it light, but vpon vs, in such sort as wee shall be altogether ouerwhelmed? When a man doeth thus increase his leawdnesse, and scorneth God, and besides all the other finnes which hee hath committed, outrageth so farre as to say, I will not giue ouer mine owne pleasure, bearing himselfe in hande that Gods hand cannot touch him, but that hee hath a couenaunt with Hell and death, as sayeth the Prophet Esay; when we be at that point, is it not, as if we should draw some mountaine or house vpon vs to ouerwhelme vs withall? Let vs learne then that our Lorde doeth here vtter forth a speciall wrath against all them that will not be moued by his word, but continue vtterly vnrreformable. His wrath (saith he) shall be kindled against them, and his indignation shall be stirred vp.

And for the better expressing thereof hee saith: That the curses of the Lawe shall lie vpon him. He had sayd afore, all this shall cleaue vnto thee. And here it is sayde, that they shall rest. Purposely is this word set downe, by cause men doe euer thinke to escape and to outrinne the punishments of God: as when a dogge seeleth a stripe with a cudgell, hee shaketh his eares; and would faine scape, but the blowe doubleth, and he is cudgelled well and throughly, and yet hee seeketh still to flie away: Euen lo it is with vs. Therefore if God punish vs, there is none other helpe but to stoope, and to lament by considering our finnes. But in steede of this we thinke to go quite by removing from our standing. That is the cause, why men bee toiled with vntrest, when God doeth visite them, and they perceiue that they haue offended him: they torment themselves, supposing that it shall auayle them much; whereas it is neuerthelesse to their confusion. Therefore saith Moses, that the curses which be contained in the Lawe shall rest vpon vs. Let vs not thinke then to cast them behinde vs, neither let vs thinke to escape, whē we play the madde bedlems and kicke against him. That is but a folly; they must of necessity lye vpon vs, yea in such wise as wee shall not feele any ease. That is in effect the thing which we haue to beare in minde concerning this place.

Afterwarde he sayeth yet farther, That such a man shall be rased out from vnder the heauens, and his name also. Nowe GOD speaketh not of one curse onely: but saith that when a man is not humbled throughly by one punishment, there shall come a whole dosen vpon him. Nay the number shall not be certaine, but (as wee haue often said heretofore) the number shall be infinite, as we shall see againe in the xxxii. Chapter, that God hath incredible meanes to tame those that are so stubborne against him. And now for a conclusion he saith, that the name of such a man shall be rased out from vnder heauen. As if he should say, God will roote him out from the number of his creatures, so as hee shall be no more reckoned among men. Indeede the principall matter which wee shoulde desire, is not to haue a name vnder heauen, but to haue our names written aboue in the booke of lyfe. Neuerthelesse, Moses in this phrase of speeche, comprehendeth also the eternall damnation. And why? For wee knowe that our Lorde did at that time vtter forth his goodnesse and loue towards the Iewes, by earthly benefites; and contrariwise his wrath also by temporall punishments. Moses therefore in saying heere, that God will wype out the name of such a man from vnder heauē; meane according to the same rule, that GOD would no more reckon him in the number of his creatures. Nowe if wee be not worthy to be counted heere beneath for the creatures of God, nor to liue amongst horses and Asses; howe shall wee be partakers of the glorie of heauen, to be companions with the Angels, in the immortalitie which is prepared for all the faithfull and for all Gods children? We see how the meaning of Moses is that God will so rase vs out of the roll of lyfe and saluation, as we shall not be counted worthy to beare the place of his creatures, but this curle shall appeare vpon vs euen by the thinges of this world.

And thereupon he sayth, That such a man shall bee curle off from the sribes of Israel to his undoing. Whereby it is shewed vnto vs, first that God had separated that people to bee preserued. And it is a doctrine that appertaineth to all the faithfull. In dede we haue a speciall myrrour therof in the Iewes: for wee see that when the first borne of Egypt were slaine, the Angell touched not the houses which were marked with the blood of the Paschall Lambe, but it was Gods will that they shoulde bee free from such vengeance. Although then that as long as wee liue in this world, we be inuironed with all manner of miseries, whereunto this humane life is subiect, and that all the diseases which can happen vnto men, be threatninges of death, and that wee be likewise subiect to all the mischaunces that can happen vnto vs, by ayre, water, fyre, earth, and the heauens; which doe all serue to bring vs to ruine and confusion: although say I that as concerning the humane state, wee differ not from them that be afflicted to the vttermost; yet neuerthelesse our Lord preserue vs and shoulde vs out, as if he should gather vs into a corner by our selues. Well may wee be mingled among those whom God hath cast off: but yet behold he vs alwayes with mercie. This is in effect that which wee haue to remember concerning this place: and it doeth import an inestimable comfort. For albeit that we be subiect to all the myseries of the world, yet doeth God so preserue vs, that of a speciall priuiledge, wee be safe by his meanes bycause he is mercie vs: so as the mischief is euer put off by his hand which is present with vs, and cyther wee be exempted from it, or at the least, he giueth it such issue, as wee haue cause to reioyce, and to giue him thanks for that he hath so preserued vs. Thus much for one point.

But yet for all that let vs beware that we abuse not that goodnesse of God; for if we doe, when we be gathered to be as of his household, hee can very well cut vs off againe; as it is fitely sayde, that such a man shall be curle off from among the Tribes of Israel: so stwe that it is not ynough for vs to be receiued into Gods Church, but that we must continue in his obedience vnto the ende, to the intent that hee may continue his grace towards vs, yea and to continue it in such sort, as we may bee of that Israel, whereof God speaketh by Ezechuell, to witte, that we may be in his secret Roll. For there bee many that be enrolled before men, which neuerthelesse be reiectd of God. And therefore hee speaketh purposely of his secret Roll, where they be written that be his people indeede. That is it that Paule speaketh vnto Timothie, that they be letters enclosed vp. God (saith hee) knoweth them that be his: and that is a decree which standeth steadfast. Therefore let vs learne so to yeeld our selues obedient to our God, praying him, that lyke as he hath vouchsafed to draw vs vnto him, he will also pursue ir, and increase his blessings: and that when we be once grafted into the stocke of Abraham, to be his children by faith; wee may alwaies hold on still in the course of our adoption, that in the ende God may acknowledge vs for his children, and we be made partakers of the glorie which is prepared for vs, seeing that in this worlde and in this short life wee haue inioyded blessings, by the which hee maketh vs already to taste of his Ioue.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the face of our good God, acknowledging our fautes, and beseeching him that we may be more and more cast downe in ourselues, to haue such a horror and feeling of our sinnes, as wee may not sayle to runne vnto him, and to flee for refuge to his mercie, that by forgiuing vs our sinnes from day to day, he may amend vs euermore, vntill hee hath quite ridde vs of them. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely vnto vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Friday the x. of April, 1556.

22 Thus will the generation to come, say, namelie your children which shall succede after you and the straunger which shall come from a farre lande, when they see the plagues of this lande, and the diseases of it wherewith the Lord shall haue smitten it:

23 The brimstone and fault wherewith hee shall haue burned all his lande, so as it shall not bee sowed, nor yeelde fruite, nor haue anie grasse growing thereon, as in the ouerthrowe of Sodome and Gomorrah, Adam and Seboim, which the Lord destroyed in his wrath and displeasure.

24 Then shall all Nations say, wherefore hath the Lorde doone this to this Lande? O how fierce is his great wrath?

25 And it shall bee answered, because they forsooke the couenaut of the Lorde GOD of their fathers, which hee made with them, when hee brought them out of the land of Egypt.

26 For they went and serued other gods, and bowed themselues before the the same gods whome they knewe not, neither hadde they doone them anie good.

27 Therefore is the wrath of the Lorde kindled against this land, to bring vpon it all the curses wriiten in this booke.

28 And the Lorde hath rooted them out of their lande, in wrath, anger, and great indignation, and he hath throwne them out into an other land as it appeareth at this day.

29 The secretes of the Lord our God be reuealed vnto vs, and to our children for euer, to the intent we should do all the wordes of this law.

Moses proceedeth here still with the matter which wee beganne yesterday, namely, to declare howe detestable our rebellion is vnto God, when he hath once taught vs by his worde, and can not winne vs, but wee turne heade to the contrary. For it had bene enough to haue declared in one worde, that none shoulde remayne unpunished: howbeit forasmuch as men doe not so quickly consider the vengeance of God to be moued therewith to the quicke, therefore Moses addeth threatenings vpon threatenings, declaring that the punishmentes shall bee so greuous, that euerie man shall bee abashed at it: according also as the Prophet Ieremie vseth this phrase of speech, saying y<sup>e</sup> al mens eares shal tingle at the hearing of the straunge things which God shall haue wrought in Ierusalem & the lande of Iudah. For if God chastise vs after the common order, wee regarde it not, we take it to be but haphazard, or else we doe linger til y<sup>e</sup> plague be past; but as for submitting ourselues to God, it is no part of our care. That is y<sup>e</sup> cause why Moses doeth in this place inhaunce the plagues which God would sende vpon that lande, to the intent that the people might bee the better instructed, and euerie man looke to himselfe, and vnderstand that if they tempted Gods patience, they must needs fall into this so horrible extremitie. In which respect hee saith, Thus the generations to come, and those also which shoulde resort thither from farre countries, shall inquire thereof as people abashed. By which wordes hee doeth vs to vnderstande, that the punishmentes which God would sende vpon the rebelles, shoulde be straunge, such as shoulde make all folke astonished, and amaled at the sight of them, and to say, this is a matter that hath not bene wont to be; it must needs be that the hande of God hath gone this way. Nowe wee see the meaning of Moses. And herein wee haue to condemne our slownesse, seeing that God must be faine to describe things vnto vs, as it were in a painted table, the cause whereof is for that wee bee not playable to receiue ceyue the admonishments which hee giueth vs. We thinke our selues able folke : but in lo doing wee doe all. of vs beguile our selues with selfe soothing, vntill our Lorde doe as it were beate it into our braynes by force, that if wee procede on to offende him, wee shall not escape his hande, yea, and that wee shall be handled with such rigour as shall make all them to tremble which see but the traicts thereof: so that not onely wee that receyue the strokes, shall be confounded, but they also which come from farre shall confesse, that it was the vengeance of God, which was not without cause, and that it must needs bee, that we did committe ouer greuous and hainous offences, seing that God is thus inflamed against vs.

Moreouer Moses sheweth that God will no more spare a whole country, than one man: least they should shroude themselves vnder the multitudes of people that giue themselves to wickednesse, and thinke thereby to scape the better cheape before God. It is expressly saide that if any man sinne hee shall be punished: and if a whole lande be faultie, God will wrappe them all likewise into one fardell. Therefore let vs not bleare our eyes wilfully as wee see the Papistes doe, who vaunt themselves this day, because y number of such as are inclined to their superstitions is not small. They boast them of their great multitude, making it their buckler against both God and men. And thereupon they doe despise vs, and it seemeth to them, that they may of good righte condemne the pure and true religion. But contrariwise God telleth vs, that when a whole land hath forsaken the right way, that rebellion of theirs shal not go unpunished, albeit that the multitude of them which be faultie, be neuer so great. Finallie wee must beware that we followe not one another to do euill: for if a blinde body do cleade the way, hee shal fall into the ditch, and likewise they that followe him: hee shall not exempt them by his fall. We must therefore vnderstand, that when God calleth vs, wee must sticke vnto his voyce, and obey it: and if all the worlde fall away, and euery man goe astray, yet must not we ground our selues vpon the examples that wee see, as if wee woulde say, It is lawfull for mee, for manie haue this custome. We may not make that a law, but we must stand stedfast in y obedience of our God. This is the thing which we haue to remember concerning this place, where Moses speaketh not of euery man particularly, but of the whole land, vsing the comparison of Sodome and Gomorrah, of Adama and Zeboim: according to the cōmon maner of the holy scripture, where the Prophets doe put men in mind of the dreadfull punishment which God sent vpon those cities. And indeede S. Iude faith in his Epistle, that it is as it were a myrrour of the fire that is prepared for the wicked, y wee might alwayes behold howe God is Iudge of the world. Therefore it is not without cause, that Moses speaketh here of Sodoni & Gomorrah: as if he should say, albeit that God do alwayes punish sin, yet the examples thereof be not alwayes so notable, as in that ouerthrow of Sodoni & Gomorrah, and of the townes nere vnto them. For there it was his will to shew by one deed that he was not a partie to be dalied withall: and therefore it was his will that the remembrance thereof should continue, and that euery man should walke warily. When men speake of Sodoni & Gomorrah, they ought to consider that he which ouerthrow them with lightning and tempest, is at this day liuing in heauen, & that he hath not changed his purpose nor giuen over his office, but that his maiestie is accompanied with his iustice and power. Therefore let vs not tempt him: but if hee vse patience toward vs, let vs vnderstand that when hee hath long delaided, we must come to reckning: and if the punishment be not now visible vpon vs, as it was then vpon the said townes, yet will the time come that we shall perithe. That in effect is the thing that Moses ment to signifie in this place.

We haue here a generall instruction, which is, y for asmuch as God hath euermore punished the worlde, it shoulde therefore be the more to our reproch, if wee profited not thereby, in acknowledging ourselues so much the more guilty according to the saying of S. Paul who giueth y verie same rule, in the tenth chapter of the first to the Corinthians, namely that when God punisheth mens stubbornnes, couetousnes, vnbeleefe, superstition, fornication, and such like sins: his so doing is a liuelie image of his iudgement. Let vs beware that when God teacheth vs at other mens cost, wee profit in that schoole. For if we become hardhearted, it shall be made manifest vnto vs at the last day, that it was long of no body but of our selues, that wee were not reduced into the way of saluation, because we woulde needs wilfully misse it, as if we had cōspired with Satan, to our owne destruction. Therefore doth he also say, that the vengeance of God is wont to come vpon all misbeleuers: as if he shoulde say, let vs not tarrie till God strike vs, but seeing we do percieue him to be Iudge of the world, let y touch vs, & let euery of vs bestir himselfe to repentance. Moses hauing spoken so, addeth this further declaration, and saith that they which come from far countries, & the childre also that shold be born after y euent of such a punishment: shal al inquire of it as astonished, saying: What meaneth this? And now he addeth for a cōfirmation, y the shame thereof shal remain vpon them y be so afflicted: wherby he sheweth, that they shal not yet escape, after that God hath taken them out of the world, but that they shall beare the marke of infamie, in so much that euen the blind shal condemne them, and euery man despise the euen when their carckelles be rotten and brought to nothing, and y the remembrance of them shal be odious to the world. For men will say, It is because they forgot the God of their fathers, which had brought them out of the Lande of Egypt, and turned so strange Gods whō they neuer knew. That is one point which we haue to note in this place.

And by the way Moses doth vs to vnderstand, that if the lewes be not pliable afore hand, it shal come to passe that afterwarde other men shal be taught to beware by their great destruction whic-

whether they will or no. And that is well worthie to be marked. Whensoever God reproveth vs, we couer our sinnes, and although we haue no great colour so to doe, yet doe wee euermore take leaues to hide vs, after the example of our father Adam. To be short, wee bee so shamelesse, that wee will rather alleadge frivoulous excusels, than yeelde to condemne our selues. God doeth threaten vs, but we do make none account thereof; wee offend notwithstanding, whereby we shewe our rebelliousnesse. If wee be asked, Goe too, doe you perceiue the hand of God? O say we, I wor not wherefore I am afflicted. Thus do men euermore goe backward; and in steede of appeaching themselves, they fall to disputing and cauelling to escape as they may. To be short, we will neuer come willingly to the acknowledging of our sins. What doth God then, when he seeth vs to bee so vntractable? Hee teacheth others. Forasmuch as it is but labour lost to apply himselfe to vs, & because we be as logs of wood, hardharted and wilful in wickednes: the example of vs is a good instruction to others, which come to read y<sup>e</sup> it is the vengeance of God, & so do acknowledge it in our persons: & in the meane while, we be shut out from all remedie: for wee haue not the power in time and place, to receiue the correctio that God sent vs. Thus ye see what we haue to note in this place, where Moses saith: that they will say: It is not a matter any whit darke nor anie more to be doubted of, that they which bee stubborne hearted against G O D and haue used contention to make them selues innocent, may very wel wrie their mouths: but yet will G O D sture vp tongues to discouer their iniquities, and they must become a common prouerbe, and haue their doings blafed abroad: as who shold say, god hath punished the on this wise, because they forgot him. After he had deliuered die by his incredible power, and wrought so many wonders for their safetie, they laid al this vnder foote, & turned the selues vnto strange gods. And here by we be taught that when God giueth vs yet means to returne vnto him, we must not draw back, seeing y<sup>e</sup> we shall gaine nothing thereby. And moreover, sith it is his wil to teach vs at other folkes cost, let vs consider what is happened vnto the Jewes, (according as S. Paul also leadeth vs thither:) for they were the adopted people of God when wee were yet but as rotten. God had left our fathers in their confusion, when in the meane while the family of Abraham was chosen & aduanced to y<sup>e</sup> heritage of saluation. Now then, if they being y<sup>e</sup> first borne, were so grievously punished, shold it not make our haire to stand vp on end, seeing y<sup>e</sup> in comparison of the we be as children borne before their time? In deed we haue bene grafted in their place: but yet they were y<sup>e</sup> naturall olue, they were the branches proceeding of y<sup>e</sup> same roote, which was dedicated in the person of Abraham. But we for our part were vnholly. Now if we succeed in their place, thinke we y<sup>e</sup> God will spare vs, if we follow their iniquities: We see how he hath dealt wth them, & it is a dreadful matter. Therefore let vs learne to profit thereby, & not tary till our Lorde make vs as it were a looking-glasse, y<sup>e</sup> others may be taught by vs to our confusion. Thus ye see how we ought to put this place in practise.

Now Moses doeth here expressly accuse the Jewes, to y<sup>e</sup> intent to take away from the al starringholes; saying: They forgot the God of their fathers & him that had deliuered them out of the land of Egypt, and set them free from that hard bondage. By saying, The G O D of their fathers, he meaneth that they were reuolted without cause; Which complaynt the Prophete Ieremie doeth also vse. Go (saith he) ouer the sea, goe throughout al the countries of the worlde, see how constant the heathen are, they change not their Gods, & yet they be but Idols: men did deuise of their owne fancies, y<sup>e</sup> such a religion was to be had, & they stick to it, shewing great constancie & stedfastnes, albeit that it haue no foundation. But I am the true God, & you haue knowne me to be for experience, & yet notwithstanding you be euermore sickle to haue some noueltie, you cannot bee stayed nor restrained in my seruice: & is not y<sup>e</sup> to great an vnthankfulnes: So the Moses telleth them here, that they haue forsaken the God of their fathers, Yet notwithstanding, it is not to be inferred hereupon, that because our fathers haue helde some euill trade of life, therefore wee must follow the same, for the Papistes & Turkes haue that defence common amongst them, namely, that it is nowe a long while since they haue behaued themselves after that manner. The Turkes say: What? It is eight hundred yeres agoe since that Mahomet brought vs to his law, and it hath bin kept euer since, our fathers haue deliuered it vnto vs from hand to hande. The Papistes also doe alleadge their holy Councils; and the Traditions of ancient Lawes: but (as I haue already touched) it is not enough for vs that our fathers haue deliuered vs such a religi<sup>o</sup>n as they thought good. But Moses speaking here of fathers, doeth separate Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, from the worlde, because God did sanctifie them. Those bee the fathers that deserued to bee of dignitie and reputation about worldlie men; for God did ordyne the to be followed that other men might become like vnto them. That is the thing which Moses regarded. For in deed we see that Ezechiel blamed the people for following the lawes and righteousnesse of their fathers: it might seeme at the first shewe, that here is some contrarietie. God on the one side condemneth the Jewes, for that they followed not their fathers; and afterwarde hee condemneth them, for that they followed them too much. Yea but those fathers did differ verie much. For in this place the fathers bee they whome G O D hath exalted to credite, to whome also hee willeth vs to stick; that is to say, the holie Patriaches: They therefore shoulde drawe after them all their generations that there might bee a true vnion of faith, and one accorde, to prouue that they be the children of Abraham: but in steede of these, they folowed their bastarde fathers, as S. Steuen telleth the, saying,

You

You haue alwaies testified the holy Ghost, as your fathers did: and againe, bee not a stubborn and frowarde generation, as your fathers were, which prouoked God to wrath in the wilderness: they were full of bitterness. Therefore we must haue this difference of fathers. And if we meane now to worship the true God in such sort as is requisite, we must haue the holy Patriarches to guide vs; so as we may protest that we be ioyned with them in true vnitie of faith. Also we must haue the Apostles, which bee called the fathers of the Church. For when wee followe that rule, wee cannot faile. And therewithall let vs beware that we mingle not our selues with them: y<sup>e</sup> are growen out of kind from the true fathers; as the Papistes doe, who sticke stoutly to them. For they which were backsliders, which forsooke the pure doctrine of the Gospel, which also peruerted and corrupted the religion of our auncient fathers: those be the verie fathers of the Papistes, which haue falsely vsurped that title. Let vs therefore beware of such a mingling, without any discretion. Marke that for a speciall point, Finally, forasmuch as God hath at all times bene reuiled vnto them that haue shewed vs the way of saluation, let that suffice vs: and let it serue to confirme our faith, that we be not hindered in the submitting of our selues vnto him to whome we owe all manner of obedience: nor become so fickleheaded as to turne from that which hath bene taught vs from the beginning: for wee haue the lawe, which beareth vs witnesse, that the religion which we hold at this day, hath bene alwayes among the Patriarches, and that it was then ratified when the people were brought out of Egypt. And we haue the Gospel, which is a whole and a full confirmation vnto vs, and the finishing vp of the lawe, from whence we must drawe all things, if we intende that God shall allowe of our religion.

Nowe secondly GOD speaketh of the deliuerance of his people, that by their owne experience they might bee conuicted of their transgressions, I haue (saith he) brought them out of y<sup>e</sup> land of Egypt. Here did they feele the grace of God, and like as it was manifested to them by effect, euen so should they haue acknowledged that they were so much y<sup>e</sup> more bound vnto him. Nowe then if they turne away, are they not double faultie? Yes truly. Thereby we haue yet to marke another warning; which is, to note well the giftes and benefites which God bestoweth on vs, that the same may holde vs in awe, and make vs to yeelde ourselues so much the more vnto him: and not to bee wauering. Howe soeuer Satan intice vs, let vs euer holde our owne still, and say, What? Our God thinketh it not enough to giue vs his worde, but ouer and besides that, he maketh vs to vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> power of his hande, by succouring vs fo manie wayes: we knowe that he neuer sayled those that serue him. Nowe then should not the same be sufficient to prouoke vs also to serue him? On the other side, if wee doe forget the benefites which we haue receyued of God, we must not thinke that he will suffer them to be buried, he will surely put vs throughly in minde of them, euen to our vtter confusion: according as we see how he speaketh here of the Iewes.

And nowe on the contrarie part he blameth them for that, That they bee turned away after strange gods, which they haue not knowne, and which had done them no good. This is generally incidents to all Idolaters. For notwithstanding that there be a kinde of willfull opinion in them; yet are they at no certaintie. Like as the Papistes, which can not say that they bee assured of their religion, all is grounded vpon a supposition. True it is, that they play the madde men: for when they bee tolde of their foolishnesse, they rage and storme and thinke that men do them the greatest wrong in the worlde, when they make any gainesaying to that which they imagine to bee good: and yet howsoeuer they fare, they haue but a supposal. For all their saying is, Our fathers taught vs so: it is the order of our holie mother the Church: this hath nowe bene receyued of olde. Verie well, shall God bee offended with that? Shall his truth, which we ought to admitt to bee vnfallible, bee made voyde vnlesse wee bee grounded vpon custome and authorities of men? Nay, without that, there is nothing in men but vanities and lies. Hereby then wee must learne not to thinke that straunge which the Scripture speaketh, namelie that wee must fashion our selues after our fathers, howbeit those fathers which haue followed the truth of God and none other. To bee short, wee shall finde that there is no certeyntie in them that followe not the lawe, & that none but the children of God can talke of it vpon knowledge, according as Saint Iohn sayth in his Canonically Epistle. Soothly it is not for vs to bee taught by coniectures of men, when the worde of God is laide before vs: for it is good reason that God should haue so great authoritie ouer vs, as that when hee saith the worde, we shoulde wholly sticke to it, and seeke no farther: but yet is there alwayes a true knowledge in faith, and not a wauering opinion. Contrariwise, all they that serue GOD after their owne deuotion, doe but imagine, and serue gods whome they know not. The Papistes say, that the Virgin Marie is their aduocate, euerie one hath his patron, such as hee hath deuised of his owne heade; doe they vnderstande that GOD hath giuen them these offices? Haue they any Testimonies thereof? None; but they thinke so. When I goe on Pilgrimage or cause a masse to bee sung, or founde such a yeares minde: O that is goodly seruing of God, What? Haue you authoritie for all these things, that they be pleasing to God, and that hee alloweth them? O no sir, but our intent is good. Yea, but that is not enough to binde God: for hee must bee serued according to his owne will: and hee will none of all those things. To bee short, examine all that the Idolaters doe, and yee shall finde that they be rauished and puffed vp with a wauering opinion. Thereupon they foot themselves exceedingly: but yet are they neuer assured of their

case. Therefore it is not without cause that Moses reprooeth the Iewes, for following the gods which they knew not. And indeede how shall a man knowe that which is not: for there is no knowledge, but the truth: and there is nothing but lies in all that men doe deuise, without the worde of God.

Againe hee saith yet further that the Idoles whome they serued, had doone them no good. True the wretched misbeleuers doe beare them selues in hande, that the Idoles whome they serue, haue doone them much good: as we see the Papistes doe, saying: Lo, wee finde it good to goe to such a Saint, for there is such a miracle as sheweth that this deuotion is not vnprofitable: after which manner wee see the Idolaters to haue doone at all times. When we serued the Queene of heauē (say they in Ieremie) we had our fill of meate and drinke, there was plentie of all manner of good things. Lo howe Satan blindeth these wretches, and God doeth suffer them to bee fedde with vaine flatteries, and to please themselves with their owne superstitions, to their condemnation. Neuertheless, that which is spoken by the Prophet I say, shall bee alwayes true, namely, that Idoles haue no power to doe either good nor euill: for they bee nothing. Therefore let vs learne first of all to stick vnto the word, whereby God teacheth vs, and let vs followe our fathers, that is to say, those whome hee hath allowed and chosen, and set forth for our example to the intent that wee shoulde imitate them. The verie point whereto wee must beginne, for the hauing of a pure religion, both certaine and infallible, is the said doctrine: and secondly that we be confirmed by the gracious giftes and benefites which God bestowed vpon the olde fathers, yea and euen by those also whereof wee our selues haue had prooffe in our own persons. Let these things induce vs so much the more to giue our selues ouer vnto him: and therewithall let vs stande in awe of his threatenings, and likewise of his punishments, which we see executed vpon all wicked that haue forsaken him. That in effect is that which we haue to remember vpon this place.

Nowe for conclusion Moses addeth: The secretes belong to the Lord our God, and the things reueiled befor vs and our children for euer, so the end we shoulde doe the things that are written in this booke. This text is taken diuerse wayes: Some doe expounde it, that the secretes of our God bee reueiled vnto vs, and to our children: and that is a verie profitable doctrine, for it is saide, that the lawe containeth wonders that be incomprehensible to men, vntill time that hee hath opened their eyes. Therefore Dauid prayeth thus, Lord lighten me that I may beholde the wonderfull wisdom, which is in thy lawe. And indeede, we doe neuer by our naturall wit vnderstande that which is shewed by the worde of God; it exceedeth all that is in man. And that is the cause why this grace is so highly magnified in holie Scripture, that God dealt not with any nation, as hee hath doone with the Iewes: for that hee had not reueiled vnto them the secretes of his worde: but left them to walke in brutishnesse and ignorance. It is to a good purpose therefore to say, That the secretes of our God be reueiled vnto vs at this day, that folke might be the more moued to be attentue to the law, knowing that God hath vsed a speciall goodnesse towards them to whome he hath shewed himselfe so familiarlie; as wee haue alreadie seene in the fourth Chapter. But albeit y the same doctrine be verie good & profitable, yet is it somewhat strained, because of y words for the text is thus, The secretes belong to our God. And immediately after ther is a letter set downe, which is as much to say in our language, as, And the things that are reueiled belong vnto vs and vnto our children. Moses maketh heere a distinction, after which manner also it was taken by the Iewes, which rested vpon the letter, and they did well therein. For we must looke diligentlie to the letter, if we wil attain to the vnderstanding of anie text: but because they did not vnderstande the true sense that was in the same letter, they haue forged one that is altogether straunge, and haue played the beastes too much, for want of hauing an eye to the naturall sense of Moses. They say in effect, that the secretes Idolatries belong vnto GOD, and the apparant Idolatries belong vnto vs, and to our children: in writte, to punish them. In deede it is true that God punisheth priuie faultes, for hee reseruet manie sinnes to his owne punishing. We see that Idolaters do beare out their tongues, and make a nocke, when they haue rushed out into all manner of naughtinesse: for their inquitie is not yet ripe. Yet notwithstanding, God taketh order that some crime shall come to knowledge, and bee iustly punished, that they which see it, shall be compelled to say, that it was right. This is verie true. But Moses meant not so: for that were too bare a matter for this place. The thing that he meaneth in effect is this; That God hath his secretes to himselfe, and that vnto vs & vnto our childre he hath vttered his law, which is an apparant matter: as if he should say, y we must put a difference betwene that which is contained in holy scripture, and that which GOD hath hidden from vs, of which also we haue neither doctrine nor Testimonie. Wee must put a difference betwene those two things. True it is, (as I haue said) that all the doctrine of holie scripture surmounteth our capacitie, and is too high for vs, were it not that God did enlighten our mindes. Notwithstanding, howe soeuer the worlde goe with vs, yet when God vttereth a thing vnto vs, then hee calleth it an open matter. Why? Because hee woulde haue vs to applie our selues to the same. And therunto hee addeth a promise, that they shall not bee disappointed: according to this saying of his by his Prophete Esay: It is not in vaine that I haue saide, seeke mee; As if yee shoulde say: that all they which are desirous to be instructed in the worde of God shall knowe his will by the same, neither will hee suffer them to erre, or to bee deceiued. Thus ye see how

all things that God hath reueiled vnto men, are called open matters. And why? Because it is not a doctrine laide vp in bucker mucker, but a matter that ought to be known to all men. Nowe we vnderstande, what Moses meant. Vnder colour that wee must not be too inquisitiue of Gods secretes through too much curiositie, the worlde becommeth brutish, and is well appayed to haue some excuse of ignorance: the Idolaters yea euen the veriest idiots of them can skill to say, Let Gods secretes alone. And to what end? Verlie to the intent that men should seeke for nothing. O, beware, we must not know too much. No: but what meane you by that? For as for the things which our Lorde hath reuealed vnto vs by his worde, it is good reason that they should be known, and that wee should giue care to them, and be diligent to applie our indeuour to the same. If we passe our boundes, by beeing more inquisitiue than is lawfull for vs, wee enter into a maze. Thus see wee as now what Moses meant to say in this place, namelie that the people should not soade their owne ignorance, as men are wont to doe. My friends (saith hee) be well aduised; for the secret things belong to our God, looke what hee would not haue known, that hath hee reserved to himselfe. But as for the things that are reueiled; hee hath imparted them to vs, & to our children for euer, to the ende that we should doe the things that are written in this booke. Knowe yee (saith hee) that the things which are conteyned in his lawe, are profitable for the well ruling of our liues. And agreeably hereunto also Saint Paul saith: that all the scripture is profitable to teach, to exhort, to reprove & to make the man of God perfect to all good workes. Sith the case standeth so, let vs apply the exhortation of Moses to our owne vse. And first of all let vs marke well, that none be exempted for their ignorance, that is to say, that none shal haue anie excuse which haue disdayned to heare God when he spake vnto them. And why? If they say, these be secret matters; I answer, and hath not God published them? Yes, but they be about our capacite: let vs craue the spirite of vnderstanding, and it shall be giuen vnto vs. But howe soeuer it be, let vs not say, I am no clerke, I haue not bene at schoole; for behold, the lawe is set forth to all folke both litle and great; God woulde haue vs all to be instructed therein. Therefore they be apparant matters, which must be known to vs and to our children. And wherefore? Because it is for our profite. We shall there finde wherewith to bee edified, and wee knowe that God woulde haue our life to be ruled thereby. Let vs therefore be diligent, in such sorte as wee presume not to passe our boundes, when wee be desirous to be taught in the schoole of God. Thus much for one point.

Neuertheless God referueth his secretes to himselfe, from the which wee must absteine with all modestie, and submit our selues thereunto. Wee may not therefore doe as manie fantasticall heades doe, which couet to knowe this and that, whereof wee haue no reuelation in holy scripture. Wee must holde vs still when God hath not spoken of an vnknown thing and which is not conteyned in holy scripture. For it is the greatest wisdome that can be in men, not to be inquisitiue of further things than God hath reueiled vnto them, and simple to content themselves, with y<sup>e</sup> which they are able to conceyue. They (say I) which can thus holde themselves within their compass, be farre wiser than all they which pretende to knowe and vnderstande all things: and to be ignorant of nothing. Nowe we see it is an excellent place, in that the things which be conteyned in holy scripture be called open. And on the other side let vs keepe our selues in sobrietie and temperance, to the ende that if our mindes be tossed with couetousnesse, we may holde them as it were captiues, and not be too inquisitiue of the secretes of God more than is lawfull for vs. This matter might be discoursed more at length but that were an endless thing. It sufficeth to haue it in a breefe summe, namelie that as long as wee seeke to be instructed by the worde of God, wee cannot doe amisse. But on the other side, when wee will needes presume about our power, then are we out of the way, we take that vpon vs which God hath reserved to himselfe, the secretes things belong vnto him. And for a conclusion, let vs take an example of that which is fittest for this purpose. It is a wonderfull secretes of God and such a one as surmounteth all others, that GOD hath chosen men as seemed good to himselfe, and that before hee created the worlde, hee determined in his euerlasting purpose, whatsoeuer hee meant to doe, choosing and electing some to himselfe, and refusing the others. Well then, this is declared vs in holy scripture, and we ought to knowe it, notwithstanding that these mastiue dogges doe barke against vs, as wee see howe these wretches doe murmure against this doctrine, yea and blasphemie it. What say they? It is too obscure a doctrine, wee vnderstande it not. Well admitt it be strange vnto you, yet is it not to be graunted, that it should therefore take no place: but howsoeuer it be, it is God that hath saide it, and we must sticke to this saying. And if wee will needes knowe wherfore, as these pelting rogges doe, who in all matters behaue themselves spitefully against God, saying, I woulde knowe what is the reason, vnlesse God is vnjust. O miserable creature, whither runnest thou headlong? God sheweth that wee must rest vpon his holy will, and wee be not permitted to seeke anie further, but are commaunded to confesse that hee is righteous in all that hee doeth: and that hee hath compassed all things in iust weight and measure, so as nothing proceedeth from him, which is not wholie ordered with infinite wisdome and equitie. When wee be at that poynt, wee must sticke to it and behaue our selues soberlie. So then by this example, wee see howe men ought to behaue themselves and what mean they ought to keepe.

It is not for vs to play the doltes as the Papistes doe: but wee must vnderstand the things which God hath reueyled vnto vs, and then we must in likewise take heede that vnder colour that God hath reueiled his secretes vnto vs, we stie not vp into the aire, seeking to knowe this and that, and giue ouer our selues to sonde questions. Let vs seeke that onely, which GOD woulde haue vs to knowe, and let vs be ignoraunt of all the rest, yea and let vs be willingly ignorant of it, knowing that our true wisedome is to be learned alonely in his schoole. And further to the intent we may turne holy scripture to our more profite, we must haue an eye to edification, and referre all things to the learning of our saluation, as we haue said already.

Let vs nowe fall downe before the maiestic of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our finnes, beseeching him so to reforme vs, as wee may not linger vntill hee sende fourth his horrible vengeance vpon vs, but that we may prevent it; and that forasmuch as we haue heretofore offended him so many wayes, wee may returne vnto him, at the least when hee prouoketh vs thereunto, so as hee may be mercifull vnto vs for our Lorde Iesus Christes sake; and that we may haue our eyes open to beholde the doctrine which he setteth before vs, and our eares vnstopped to hearken vnto all the counsailes & corrections which he continually and incessantly bestoweth vpon vs; and that by this meanes we may be able to possesse all y<sup>e</sup> blessings which hee hath purchased for vs, and which hee hath prepared for his children and for all them that loue him. That it may please him to bestowe this grace not vpon vs onely, but also vpon all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Saturday the xi. of April, 1556.

29 The secretes of the Lorde &c.

WHen all these things bee come vpon thee, whether it bee the blessing or the curse, which I haue set before thee: and that thou remember them in thine heart, among all the nations, to the which the Lorde thy God shall haue cast thee out,

2 And doest returne vnto the Lorde thy God, and obey his voyce, according to all that I commaunde thee this day, thou and thy children, with all thy heart and with all thy soule:

3 Then will the Lorde thy God bring againe thy Captiues, and haue mercie vpon thee: and he will gather thee againe from all people, among whom the Lord thy God hath dispersed thee.

4 Notwithstanding that thou were cast out into the farthest parts of y<sup>e</sup> hauens: from thence will the Lorde thy God gather thee, and from thence will hee fetch thee.

5 And the Lord thy God will bring thee againe to the land which thy fathers possessed: and thou shalt possesse it, and he will doe thee good; and cause thee to growe much greater than thy fathers

WE must remember well what was treared of yesterday: to wit, that when GOD doeth imparte himselfe vnto vs by his worde, wee must bee attentiuē to receyue the doctrine that is conteyned in the same. For although that all that is declared vnto vs in hollie Scripture, be a farre higher wisedome than our wittes are able to attayne vnto: yet would not GOD that it shoulde bee kept hidden or secreete. Wherefore? For if we resort vnto him with lowlinesse, yeelding our selues as scho-lers, he will doe the office of a teacher; in such wise as his will shall bee altogether open vnto vs, nothing of all that is profitable for our saluation shall bee darke vnto vs, so we suffer ourselues to be instructed of G O D. But there bee two things which we must obserue: the one is, that wee bee not possessed afore hande with our-weening, as a great fort bee, which thinke theselues wise enough to iudge, & receiue no more of Gods worde than is to their owne liking.

 Let vs beware of such diuclish pride: and let vs subdue all our wittes to G O D. And wee must also vnderstande, that wee shoulde neuer conceiue the things which are deliuered vnto vs in his name, and from him, vnlesse hee himselfe enlightened vs: for wee bee blinde wretches, and there is nothing in vs but rudi-nesse and beastlinesse. G O D therefore must in this case worke by his holy spirit. On the other side, when wee reade the holy scripture, or come to heare the word declared vnto vs: let vs seeke to be edified thereby, and not goe about to satisfie our owne lustes and fookth appetites, as manie people doe, which vnhalowe the worde of G O D: for they trouble themselues with manie vnprofitable questions, and thinke that they haue doone much, when they shewe them selues subtil. But G O D woulde that his worde shoulde profite vs, and that it shoulde bee expressed in our life.
 Let vs remember those two pointes, and then we shall see by experience, that our L O R D protesteth not in vaine by his Pro-phete Esay, that where hee saith, Seeke mee, it is in good earnest, and that hee will bee founde: and that when hee speaketh, it is his will that wee shoulde vnderstande his do-ctine.

Lca. 45. 19.

Nowe if this were spoken in the time of the lawe, much more reason is it, that it shoulde bee verified at this daie. For wee know that Iesus Christ hath declared himselfe vnto vs more familiarly by his Gospell. Therefore let vs not be affraide, that things be too obscure for vs. For beholde our God allureth vs to profit in his schoole, and saith that it belongeth to vs and to our children, and that the things which hee hath reuealed vnto vs, are directed vnto vs, to the intent we shoulde aduise ourselues to walke according to his will. This is a thing that ought to encourage vs to seeke God, so farre forth as is lawfull for vs, according to the measure that he appointeth. And herein wee see what the malice of the Pope and of all his is, in shutting out al the world from the word of God: like as at this daie they do yet still exercise the same tyrannie, maintaining that the holie Scripture was made for none but Monkes, Friers, and Clergie men: so seemeth it to them. And yet haue they no care thereof. For they haue a diuinitie by themselves, which is as it were but a brawling of beggers. As for holie Scripture they leaue it at their heeles. Albeit that they despise it, yet they take out some worde, as it were by peeces and gobbets, and in the meane while suffer not the people to enter into the kingdome of G O D. They hold the keye to keepe the gate fast shutte, and like as they list not to enter themselves; so woulde they haue all others to bee shutte out. They say it is a dangerous matter to deale with holie Scripture, that it is a nose of waxe, that men may turne it which way they list, and that there bee so high secretes therein, as men may thereby enter into a bottomelesse pitte.

 In deede they haue made a playne mockerie of Gods worde; for they haue falsified it in such wise, as men can scarcely know the meaning thereof. If wee shoulde hearken vnto them, it is but a hodge podge, yet neuerthelesse wee see that it is the certayne and infallible truth of G O D.

And moreouer, albeit that the doctrine thereof bee high, and that wee are not able to attayne thereunto by our owne vnderstand-ing, yet will G O D neuer fayle them, that yeelde themselves lowlie and apte to learne.
 Hereby therefore wee see, howe the diuell reigned altogether in the Popedome, seeing they vnderstoode not what Moses meaneth in this place: namely that the doctrine of G O D which is deliuered vnto men, is not a hidden nor an obscure matter, but open and manifest, and that it is the lampe which must giue vs light, and the true myrrour wherein wee may beholde the face of our G O D, and whereby wee may bee transformed to the like-nesse of his glorie: yea in verie deede, so wee resorte vnto it with such vnfayned zeale and affection, as I haue tolde you of. But there are but fewe that vnderstande the thing which is here declared: and in deede, the greater part of the worlde is not worthise thereof: for wee see manie that doe continuallie holde on, and bee deafe eared, in somuch that although G O D speaketh loude and shirle; yet they doe wilfully despise him. Nowe then, let him that is ignorant bee ignoraunt still; See how Saine Paul skorneth all such as will needes bee wildeheaded, and not submit themselves quietlie to the obedience of Gods worde. Goe too, sayth hee, will you bee ignoraunt? Then bee ignoraunt. And wee see howe in an other place, hee sayth, that they which woulde not beleue the truth nor regarde the light of life and saluation, must needes be cast into horrible darkenesse: as we see many bee, which make a ieste of G O D. When they come to heare his worde, what reuerence yeelde they vnto it? It is rather a vayne curiositie: G O D must bee fayne to punishe such foolke, and to deprive them of the fruit which all the faithfull receiue, that is to say, that they submitte themselves vnto him, seeking nothing but the profite by hearing Gods worde and beholding the force which it hath in woorking.

Now therefore when we see y the word of God is after a sorte vnprofitable vnto many people, and

2. Cor. 2.16, and also a fauor of death vnto the misbeleueing which disdain to be partakers of the grace that was offered them; let vs nor starte aside for all that, but let vs heare our God, and in like wise be affrayde to bee punished, for our despising of such a treasure. Let vs benefite our selues by the doctrine of saluation. As how? Euen by yeelding our selues quietlie vnto G O D (as I said afore) to be instructed by him who sheweth him selfe to bee a teacher of the litle ones and lowlie ones: and seeking nothing but to bee edified through faith in the teare of his name, and in all godlinesse that wee may bee moued to call vpon him and labour to serue him. When wee be so minded; let vs nor doubt, but that hee will vtter vnto vs that power of his which is shewed vnto vs in this text.

And nowe Moses addeth a comfort to them that are afflicted, when they haue offended God and that hee vseth rigour toward them, and that is verie necessaric. For the lande of Chanaan was as a speciall earnest pennie and pawne to the Iewes, that G O D had chosen and adopted them for his people, they were separated there from the rest of the worlde, it was a lande that G O D had dedicated and reserved to himselfe, as if hee had saide, Here shal my name bee called vpon. The lande of Chanaan was, as it were, a mirrour of the kingdome of heauen, and of the euerlasting inheritance. When the Iewes were banished from that land, it was, as if G O D shoulde haue rooted them out of his house, and saide, I doe refuse you, and I renounce you: and that was enough to bring them in dispaire. On the other side, God promised to keepe them euermore with a fatherlie care, and to cause them to prosper continually. Therefore when they sawe themselves overwhelmed with many miseries, yea almost infinite, it was a kinde of driuing of them into dispaire, yea euen into vnmeasurable dispaire, as if God had forgotten them. Finally G O D saide that hee woulde bee their heade and their king; and that they shoulde be as a bodie gathered together vnto him. Nowe when they be dispersed vnder the Painym and the infidels, vnder the wicked and the despisers of the lawe, among people vnholie and vneleane: the rayning of such kinde of people ouer the Iewes, made it seeme vnto them that God had forsaken them, and that his whole adopting of them was lost; so as they should all haue perished in their afflictions, vnlesse they were comforted. And that was the thing which Moses aimed at. Hee sheweth them, that although God be harde and rough to them for a time, yet doeth hee not faile to remember that hee had chosen them for his people, of purpose to vse mercie toward them, yea, when the time serueth for it: howbeit not ouerhastily; but after that hee had well ramed them, so as in steede of rebelling agaynst him, they haue changed their minde to obey him. Nowe wee perceiue what is the meaning of Moses; And this is the more expressely and largelic shewed vnto vs, according as the Promise concerning y redeemer came more to light. For when God saide to Dauid, that the redeemer of the worlde which was promised vnto Abraham shoulde come of his seede, he confirmed and ratified that which we heare in this Text, saying, If thy seede do salaway and forget my lawe, and goe astray: I will (saith he) visite their iniquities, but it shall bee with the rodde of a man: I will punishe them, but it shall bee with measure, & I will neuer take away my mercie from them. This is a more large declaration of that which is sayd here, to wit, that God must needes so punishe the Iewes, after hee had long suffered their misbehaviour. And when they had shewed themselves vnreformable, hee must punishe them, howbeit in such wise, as there should yet bee reserved some mercie. And wherefore? Because he hath not respect vnto them simple, but vnto him selfe and to his owne trueth. Nowe wee must note that when God made his couenant with Abraham, as we haue already saide, the same was not for the woorthinesse that was in that people, neither was it for their desertes; but God grounded himselfe vpon his owne free goodnesse onely. Albeit that the people shewe themselves vnworthe, yet notwithstanding must G O D remayne alwayes firme in his purpose: according as Saint Paul also speaketh, saying, that the calling of G O D whereby hee did choole the linage of Abraham and sanctified it, is without repentance, and inchangeable. It is true, that the hypocrites, (as it hath also bene treated of,) haue bene punished according as they were woorthie, and yet Gods continual keeping of his promise profited them nothing at all. And why? See here howe it came to passe, God had chosen the linage of Abraham; that people fell away from him, and hee punished them: according as their malice did increase and augment, euen so were their punishments alwayes the sorcer, vntill they came euen to the extremitie, in somuch as God seemed euen to haue forsaken them, and to haue cuted them off from his house. And when he hath doone so, then wrought hee after such a sorte, as there remaineth yet some seede hidden vnder the grounde, and in time will hee make it manifest that hee forgetteth not what he had saide, namelic that in the seede of Abraham all nations of the earth shoulde bee blessed. Loc heere a handfull of people whom God keepeth, euen after an incomprehensible maner. And after, ouer of this, he raised a great multitude of people vntill that Iesus Christ himselfe was come. Bee the wicked and the contemners of God and his lawe escaped thereby? No, God hath punished them. But nowe must we benefite our selues by this doctrine. For albeit that our Lorde Iesus Christ hath appeared for the saluation of the worlde; yet must the Church remayne vntill the ende: wee haue the promise that cannot faile. But in the meane while wee see the thanklesnesse which is too common in the worlde, yea and it so ouerfloweth the worlde, that GOD must needs withdrawe his goodnesse, and exclude vs from being partakers thereof, because wee haue thrust him farre from vs. And that is the cause of the desolation which is to bee seene still in the Popedom at this day. The Papisites woulde shielde themselues against GOD and his worde, by alleading that it is vnpossible that God should forsake his Church: yea, but in the meane while they doe not vnderstande howe they misbe-10 haue themselues against him, and are gone away from him, and cannot suffer him any way to come neere them. And why? Because they drue away the Gospel from them with swoorde and fire, so as Iesus Christ hath no place with them, nor access vnto them. We see therefore, howe GOD at the first blushe seemeth to 20 roote out those whom hee had called, and nothing is to bee seene but confusion, as if the Church were lost, and vtterly wyped out of the worlde. Yet notwithstanding God keepeth his owne, hee knoweth howe to accomplishe his promise; which is, that the state of the Church bee cur continuing; and we see the markes of it. For when it was to haue bin thought that there was no more truth in the worlde, and that the ser-30 uice of GOD had bene altogether brought to nought, hee did set vp some doctrine againe. In dede the number of them that beleeue the Gospell is little; yet neuertheless it is a matter that exceedeth all expectation, and it woulde neuer haue bene thought, that hee would haue wrought after that fashion, against all hope: in-40 somuch that (as it is said in the Psalm) it might bee saide that it is as a dreame, if a man consider howe the Gospell hath bene set vp againe. Yet notwithstanding it falleth out that the wicked, & they that are wilfully bent to euill, gaine nothing by that which God doeth, for it is to their more confusion: but the faithfull haue wherewith to comfort themselues, when they 50 see that God doeth chastise them; for they perceiue that hee doeth it not of purpose to forget his mercie, or for that hee meaneth not to vse it towards them. Loe here a staffe to stay vs by, when God chastiseth vs for our finnes. For one filippe of his singer were enough to bring vs to ruine, and to throwe vs into the deepest doungeon of death. As soone as GOD doeth but blowe vpon vs, (saith the holy scripture,) 60 bee a man neuer so freshe and flourishing, by and by hee withereth and droopeth. And what then shall become of vs if wee bee smitten with his mighty hande? Must wee not needes bee worse than miserable? Here therefore wee bee admonished to stay our selues vpon some comforte, or else wee shall bee vtterly vndone as soone as God giueth vs any token of his anger. Hereby wee see howe profitable this doctrine is for vs, where hee saith, that when God scourgeth thee, yet hee will not forget the promise which hee swore to thy fathers: and albeit that thou bee thrust out into the vttermoost partes of the worlde, yet neuertheless the 70 Lorde will gather thee againe into this lande

Psal. 126. 1.

Psal. 104. 29

which he hath promised thee for thine inheritance. As often therefore, as God punisheth vs for our finnes, be it that ech of vs haue his priuate distate or wretchednesse or any other token of the wrath of God: or else that wee be generally scourged with the plague, with warre, with hunger, or with anie other affliction; first let vs acknowledge our sins, and be sorie that we haue 10 offended our God, and prouoked his wrath against vs; and heere vpon let vs also bee alwayes resolu'd in this point, that he will not so punish vs, but hee will yet giue place to his goodnesse and pitie, and that we shall finde mercie at his hande, when we condemne our selues, and confesse our offences, and beseech him to receiue vs into fauour, not for our desertes but in respect of the coneuant which hee hath made with vs, because hee hath chosen vs to be grafted into the bodie of our Lord Iesus Christ. And like as in olde time hee declared by circum-20 cision, that the Iewes were a people sanctified vnto him, euen so hath hee nowe giuen vs baptism, whereby he maketh vs, as it were to be of his flocke, and wherein wee haue a warrane that the bloude of our Lorde Iesus is our cleansing, so as wee bee thereby washed from all our vncleannesse. Hauing this, let vs come boldlie to our God, for we haue here wines that he will receiue vs.

But to the ende that this doctrine may bee the better vnderstoode, let vs followe the order which is kept by Moses. When all these things (saith hee) bee come vpon thee, whether it bee the blessing or the curse. Hee setteth the blessing foremost, to shewe that the ende wher at 10 GOD doeth alwayes same, is to drawe vs vnto him by gentlenesse, and after a gracious and a louing manner. In dede if hee should deale with vs according to our kinde, hee should bee rough vnto vs at the first: but hee prooueth whether hee may winne vs by faire 20 meanes, and therefore hee doeth alwayes vtter his goodnesse towards vs, and maketh vs to feele it. That is the cause why Moses saith, Thou shalt first see the blessings, and haue experience of them. And in that respect also is 30 GOD called gracious, liberall, long suffering, and slowe to anger. This word therefore must bee well weyed: for Moses sheweth what the nature of GOD is towards vs, to wit, that hee desireth nothing but to handle vs gentlie as a father doeth his children, and that hee taketh not anie pleasure in dealing with vs roughlie. Thus much for one 40 point

And on the other side, hee meant to doe the Iewes to vnderstand, that seeing they had had experience as well of the one as of the other, that is to say, as well of Gods fauour and of the benefices which hee had promised them, as also of his punishmentes and corrections: the same ought to giue them the more 50 light, and confirme them the better in the thinges which they hadde hearde, and that they had not beleeued. As for example.

Psal. 104.

The

The Iewes were taught, that if they serued God and obeyed him, hee woulde keepe them as his flocke and haue a speciall care of them, and as it were dandle them in his lappe, and bestowe all his richesse vpon them, and finally deale with them as they coulde wiche: And likewise they were threatened on the contrarie side, that if they transgressed the lawe of God, and were wilfull and frowarde against him, they shoulde be driuen to feele his hande against them; and like as they had fought against him, so hee also woulde fight against them, Thus yee see howe the threatenings are declared vnto them as well as the blessinges; and they cared neither for the one nor for the other, but played the brute bestes, and tooke leaue to deale wickedlie: insomuch that when G O D chastised them, they regarded it not. Neuertheless, in the end it must bring them to consideration of themselves, when they make comparison after this manner; As howe? God hath verified it vnto vs, and shewed it as it were with his finger that he hath not said in vayne vnto vs, I wil blesse you if you walke in mine obedience. We haue perceiued it by experience. Again, as touching the threatenings, hee hath put them in execution, and we haue bene blockish for a time, but yet it behooueth vs now to consider the matter. Thus yee see howe the blessinges being ioyned with the punishments serued the better to bring backe the Iewes vnto God: and therefore they ought to haue touched them the necer to the quicke. And that is the thing which Moses ment in saying, Gods chastising of you when you haue doone amisse, is not the onely way whereby hee will instruct you. In dedde hee will punish the you, but that is not the onelic meane whereby hee intendeth to teach you. For he wil first make you to feele his goodnesse and patience, and when you haue considered both twain of them, then is it time or else neuer to call your selues to remembrance, and not to continue still brutish and senselesse as you haue bin afore. That is the thing which we haue to mark in the first place.

Nowe lastlie hee saith, When God hath cast thee out among the strange nations, if thou turn thee vnto thy heaue, ( That is the worde which Moses vseth, but hee taketh it for remembrance ) so as thou turne againe with al shine affection vnto the Lord thy God so obey him, hee will then haue pittie on thee. Whereas he saith that the people shall be driuen out of the lande, it is the vttermost of all the punishments whereof hee had made mention afore, according to that which we haue already touched, namelic that the lande of Chanaan was as it were a warrant, that G O D rooke the Iewes for the householde people of his realme, of purpose to leade them from thence to the inheritance of the kingdom of heauen. Nowe on the other side, when the Iewes were driuen out of the saide Lande, they were as people aliened from God. Alas [ might they say ] what a case is this? For our God which stretched out his hande to bring vs out of the lande of Egypt, did promise vs therewithall that we shoulde possesse all the lande that hee gaue to our father Abraham, and that it was vnto vs a token and a mark of his Adoption: but now be we deprived thereof, and that is a token that hee hath vterlie forsaken vs. Vpon this forewarning we haue to gather, that seeing God, (after meane punish-mentes) did not onely promise and offer his mercie vnto the Iewes, but also euen when the rigour seemed extreme, and the woundes incurable, yet hee left them some hope, howbeit not vnto all, but vnto such as were reserved for seede (like as wee haue seene here before, and is also treated of aswel in the first chapter of Esay as also in the tenth). The same may serue vs to great purpose. For when our Lorde punisheth vs but meanely, wee take courage to returne vnto him: but if hee continue to punish vs a long while, and it seemeth that hee hath quite cast vs off, and wee perceiue nothing but rigour: then wee be so beaten downe, that wee bee not able to open our mouth to call vpon him, and wee be so caught with feare and sorowe, that wee hadde leauer to pine away in our miseris, than to returne vnto him. To the ende therefore that wee may fare the better by it, because men bee so vtterward to be brought vnto God, when hee afflicteth them roughlie: let vs marke wel what is saide in this place. Although that G O D doe smite stroke vpon stroke, although it seemeth that hee is determined to ouerthrowe altogether: yet notwithstanding hee doeth still call vs backe vnto him, and woulde not haue vs to be fainthearted. And therefore let euerie man stirre vpp himselfe, and although hee bee at his wittes ende as they say, so as hee woteth not where to become: yet let him not cease to take hearte in consideration of this promise and to say, No, although I were brought to the sbotome of the graue, yet doth my God call me backe to him, and tellen mee that seeing I am touched with repentance, he will haue mercie on mee to forgive mee all my sinnes. This therefore is it that wee haue to marke further in this place.

Nowe Moses sheweth what is true repentance, saying: If thou doe turne vnto the Lorde thy G O D with all thy minde. For euen the wickeddest, after God hath ouermastered them, will not sticke to say, wee haue doone amisse, and they will seeme to bee chaunged. But as soone as God giueth them anie releasement, by and by they are worse than euer they were before. Or if they doe not shewe at the first dashe, that they bee rebellious against G O D, yet doeth their hypocriste disclose it selfe at the last, and it will appere that there was a hidden sore within, and that there was nothing but filthie matter. To bee short, there are verie fewe, that turne themselves to G O D, though they bee admonished by neuer so many afflictions. Therefore hath Moses in this place defined true repentance: and the same ought to serue vs for manie purposes. Let vs first of all marke, that when God doth punish vs we thinke it enough to be smitten with one stripe or twain. O, say wee, In deede I haue offended: but seeing I doe acknowledge my sinne, shoulde God persecute mee yet still? Hee seeth y I am a frayle & a wretched creature, what would he haue more than the confession of my faulte? But we looke not on the other side, that our hartes bee still hardened in wicked affections, and that it is become of vs, (according as the Prophet complaineth) They turne vnto mee, howbeit no longer than whilst I doe punish them: for afterwarde they are worse, or else they become as bad as they were afore. Seeing then that the case standeth so, let vs learne, that when God, after hee hath punished vs once, doeth hold on, and the plague increaseth vpon vs; it is not without cause that hee doeth so. For hee perceiueth that there is yet a hidden naughtines in vs, like as a Physitian perceiueth well that although a disease bee mended in outward appearance, yet the roote thereof is not quite taken away. The sicke person coulde well find in his hearte to bee let a lone: but hee doeth still carrie the disease about him although hee feele it not. Let vs therefore learne to yeelde our selues patiently to the corrections which God sendeth vs. If they continue longer than wee woulde, and our affections cannot abide it: wee ought so much the more to turne vnto him, specially with all our hearte as Moses saith. Therefore hee saith by his Prophete Ieremie, If you turne, turne vnto me, ye children of Israel. For hee seeth that this worde repentance is abused by men: for it rowleth in their mouth, and euerie man maketh a kinde of cloake thereof; as wee see the Papistes doe, which call it a spoing of penance, when folk make crosses, or take a crosse vpon their backe, or besprinkle themselves with holy water, or say amea culpa, or fast a certayne day, or trotte on pilgrimage, and doe all other such abominations. Our Lord perceiuing that these are all but mockeries, saith, It is to mee, it is to me that you must turne. As if hee shoulde say, Am I a little babe, that you shoulde bring mee babies to please me, and to make me pastime withall? No: but knowe yee that I am the liuing GOD which searcheth the hartes and knoweth all the thoughtes of men; and though there be neuer so much doublenesse in you, you shall not be able to deceiue me. Assure your selues therefore that I am hee to whome you must conuert. And in that respect doeth Moses speake here of the whole heart. Let vs consider then that to pacifie the wrath of God when wee haue prouoked it, euerie of vs must enter into himselfe and so examine all our thoughtes, as wee may be no more giuent to our owne sensualitytie; and that if we goe about to be wise in our conceytes, it shall come to nought, and God must haue the gouerning of vs by his worde, and ouerrule our affections, that they may be bridled, and for as much as they boile against God, and resist him, let vs thrust them vnder foote: for we shall neuer bee able to dedicate our selues vnto God, vntill we haue forsaken al our owne lustes, which be contrarie vnto him. Thus you see how men must examine their hartes, to come to GOD indeede, and to haue a right and a true repentance, such as is heere mentioned by Moses.

And nowe he addeth afterwarde, If thou doe then call to remembrance. Wherein yet better than before, he sheweth the fruit of the chastisements which GOD doeth sende vs. And that is alwaies to the ende to induce vs to suffer afflictions patiently; for we be like lide children; as y Apostle saith in the Epistle to the Hebrewes. As long as a father holdeth the rodde in his hand, & scourgeth his childe, there is nothing but weeping & sobbing: and euen so is it with vs. But if we coulde consider of the ende of our afflictions; to witte, that they be a furtherance to our saluation, and doe stand vs in steede of medicines, (as we haue already said) then were we too much vnthankfull if we coulde not finde in our hartes to bowe downe our neckes to him and say: Lorde conuert thou vs at thy pleasure seeing thou knowest that we haue neede thereof, and makest it profitable to our saluation, and doest not shew thy selfe altogether a rigorous Iudge. Moses therefore prouoketh vs thereunto by telling vs, that although the people of Israel hauing bene afflicted, perceiued not at the first that their sins were the cause why they were cast into farre countries, and as it were rooted out of the Church, and by all likelihoode vtterly reiected of God: yet shoulde they at length beginne to perceiue it. And therefore let vs learne to looke alwayes vnto our GOD when he scourgeth vs; and if we haue forswolde to do it, yet when he holdeth on still, let vs then at leastwise remember him, seeing that he doth still visit vs, and let vs not be wilful stubborne.

But indeede this is not common to all: for there be many which continue stowarde, and are vtterly cut off from the Church, and from al hope of saluation. And therefore seeing that the world is vnreformable, Let vs looke wel about vs that wee be not comprised in the number of the: and when God maketh vs to feele his wrath, let vs so feele it: as if cause vs not to despise him, & to vomit our blasphemies as many do; but to bring vs in minde of our sinnes, and to make vs ashamed of them; and moreover, that therewithall wee may bee assured to finde mercy in our GOD: for without that, it is impossible that wee shoulde haue anie desire to turne vnto him. As for those which thinke that God will not be mercifull vnto them, albeit that they doe acknowledge their sinnes, yet will they squatte them downe in their filthinesse, and they can neuer be deliuered or dispatched from thē. And why so? Because they runne away from God, neither is it possible to make them to come neere him; for that they haue none vnderstanding of his fatherly goodnesse, nor bee acertained that he is readie to receiue them vnto him. Hereby wee see, howe the diuell hath reigned and yet doeth reigne in the Popedome. For they talk much of repentance, but the wretched sinners are still left in doubt. In deede they they giue them many plaisters; howbeit not to purge away the inward vncleannes; but rather to qualifie, and to sweeten the fore on the outside; which inwardly continueth still: whereupon they become drunken with this foolish opinion, of satisfying God, & that thereby they deserue and make full amends. Thus the wretched Papistes doe their endeuour to reconcile themselves to God, but with what certaintie? None at all: all is haphazard. Againe they alleage the keys of the Church; but those keys, bee Pardons, Satisfactiones, and Indulgences, and Merites before God, but no promise at all. Nowe contrariwise wee must vnderstande, that, for to haue true repentance, it is behouefull that God doe declare vnto vs his fatherly loue, and that in making our repaire to him we bee fully certified that we shall not be disappointed, nor haue the gate shut against vs. How so? Moses hath spoken obscurely of the Redeemer, for the time was not yet come that the plaine declaration should bee made thereof. At this day Iesus Christ doeth call vs, and wee vnderstand what the Apostle saith; namely, that Gods Throne is not dreadfull and terrible vnto vs to make vs afraide: but that it is a Throne of Grace vnto vs, to the which we may boldly approach. Nowe then let vs acknowledge the inestimable good which God hath doone vs, in drawing vs out of this maze of the Popedome, and in telling vs, that hee is readie to receiue vs to mercie, and to deale with vs like a father, notwithstanding that we haue bin rebellious children towards him. Thus did Moses meane in this place.

Yea and for a more confirmation thereof he addeth, Although thou wert dispersed into the uttermost coastes vnder heauen, yet the Lorde thy God will fetch thee from thence, and bring thee againe into this lande which he hath promised thy fathers, and there hee will in case thee more than euer thou wast. Moses doeth here shewe that wee must not mistrust God, albeit that there bee nothing but troubles, myseries and calamities, so as wee bee vtterly forlorne. Let vs haue an eye to this comfort. For ye see here howe y<sup>e</sup> people of Israell was like a bodie torne in pieces, and driuen away as dust before the winde: and yet notwithstanding God doeth promise to gather them together againe. Nowe seeing hee hath wrought so with them; wee must vnderstand that he will doe the like toward vs at this day, and that although we were dispersed, he will not fayle to holde vs vnder his protection, so as we shall be gathered together againe, if Iesus Christ doe the office of a Shepheard towards vs, and wee bee of his flocke. And hath he not in decde accomplished towards vs that which is spoken heere? Wee must consider, not onely howe God hath gathered vs in, when wee were vnder the tyranny of the Pope; but moreouer howe he hath assembled vs heere in a flocke: wee must vnderstand that wee bee heere vnited all together, as if wee were of one houtholde. Whereas we were dispersed and aliened from our Lorde Iesus Christ, he hath now reunited vs to himselfe. For as Paule saith to the Colossians, his office is to gather all thinges together as well in heauen as in earth. So long as wee be cut off from the vnitie of faith, and aliened from Iesus Christ, wee bee like dust driuen with the winde, and in such confused state haue wee bene, but God hath deliuered vs from it. As often therefore as wee come into extrenitie, let vs vnderstande that God woulde haue vs yet to turne vnto him, and will giue vs furtheraunce thereunto: wherefore let vs plucke vp our hartes, following the exhortation that is giuen vs heere.

And by the way Moses sheweth that GOD doeth it not for any recompence which he looketh for at the peoples hand, but for loue of his owne free choise, and for his promise sake, by the which he bounde himselfe when he swore vnto Abraham to giue vnto him and his that land for their inheritance. Therefore when wee turne vnto our God to aske him forgiveness of our sinnes, if we woulde haue him moued to shewe vs mercie: wee must not come vnto him vpon presumption of our merites; we must not thinke to obtaine grace by our owne satisfactions, or by our good workes, or by any other means; but wee must be wholly grounded vpon this, that it hath once pleased him to receiue vs vnto him, and also declared by his dooinges, that he will holde vs for his children, seeing hee hath giuen vs Iesus Christ; by whom wee obtayne forgiveness. When wee bee once grounded vpon this free mercie, let vs not doubt, but that our Lorde is alwayes present and readie to receiue vs to mercie. But if wee doe swaue neuer so litle from that way, wee shall so stray that in stead of approaching vnto God, wee shall goe further from him. That is the thing which Moses meant to signifie, in making mention of the othe, wherby God had sworne to their fathers that he woulde giue them the lande. Likewise if at this day wee perceiue the Church to decrease, yea euen so farre as it may seeme to be nothing; let vs vnderstande that GOD will multiply it, seeing hee hath made that promise, at leastwise if wee returne vnto him according as it is heere spoken. And seeing he hath iustified the knowledge of his mercie in the land of Chanaan, let vs not doubt at this day, but that to bring vs into the heritage of the kingdome of heauen, he will shewe himselfe much more stedfast, yea and vtter such power in our behalfe, that albeit wee see neuer so many lettes, as it were to shutte the way of saluation against vs, from the which euen our owne finnes doe turne vs away; yet shall the goodnesse of GOD get the vpper hand, so wee bereaue not our selues of it altogether through our owne vnthankfulness. Seeing then that we doe heare such exhortations, let vs enter into examination of our sinnes, and let euerie of vs confesse howe many wayes hee hath offended his God, and let all of vs in generall doe the lyke with one common accord. And when wee haue mourned and sighed for them, let vs then pray vnto our good GOD, to touche vs to the quicke, that wee may not onely come and confesse our finnes with our mouthes, and with certayne ceremonies, but also returne to our GOD with heart and m<sup>i</sup>nde, so as he may asswage our plagues, griefes and afflictions, through his infinite goodnesse, which hee hath manifested vnto vs by his Go spell, and wee turne vnto him with sure and infallible confidence, to obtaine fauour at his hand.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the Maiestie of our good GOD, with acknowledgement of our faultes: beseeching him to cause his admonitions to profite in vs more and more; and that seeing he hath once called vs vnto him, he suffer not his labour to bee lost in afflicting vs so many wayes, but that wee may finally returne vnto him: and that in so returning wee may yeelde fourth true righteousnesse and soundnesse, so as wee double not ne play the hypocrites. And that to accomplish this thing hee make vs to feele and to acknowledge his fatherly goodnesse, that wee may bee altogether giuen ouer thereunto, and haue our eyes and all our senses so fixed on our Lorde Iesus Christ, as wee may vnderstand that it is by his meanes that wee must obtaine mercie of GOD, of the which wee bee vnworthie as touching our felues. That it will please him to bestowe this grace not onely vpon vs, but also vpon all people and nations of the earth, &c.

6 And the Lorde thy God will circumsife thy heart and the heart of thy seede, that thou mayest loue the Lorde thy GOD with all thine heart and with all thy soule, to the ende that thou maist liue.

7 And the Lord thy God will lay all these curses vpon thine enemies, and vpon them that hate thee, and which haue persecuted thee.

8 Thou then shalt returne, and obey the voyce of the Lorde, and doe all these Commaundements, which I commaund thee this day.

9 The Lorde thy GOD will make thee plentifull in all the woorkes of thy hande, in the fruite of thy wombe, in the fruite of thy Cattell, and in the fruite of thy Lande to thy welfare. For the Lorde will reioyce agayne ouer thee to doe thee good, lyke as hee did reioyce ouer thy fathers.

10 If thou obey the voyce of the Lord thy God, in keeping his Commandementes and his ordinaunces written in the booke of this Lawe, and returne vnto the Lorde thy GOD with all thyne hearte and with all thy Soule.

Hereto Moses in promysing y<sup>e</sup> God would vouchsafe such fauour on his people, as to blesse them, hath spoken but of the thinges which concerne this present lyfe, as of bodily health, 50 of soode, of peace, and of preseruatiou from their enemies. But nowe hee speaketh of a higher and a more excellent matter, to wit, that GOD will chaunge the heartes of them which before were euil and froward. And that is a farre greater thing than to giue vs onely meate and drinke, and whatsoever else is to bee desired for the flesh in this transitorie lyfe. Wee haue moreover to gather out of this text, that whereas the holy Scripture requireth vs to doe that which God demaundeth; it is not because wee haue the power to doe it: for GOD doeth not measure his commaundements after our power: albeit that wee be weake, yet neuerthelesse wee bee bound vnto him: but when he hath shewed vs our ductie, it belongeth to him to giue vs the grace to accomplish it. And this text doth shew it vs very well: for we haue seene it heretofore, (and Moses doeth yet againe confirme the same.) y<sup>e</sup> men ought to turne to God; that they ought to feare him with all their heart and with all their soule; & that they ought to obserue his law. Now when we heare this, we may iudge that if men will imploy themselves, & take a good way, it is in their libertie, and they haue free choise to gouerne themselves well if they list: and the Papistes in deede doe abuse themselves with such Textes. For as soone as they heare that God commandeth; they do forthwith conclude that wee are able to put all in execution. But we see howe Moses speaketh thereof. He saith, Thou shalt keepe the commaundements of the Lord thy GOD, to loue him with all thine heart and with all thy soule; and then he addeth, It is the Lord that will giue thee such a minde, & such an affection. Also he saith in another place, 30 Circ-

Deut. 10. 16.

Circumcise your hearts this day vnto the Lord: and now he saith, It is the Lord that will circumcise thine heart. It is his very office. We see then, that when God giueth vs his lawe, it is not bycause we are able to attaine to the accomplishment of that which is containyd in it: but it is ynough for vs to vnderstand wherein we bee bound vnto him: and that knowing once our infirmitie, we resort to the remedie; euen to pray him that he will supply our default. But they may heere reply, that Moses meaneth not, that onely G O D should altogether change men, and reforme their hearts: for this place seemeth to shew, that God will ayde men, when they haue some good motion, and be disposed to serue him: and that it is so, he saith, Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy heart. But yet hee addeth, And the Lord wil make thee to loue him. It seemeth therefore that Moses placeth some good disposition in men, and that they doe begin on their part, and that thereupon God helpeth them and addeth that which they want. Thus do the Papistes turmoyle themselves, when men alleage vnto them whatsoeuer is spoken in holy Scripture concerning the grace of God, as y<sup>e</sup> it is he which inlighteneth our conscience, it is hee that giueth vs the knowledge to discern good from euill, it is he that giueth vs wisdom to walke as becommeth vs, it is he that giueth vs power to resist temptations, it is he that wealdeth & guideth our hearts in his obedience; it is he that giueth vs the power and vertue to continue: when men tell them any of these things, O [say they] it is true that men doe not all; for, seeing that they be weake, God must ayde them: but yet doeth it lye in them to guide themselves, and to haue some good preparation; and moreover it lyeeth in them also to followe the grace of God and to receiue it; and hauing accepted it to make it to preuaile. To be short, the Papistes make a parting of stakes as if it lay in vs to seeke God, & then that it were in vs to put his grace in effect, in such wise as it should not be vnprofitable, and that there is also a certaine agreement betwene God and man, so as God for his part doth one peece and we doe the other, yea and the principall part. But the meaning of Moses is nothing so. For he sheweth not what belongeth to man, as in compassion and in respect of God. But it is the common fashion of the holy scripture, first to shew vs what is our dutie, and then to adde that although we be not able to resort vnto God when he calleth vs, yet we must not be faintharted at y<sup>e</sup> feeling of our weaknesse: but rather resort vnto him that is able to helpe it, according as he hath promised to do it. Let vs make wel then, that when holy Scripture speaketh of that which men doe owe vnto God, we must nor in that case stand feanning of our owne power and ability: for we shall not faile to be euermore detters, as we haue said: and yet we must note also, that the vnabilitie which is in vs, proceedeth of our fault. Yet notwithstanding the Papists alleage, that it were a crueltie in God to require of vs to do more than we can. It seemeth indeed, that God ought to be contented; if a man doe what he can. Now then if we cannot haue a good desire, and if we haue yet lesse power, that we cannot so much as thinke a good thought; wherefore doth God constrain vs to loue him perfectly? There seemeth to be no vpriight dealing in y<sup>e</sup>. But we must repaire to our originall sinne, which hindereth vs so as we serue not God no nor haue not the will to serue him. Indeede God hath imprinted a will in vs by nature, and for as much as we are me<sup>e</sup>, we haue a discretion to discern good and euill, whereby we be inexcusable: and when we sin, it commeth not of compulsion, neither are we forced by other meanes; but it proceedeth of our own will and inclination. But now let vs see whether our wil can bend it selfe both the waies, and is able to chuse either good or euill? No. For we be captiues vnder sinne: and whence cometh this captiuitie and bondage? From the offence of Adam. Seeing therefore that the euill is in our felues; wee must not seeke for sonde and vnprofitable excuses, for we shall win nothing thereby; but let vs stoope and condemn our felues. If God therefore require aught of vs, he doth vs no wrong; and yet notwithstanding, men may not reply that they be feeble and weake, for the euill shall euermore be imputed vnto them, & they shall be found guiltie thereof. But now let vs come backe to the matter which we haue touched. The holy scripture setteth before vs the lawe of God as y<sup>e</sup> thing which we ought to follow; and that is our rule. We for our part doe draw cleane contrary. Wherefo then serueth the law of God so long as it is but a dead letter, that is to say, so long as we haue but our eares beaten therewith, or so long as it is written but in paper & parchment, or in stones as this was, as it is in deede so long as it is but preached vnto vs? It serueth but to our condemnation, so as we be there conuicted and can no more pleade ignorance: but rather shew our felues open rebels, in that we bow not downe our neckes, to receiue the yoke which God hath ordained for vs. That is the cause why the lawe of God vnder Moses did bring nothing but wrath. Therefore he saith y<sup>e</sup> it doth augment sinne; and consequently that it is vnto vs the messenger of death. So then, let vs marke well, that whereas God teacheth vs what wee ought to doe; albeit y<sup>e</sup> the same doctrine ought of it selfe to serue vs to saluation: yet neuerthelesse it bringeth vs nothing but condemnation, euen because of our sin. Such is the falling out of it; but howsoeuer y<sup>e</sup> case stand, yet must the law of God alwaies condene vs. Now after that God hath conuicted men, & beaten downe their pride, to the intent they should not presume of themselves; he addeth the promise, and saith: Go to, it is true y<sup>e</sup> your hearts be incircumcised, it is certaine y<sup>e</sup> you haue blind motions, and that you be corrupted in all your nature: but I will change your heartes, I will renew your mindes, I will reforme you to my selfe: whereas heretofore you haue been rebellious against me, & there hath bin nothing in you but malice; henceforth there shall be a readines to obey my lawe. God giueth that very promise, whereby hee sheweth that whatsoever hee commaunded vs afore, our doing thereof shall be by his only power, & not in any part by our own.

In this case it is not for vs to father the cheefe part vpon our owne free will, no nor the one halfe neither, for God must haue all the prayfe without exception, and that whatsoever we doe, doe proceede of his working of it in vs, and of his reforming of our wittes, and of his changing of vs. And for that cause the holy Scripture sayth, that we be made newe creatures. When it sayth so, doth it meane that men were earst good? No, but that GOD doeth reforme them. And in deede if it were in vs to amende our soules, and to renewe them; wee shoulde doe more than GOD doeth. GOD hath created our bodies and also our soules; but yet notwithstanding, what bring wee from our mothers wombe, but all maner of cursednesse? For (as I haue sayde) wee be infected with originall sinne. Thus doeth GOD make vs mortall men; yea, but in the meane whyle, there is this mischeefe, namely, that wee be aliened from him and from all goodnesse. Nowe if men were able to deliuer themselues out of the curse wherein they bee, and could giue themselues a newe power: shoulde not they then doe more than GOD hath doone? Nowe then whereas Moses sayeth in this place, The Lorde will circumcise thy heart to loue thy GOD with all thy heart and with all thy soule: hee sheweth thereby that if wee doe amisse, (as we doe indeede,) wee cannot haue so much as any one good motion to come vnto GOD, vntill wee be altogether renewed by Gods working in vs; and therefore that we must not be faint hearted. Wherefore? For when he hath taught vs what we ought to doe, he giueth vs also the power to performe it. After hee hath taught vs by the voyce of men, hee teacheth vs also by his holy Spirit in our heartes; and that teaching is of efficacie; so as wee doe not onely knowe the good, but also wee haue a desire to followe it and to giue our selues ouer vnto it. And that is the cause why hee sayeth that we be drawn vnto him. And indeede Moses sayth not, The Lorde will circumcise thine heart, to the ende that thou mayst bee able to loue him, but hee sayth, to the ende that thou loue him. Hee sheweth that GOD doeth not onely giue vs the power to will well, but also doeth throughly fastioun vs to the same. And that is a further point wherein the Papistes doe abuse themselues too grossely: for when they speake of the grace of the holy Spirit, they vnderstande that GOD in deede giueth vs the power, if it seeme good to vs: but yet that all the same lyeth in our discretion, and that GODS working in vs is not in such sorte, as that both our listning and our performing proceede both thereof. But it is too nygardely a speaking of the grace of GOD, that he should say vnto man, Well, I wil giue thee power that thou mayst doe well, if thou wylt: but I wil lay the bridle on thy necke, and when thou hast a good will, and that of thy selfe, if thou hast constancie and power to put it in execution: thou mayest well doe it, and I will helpe thee therein. If GOD shoulde doe so, what shoulde become of our saluation? For can men in such fraylie as wee doe feele, and amiddest so many combattes as Sathan doeth deliuer vs, haue one onely firme and constant will? It is impossible. Moses therefore sayeth not, that GOD will circumcise our heartes, to the intent wee may haue power to feare him: but hee pureth the thing in effect, to the intent that wee shall feare him; after which manner also hee speaketh by his Prophetes, as well Ieremie as Ezechiel. Hee sayeth, that hee will put his feare in our heartes. Hee sayeth not that hee will giue them power. And then will I make them (sayeth hee) to walke in my commaundementes. This is it that GOD doeth attribute vnto himselfe, to wit, that hee will so imprint his Lawe in our heartes, as wee shall haue a will agreeable vnto his: and then hee will guide and gouerne vs in such sorte as wee shall ouercome all temptations, and accomplish that which hee commaundeth vs. It belongeth not to vs then, to challengee such prayfe to our selues. Thereby wee see that the Papistes deale treacherously in all the doctrine of freewill: for all their whole seeking is to robbe GOD of all that euer the holy Scripture declareth to bee his, and which hee reserueth to himselfe, and to spoyle him of his honour, vsurping it euerie man to himselfe. Let vs therefore beware of this diuinish arrogancie, and let vs vnderstande that Saint Paule hath not sayde without cause, That is GOD that worketh in vs both the wyll and the deede. Saint Paule sayeth not after the manner of the Papistes, that when God giueth vs the meane, wee may bee able to will that which is good, but hee sayeth, that hee will put the will in vs. And then hee addeth, that GOD in likewise doeth worke the matter, that is to say, hee accomplisheth the good woorkes in vs: and the whole is performed (sayeth hee) after his owne will. Therefore, whereas the Papistes saye that GOD hath respect whether wee bee able to vse his grace well or no: and that according as euerie man behauech and gouerneth himselfe, GOD dealeth with him thereafter: Saint Paule sayeth that it proceedeth altogether of GODS good pleasure. And yet it is not therefore to bee sayde that wee bee blockes of wood. But let vs marke well what Saint Paul concludeth, that is, that wee must walke in feare and warincesse, working our saluation. What? Is it in vs to doe it? No: but hee sheweth that wee bee instrumentes of GOD, and that when hee giueth vs the wyll and power to performe, it is bycause that euerie one of vs shoulde offer himselfe to doe his indeuour, howbeit vnder the leading of the holy Spirit, acknowledging that all of it proceedeth from aboue: and Saint Paule sayeth that wee must doe it with feare and carefulnesse, to the intent wee bee not vnprouisable; and yet that in the meane while, there be not any drop of presumption in vs, to suppose that wee haue any abilitie or power of our felues, but that GOD bee honoured as hee deserueth. Nowe wee see, what is the naturall sense of this Text, where Moses promifeth vnto the Iewes that GOD will circumcise their hearts. Thereby hee sheweth that it is not ynough for men to haue the Lawe preached, and to haue their eares beateu therewith, and to vnderstande what their duetic is: for all that will be but as a dead thing, vntill the time that God doe change their heartes, and reforme them, and worke within them; and that the affections of men and their thoughtes bee guided by the holy Ghost.

And by the way hee sheweth heere the vse of Circumcision, which is another poynt worthie to bee marked. For the fantastical felowes of our dayes, which woulde take away the Baptisme of litle children, neuer vnderstode the vse of Circumcision. It seemed vnto them that it was but a temporall matter, yea and a tryfling thing, and that it was not spirituall for the auncient fathers: in so much that the cursed heretike which was punished in this Towne, mocked all the Sacramentes of the Lawe of Moses. Abraham [sayd hee] had but a shadowe of the heauenly lyfe; and albeit that hee was named the father of the faithfull, and it appeareth, that hee did altogether stay himselfe vpon the celestial heritage: yet was hee not touched therewith, neither dyd the fathers knowe GOD, but worshipped an Angell which was there in a visible shape in steade of GOD. These bee the horrible Blasphemies, which insue when men doe so separate the Lawe from the Gospell. In deede wee haue at this day a grace which surpasseth that grace which GOD shewed to our fathers: but yet must wee not so bereaue, Abraham of the spirituall kingdome of our Lorde Iesus Christ, as to make Circumcision to bee but an earthly Sacrament. Therefore let vs beare well in minde, that when GOD ordayned Circumcision, besides that it was a seale of the righteousnesse of sayth, (as Saint Paule sayeth in the fourth Chapter to the Romanes:) it did also shewe vnto men that they ought to bee mortified, and renewed by regeneration to the obedience of GOD. Whereby wee may gather, that Circumcision signified the same thing vnto the Iewes, which Baptisme importeth vnto vs at this day. What haue wee in Baptisme? That wee bee blessed in our Lorde Iesus Christ; and that whereas wee haue nothing but accusednesse by the heritage of Adam, wee be sanctified to bee adoped into the celestial heritage, so as God by iustifying vs, doeth accept them which were not carit woorthie to bee numbered amongst his creatures. Againe, wee haue also a similitude and a portraiture of death, that wee myght bee changed to serue our GOD. The same was likewise in Circumcision: and Moses doeth shewe in this place, that it was not a vayne figure. It was not a marke that GOD had set vpon his people, but onely to say, You are a chosen people, and in the meane whyle they shoulde haue thereby no promise, nor warrant of their saluation, nor of any thing that was spirituall. But contrariwise in saying that GOD will Circumcise their heartes; hee sheweth that this Sacrament, this visible figure of Circumcision, declared vnto them that they ought to bee changed, and that they ought to be a holy people vnto their GOD. And therefore let vs learne that Baptisme at this day succeedeth circumcision, like as Saint Paule sayeth in the Epistle to the Colossians. After hee hath shewed that Circumcision remaineth not at this day as touching the outward vse: hee sayeth that wee bee Circumcised, not by the hand of man, but in that wee bee buried in the Baptisme of our Lorde Iesus, whereby the olde man is mortified, that from henceforth the spirit of God may governe vs. Thus yee see what we haue to obserue in this place, as touching the first poynt. Therefore let vs marke, that although the fathers which lyued vnder the Lawe were as litle children vnder their Tutors and Overseers: yet were they the children of GOD as wee are; and had the verie same promise of saluation, and the Sacramentes which GOD deliuered them, tended to the selfe same ende, and so consequently were spirituall. Thus much concerning one point.

Nowe furthermore it is heere shewed vnto vs, that Circumcision did not onely signifie vnto the Iewes, that they shoulde bee a holy people vnto GOD, and that they shoulde change the malice of their heartes: but it shewed also that God would do them the fauour to regenerate them by his holy Spirit. As at this day in Baptisme, when the water is powred vpon the head of a litle childe, it is not onely to signifie, that beyng come to mans age hee must serue GOD, and yet notwithstanding is not able to doe it vnlesse it bee giuen him from aboue: but the infant is baptised by the hande of another, and the hand of the Minister is, as it were the hand of Iesus Christ, to whom onely it doeth appertaine to Baptise, as Saint Iohn sayth: Wee in deede doe Baptise with water, but his office is to Baptise with the Spirit and with fyre. Therefore let vs marke it well that when the Minister layeth the water on the chldes head, therein hee representeth the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ, witnesing thereby, that our Lorde Iesus will bee so gracious to as many as beleue and are chosen of GOD his father; as to drawe them to him and to governe them, so as they shall become newe Creatures. And euen so is it with Circumcision. Abraham in deede was circumcised; but that was after an extraordinary manner. But yet ordinarily it behooued men to bee circumcised by the handes of them that were appointed thereunto: and those did represent the person of God. It was therefore a testimonie that men of themselves could not be circumcised, but that it was necessarie that God shoulde put his hande thereto, and that he should change them.

Seeing

Seeing it is so, let vs marke, that in all the Sacramentes wee bring nothing of our owne, but that wee doe rather come to receiue that which is offered vnto vs in the name of GOD. The Sacraments then be not meritorious matters, that men might alledge any seruice that they had done; but rather come to seeke that which they want. Whereby wee see the foolishness that is in the Iewes: for they boast themselues of Circumcision, as if it had bene a great vertue, and woulde needes bring it in reckoning, as if God had bene beholden vnto them, by cause they were circumcised. To be short, whensoever deservings and grace came in question, the Iewes pretended that they were not faued by the free goodnesse and mercie of God. And wherefore? To what end serued y circumsion? It serued for a testimonie, for an earnest, for a visible signe, to declare y it is God that doth all in vs. But these miserable beastes vnderstand not that. See here I pray you the vnthankfulness of men; which hath taken place nor with that nation onely, but among the christians also, where y goodness of God hath bin vttered much more at large. Behold, our Lord Iesus Christ callerh vs vnto him, he telleth vs that we must seeke all our welfare in him: & yet the Papistes haue not ceased to distinguishe, and to seeke out a worke, which is wrought on mans part as they terme it. They haue yeilded that the principall part of the Sacramentes is a diuine worke; but yet neuertheless they sticke not to say, that men doe bring thereunto somewhat of their owne. And no maruaile. For we see to what point they are come; namely that they haue chaunged the Supper of our Lord Iesus Christ, into a charme, and a diuells forcerie. Thus saide Iesus Christ; Take. Eate: he commandeth vs to receiue it: & the Papistes make God to beleuee, y they do offer it vnto him. And further they stablish thereupon a worke of merite, euen the most excellent y cuer they could dreame of. Buryer for all that we see how y diuell hath bewitched them, so as they haue changed y whole order of nature. For in sted of receiuing y thing with humilitie which God offered them; they haue presumed to offer vnto him the things which they haue forged in their owne braine: & doe make themselues beleuee, that all those things are acceptable vnto him, yea and that he is very much beholding to them for so dooing. So much the more therefore doth it stand vs in hand to mark that which is spoken here, namely, The Lord thy God will circumsise thy heart. So then, seeing God hath shewed vs what Baptisme doeth signifie, let vs vnderstande howe it is our ducie to reforme vs, and to renounce our owne nature to serue GOD. But doe wee once knowe that? Then let vs proceede to the promise that is giuen vs, which is, that by cause wee can doe nothing, GOD sayth that he will put to his hand, that wee may be chaunged, and become new creatures, through his holy spirite. This is in effect that which wee haue to obserue in this place.

Nowe Moses addeth, That thou mayst lyme, not that God dealeth with vs according to our deservings: but because wee be slouthfull, therefore he addeth this promise, namely, that wee shall be blessed of God: and whatsoever he hath sayd to make vs to walk in his obedience, it is to shewe vs, that wee must walke in such sort, as wee prouoke not the vengeance of GOD against vs, if wee will bee blessed of him. It is true that hee may alwayes punish vs by good right: and that although hee guide vs, and that wee haue a good will to serue him, yet is there such imperfection in vs, as wee bee euermore faultie before him: but yet hee forbearerh vs. And therefore when these things be put together, namely, that GOD maketh vs to walke according to his Lawe, and that hee doeth it to the ende that wee may lyue; it is all one as if it were sayde, that men bereaue and spoyle themselues of the grace of GOD, by cause they are wicked, and liue not as becommeth them. And therefore God is fayne to redresse it, and to drawe them vnto him, and to reforme them, and by that meane to make them to inioy all his blessings.

Nowe hee addeth thereunto, That hee will reioyce ouer them for good, as hee reioyced ouer their fathers. This is a manner of speeche that importeth much. In deede GOD is not subiect to our passions, to reioyce after the manner of men, there is no such matter in him; but hee speaketh thus, for that hee coule not sufficiently expresse the loue which hee beareth to vs, but by such similitudes. The thing then which the holy Ghost meant, is that GOD holdeth vs so deare, and beareth vs such feruent loue, that a father reioyceth not more when hee is able to aduance his childe, or when he can doe him good, than GOD reioyceth in vs, when hee hath occasion to doe vs good, as who woulde say, that his affliction, and scourging of vs doeth grieue and vex him, and that hee doeth it contrarie to his inclination. For hee requireth nothing but to finde vs alwayes disposed to receyue the riches which hee hath in his hande, which also hee is readie to bestowe vpon vs. And therefore doeth GOD borrowe the same similitude of men. For (as wee haue sayde) hee is not like vnto vs, neither must wee haue so fond imaginations, as to thinke that hee is moued with passions cyther one way or other; but to the intent to manifest vnto vs, howe much hee loueth vs, hee crieth alas, when hee is to afflict those to whome he meaneth to doe good. Alas [sayeth hee] must I auenge my selfe as of myne enemies, and reioyce mee in vexing them? Hee calleth them his enemies, and yet hee speaketh still of the Iewes, whom hee had cholen: but hee presupposeth that they made warre against him, and that therefore hee was driuen to be reuenged of them: howbeit hee declareth that it was to his griefe. Let vs therefore learne to taste of this loue whereof the holy scripture speaketh vnto vs; that we may be foriuisht therewith, as to desire nothing more than to submit our selues to our God, which is in deede the thing that hee shooteth at.

Col. 2. 10.

Matr. 26. 28

Isa. 41. 13.

Wherefore is it that God forceth himselfe to shewe vnto vs so vehement an affection? It is to mollifie the hardnes of our hearts, that we may be enflamed with an other maner of zeale than wee haue. Will we then enioy our God? Let vs giue him occasion to doe vs good, let vs (I say) suffer him to be mercifull and liberal towards vs; when wee hinder not God to doe vs good, wee protesteth that he is glad of it. And contrarywise, when we lay a barre in his way; so as he cannot vnto vs his gracious goodnesse towards vs, in powering our his benefites vpon vs as hee for his parte is ready to doe: hee sayth, that we grieue his holie spirit. For after that manner speaketh the Prophet I say. They haue grieued the spirit of God (sayth hee.) Nor that God is subiect to vexation of minde, as I haue sayd already; but it is to shewe that men are so much the more faultie, and to cause them to abhorre their naughtinesse the more, when they bee thus rebellious against him, and cannot suffer him to doe them good. Moses dooth adde moreouer, Because thou shalt haue hearkened to the voyce of the Lord thy God. Here hee commeth againe to the order of speaking; for it is enough that hee hath tolde vs in one worde, that because wee bee not able, God promiseth to doe it. Yet neuertheless hee continueth his office: and as hee was the lawegiuer ordeyned of God, so doeth hee require the people to walke vprightly. That is the cause why hee vseth still this speech, saying: Because thou shalt hearken to the voyce of the Lorde thy God, yea and that thy hearing shall bee to keepe that which is contained in the Lawe. Heereby he meaneth to shewe vs, howe wee shoulde obey God, that is to say, by what meane. And as touching the ende, wee haue seene heeretofore what it is: namely that hee requireth obedience at our handes, to the ende hee may haue occasion to deale with vs gently, and after a fatherly manner, and that hee desireth nothing but to powre out his great treasures vpon vs. It is then to our profite and saluation that wee shoulde obey him. That is the ende, and the meane is, by hearing his voyce. We must therefore beware that wee rebell not against him, nor bee deafe eared when hee speaketh vnto vs, except wee meane to grieue him, as hee sayeth in the Psalme. Bee not rebellious as your fathers were, which prouoked Gods spirit euey day. There God complaineth that hee was prouoked to wrath, when that the people grieued him, and that hee was saynto enter into a disliking of them. So then, let vs holde this rule that is deliuered vnto vs, whereby to enioy our GOD, that hee may cause vs to prosper. The meane whercof is, that whilst hee speaketh vnto vs, wee haue our eares attentiuely to receiue his voyce. And Moses doeth therewithal, expresse what is the manner of hearing God well. For there are a great many which bring Asses with them: they can wel ynough say that the things which are spoken are true, like the Ass which can well ynough nodde with his eares. So it costeth them nothing to say, it is all good,

I like well of it: but yet they bee not a whit touched at their heartes, nay rather, wee see they despise all that is tolde them; and they suppose that God is beholding vnto them, when they haue not openly spoken against him, nor blasphemed his doctrine. But Moses requireth an other manner of hearing farre differing from this: namely The performing of the things which are contained in the lawe. It is sayd in an other place, that Iesus Christ auoweth them to be blessed which heare the wordes of G O D and keepe it. And there our Lorde Iesus Christ speaketh the more grossly, to the intent we might be the better enformed: for we forget things, and we think that if we confesse the Law to be good, righteous, and holy, wee bee then discharged; But our Lorde saith, that wee must first heare and then keepe. And Moses ioyneth both together, as in deede, to heare and to keepe, are things which ought neuer to goe a sunder. Yea, but yet therewithal hee giueth men a perfect rule, so they yelde to bee taught of him; and they shall not neede, (as wee haue seene here before) to turne either to the right hand or to the left. Therefore let vs marke that the doctrine of the lawe dooth teach vs what is good, and that thereby G O D meaneth to informe vs playnely of his will, that wee may bee pliable to bee taught, and submit our selues obediently vnto him. They then which inuent one thing or other of their owne braine, and would doe as they list: doe shewe that they rather serue their owne affections, than G O D. Therefore to order our lyfe well, wee haue none other rule but that which is giuen vs from aboue, nor any other than the very same which is containd in the Lawe of God. In deede men doe euermore confesse that nothing ought to be done which is not agreeable vnto Gods will: but yet for all that, they forge and deuise still some new invention or other. And that is because they thinke that God hath not in his Lawe declared vnto vs, all that hee requireth of vs, and that hee woulde haue vs to itay altogether vpon that. And therefore Moses sendeth vs backe to that which is set downe heere: as if hee shoulde say, Men must not take vpon them to adde any thing in this behalfe vnder colour that the same is well pleasing to G O D: for I tell you that whatsoever God requireth and alloweth, hee dooth declare it in his Lawe: content your selues therefore with this doctrine, and bee not wiser than needeth, seeing that your G O D hath taught you perfectly. For the better confirmation hereof hee sayth, Because thou shalt be conuerted to the Lorde thy God, with all thy heart, and with all thy soule. He sheweth here, that before wee can heare G O D, or keepe his lawe, and bee obedient vnto him: wee must bee conuerted vnto him. In deede hee speaketh so such as were already swarued: But yet the nature of men is so in generall, that euen from our mothers wombe wee bee all of vs backlydets, and enemies to G O D, and there is nothing in vs but viter frowardnesse and rebellion. God therefore must bee faine to change vs from the roote. For he shall neuer get good suite out of vs, vnlesse the roote be first changed. Now this worde Conuersion, or Turning importeth, that, whereas man hath his backe turned vpon God, he must turne againe toward him with his face: and that is all one as if the scripture should speake of a change; as it is in lyke wise sayde that wee must bee renewed. Wee must therefore consider, that if wee haue the witte to suffer our GOD to teach vs, it is a token that wee are going toward him, and that wee bee willing to shewe the feare, obedience, and subiection which wee owe vnto his Lawe: But yet wee must come to this poynnt, of conuerting or turning backe. And wherefore? For vntill men doe knowe themselves, how can they so order their lyfe, as it may be acceptable to God? Wee must vnderstand that wee bee altogether vntoward, and wee must beginne at this poynnt, that whereas we haue bin lyke strayed beastes, we must come and submit our selues to our God. And for that cause the Prophet Ieremie saith, that the thornes which bee in vs must bee plucked vp, and then the good seede shall haue place: as if a place were full of thornes and bryers, and euill weedes, the same could not bee sowed, neither could any plough goe there to put in the good seede: and therefore it must first bee stubbed and rid cleane. And that is the cause also why the Apostle setteth downe the same similitude, according to that which Moyses meant to shewe in this place, in somuch that hauing treated of the feare of God, and of obedience to his lawe, hee dooth purposely speake of Conuersion, saying it is needefull that men shoulde bee changed. And hee sayth, with all the heart and with all the soule, shewing that the repentance which God requireth of vs, is that wee shoulde serue him vntainedly, according as all the Scripture declareth. For men bee giuen to hypocritise: It is enough with them to haue a certaine faire shewe and outward appearance, and it seemeth to them that Gods payed. But he regardeth not that which is faire to the eye: hee would possesse our hartes and affections, that is the principall poynnt. Meane we then to direct our lyfe in such sorte as it may bee allowed of GOD? It is not sufficient to occupie our handes, our feete, and our eyes, and to order our outward lyfe vnblyably, so as men may finde no fault therewith: but also our thoughtes and our affections must bee altogether changed, as Saint Paule also declareth, that the same is our reasonable seruice. Renuc yourselues (saith he.) He speaketh neither of handes, nor of feet, but of al your vnder standing & of al your soule; you must of necessitie be changed, if you desire that God should accept the offering which you make vnto him of your lyfe. Herein we see how much the Papistes be deceiued, when they speake of repentance. For among them repentance [or as they terme it, Penance] is but the dooing of trifling toyes, as to goe woolwarde, to trotte on pilgrimage, to doe other gewgawes, to cause some Masse to bee sayde, or to bestowe some Almes. That is the thing which the Papistes doe comprehend vnder this worde Penance. But the holy scripture saith that men must conuert, that is to say, bee chaunged. There is no worde of gadding hither and thither, neither is there any talking of the making of any outward countenance; but that there must bee this renewing. And it declareth yet farther, y<sup>e</sup> the same renewing must be of our hart, and not onely of our hart, but also of all our whole heart; as if it were sayd, that God accepteth no sayning, but rather vterly abhorreth it. True it is that we cannot haue a heart so perfect as is requisite, it shall want much thereof: neuerthelesse, wee must mislyke of all sayning, and not be double minded: And wee must enforce our selues to fight against all our wicked affections, and not cease vntill our God doe raigne ouer vs as wee serue him, not vpon compulsion and in outward shewe, but of a free good will, and as setting all our delight in his Lawe, according to that way which Dauid sheweth vs by his owne example.

Nowe forasmuch as wee bee so farre off from this perfection, and so guiltie before our God, as hee may iustly cast vs off altogether: let vs come and with all humilitie fall downe before him, beseeching him that it may please him to haue pitie vpon vs, and to receiue vs to mercie in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ, blotting out our faultes and offences, and not to respect what wee haue deserued: But rather to vse his infinite mercie, that wee by that meane may bee reconciled vnto him, and nothing may hinder him to make vs to feele his grace and to guide vs by his holy spirite in such sorte as wee may bee all wholly his, and hee possesse vs, and cuermore vpholde vs, as wee haue neede, vntill he hath thoroughly reformed vs, and vterly ridde vs not onely from the imperfection of our fleshe; but also from this mortall body it selfe, to bring vs into the glory of his kingdome. That it may please him to bestowe this fauour not onely vpon vs, but in lyke wise vpon all the people and nations of the earth, &c.

11 For the commaundement which I commaund thee this day, is not hidden from thee, nor farre off from thee .

12 It is not in heauen, that thou mighteſt ſay, which of vs ſhal go vp into heauen and fetch it vs, to make vs heare it that we may doe it?

13 Neither is it beyond the Sea, that thou mighteſt ſay, which of vs ſhall goe o-uer the ſea, and bring it vs, that we may heare it and doe it?

14 For this worde is very nigh thee, euen in thy mouth and in thine heart, to doe it.

Merebefore in the laſt Chapter, Moſes had put a difference betwixt Gods ſecrets and the law, ſaying that if wee bee learned in Gods worde, we ſhal alwayes find ſuch doctrine as is behou-full for our ſelues and for our children . And in the ſame place hee proteſted , that God ſpeaketh not in ſuch darke manner, as men cannot vnderſtand what hee meaneth : but that he expreſſeth his wil faithfully, to the end they ſhould haue good and conuenient inſtruction to their ſaluation . Nowe continuing his purpoſe, he ſaith farther , that the Lawe which he had declared, is not a ſecret doctrine, nor farre diſtant from the people, ſo as they might reply, ſaying :
 Who is hee that ſhall paſſe ouer the ſea? or who is hee that ſhall mount vp aboute the cloudes? No, ſaith hee, the worde is ſet downe before thine eyes , thou haſt it in thy mouth and in thy heart : and ſo is there no place at all of excuſe through ignorance : wherefore turne that grace to your profite ; otherwiſe there is nought elſe to be looked for, but dreadfull condemnation before God vpon all them that continue in their blindneſſe ; for here is that true light which ſhould guide vs in all the courſe of our life . Wee ſee what Moſes meant in this Text ; euen to exhort them to whom hee had deliuered the Lawe, to be attentiuē to the ſame . Now for that purpoſe , he promiſeth them that in ſo doing, they ſhould not ſpend their time in vaine, but that if they would apply their ſtudie to bee edified in the worde of God, they ſhould finde ſufficient for that purpoſe . On the contrarie ſide, he pronounceth a terrible threatening againe all them that goe about to ſhede theſelues with ignorance . For there remaineth no more excuſe after that G O D hath ſpoken . If this were ſaid in the time of the Lawe : howe much more conueniently may it bee ſayd to vs of theſe dayes ? For wee are not ignorant that God hath ſhewed himſelfe vnto vs more familiarly, than to them to whom Moſes ſpake : they had onely that which remaineth vnto vs to this day . But ſince that time, God ſent his Prophets, which haue more largely expounded y things, that were briefly and darkly mentioned in the lawe . After all this, the Lorde Chriſt our ſauour is come into the worlde, and hath accompliſhed that which was ſpoken by the Apoſtle in the Epiſt. to the Hebrues : that God had ſpoken after diuets manners vnto our fathers, but nowe laſtly, he hath ſhewed himſelfe by the mouth of his onely Sonne, giuing vs a final con- cluſion of all Propheſies, and euery maner of doctrine . We heare alſo how our Lorde Ieſus ſayth : that many kinges and Prophets had longed to ſee and to heare that which his diſciples ſawe and heard, and that they found not that fauour . This alſo is ſpoken vnto vs . So then let vs marke well that the reproofe which Moſes layd to the Iewes whom hee taught, ſhall turne to our dreadfull condemnation, if we profit not in the ſchoole of God, whiles he taketh the care and trauaile to teach vs . Nowe for one point wee haue to note what is ſayd here : namely, That the word is not hidden nor farre from vs, ſo as wee might ſay : who is hee that ſhall paſſe ouer the Sea? who is hee that ſhall mount vp aboute the Cloudes? By theſe wordes God ſheweth, that when his word is publiſhed, it is not in vaine . as it is alſo ſayd by his Prophet Eſay . Wee conclude then, that the doctrine of God is not of it ſelfe ſo incomprehenſible, that wee haue not abilitie to conceiue it : but that it is a perfect light whereby wee may beholde the way of ſaluation, as hereafter ſhall be ſhewed . It is ſuch an orderly kinde of teaching, as no body but our ſelues is to bee blamed, if we be not edified as we ought to bee, and ſo farre forth as is neceſſarie for vs . See here then I pray you the Teſtimonie which God giueth vnto his worde : namely, how it is not a iarring that cannot bee vnderſtoode, but a playne speech, to the end that men might be brought vnto him, by knowing what is meete and expedient for them, by discerning betwixt the good and the cull. Nowe seeing that God speaketh thus of his worde, wee must not doubt to finde that which hee saith. For otherwise we shoulde make him a lye: but hee shall be found faithfull, and our selues condemned of Blasphe- mie. Let vs marke farther, that the promise which God maketh vs, is infallible, to the end that wee should stand fast, and not wauer with any doubt or scruple, if wee suffer our selues to be taught by him. Then let vs but yeelde our selues teachable, and sure it is, that God for his parte, will not suffer vs to dwell in suspence, nor our mindes to wander, and to goe on groping like blinde folke. There is full certaintie of knowledge, if wee become good scholers to God, and resist him not as robbers. And here a man may see the froward vnthankfulnesse of the Papistes, which would make men beleue, that they should not venture to reade the holy scripture, nor once be so hardy as to looke into it, because it is so high and so deep a thing. y men shall be forthwith caryed away into many errors and many fancies. It is very true that men doe abuse the trueth of God: and we our selues doe see, howe they turne the trueth into lyes: But yet to impute the same vnto Gods word; it were a diuclish blasphemie. And therefore let vs learn that we must fertle our selues wholly vpon that which is shewed vnto vs here. For God himselfe dooth assure vs that in his worde we shall finde the right vnderstanding of all things that are expedient for our saluation. Thinke we that our good God will deceiue vs? Let vs therefore abhorre the excuse which the Papistes doe holde, of purpose to dwell, to nestle, yea and altogether to totte in their ignorance, But contrariwise, let vs trust and wholly rest vpon this promise, knowing that God doth vs an inestimable good turn, whensoever it pleaseth him to let his worde before our eyes; and to deliuer it to be preached in our eares. Now then, whensoever God giueth vs his knowledge, let vs vnderstand that he will not haue such a treasure to be lost or to perish: but that we should receiue it, and turne it to our comoditie. But herewithall we haue to mark also, that vntill God haue spoken and taught vs in his schoole, we haue neither learning nor wit, but are as stray cattell, and at a worde vterly foisorne. It is not therefore without cause that Moses saith: The commandement which I giue thee, is not hidden from thee, nor farre off, so as thou mightest say: Who shall goe vp to heauen? Who shall passe ouer the Sea? or who shall goe downe into the deepe? Hereby he giueth vs to vnderstand that if God doe pluck back his word, so as we know not what hee requireth of vs, nor haue any testimony of his will: then may wee well seeke about lyke people in perplexitie, crying alas, what shall we doe? Who is hee that shall goe vp about the clowdes; who is hee that shall goe downe into the deepe? Who is hee that shall passe the Sea? To what end? There is no other instruction at all, wheteby God giueth vs any certaine, and infallible direction. When wee be thus destitute, wee be as lost people, hauing neither way nor path to leade vs, we can discern nothing. Howe much soeuer men doe attribute to their owne wisdom, supposing themselues discrete enough to rule themselues all their lyfe long: yet are they brutched beastes, vntill God haue shewed them his will. Thus much for one poynt.

Nowe it is fatter to be vnderstood, that if GOD come not first to vs, wee haue no meane to come at him. Who is he that can giue vs wings to mount vp to heauen? Or howe shall wee be able to passe ouer the deepe? Although we had the knowledge of all secrets of nature: well might we trauell all the worlde from place to place, and well might we mount aloft vnto the very skyes: and yet in the meane while wee shoulde want the cheefest thing of all, which is to vnderstand the trueth of God; for that surmounteth al the wit of man. Let vs learne therefore, that God in his infinite goodnesse, percauing that we haue no meane to approach vnto him: giueth vs an easie access thereto. Yea and hee commeth downe vnto vs, to fashion himselfe to our rudenesse and infirmitie. We see howe he dooth (as ye would say) stammer with vs: for hee speaketh not in such loftinesse, as might well seeme agreeable to his infinite glory & maiestie; but the phrase of holy scripture is grosse and rude; by the which God speaketh to vs in such plaine manner, as there remaineth no excuse for vs, if we vnderstand him not plainly. Seeing it is so, let vs vnto this maruailous goodnesse which God hath bestowed on vs, and let vs holde vs to the same: and therewithall let vs also acknowledge our owne ignorance, that wee may humble our selues: for the very cause why so fewe folke doe profite in the holy scripture; is their owne overweening, in that they be forepossest with an imagination of their owne wisdom and sharpnesse of wit: and so being drunken with their owne conceite, they alwayes despise the worde of GOD. Let vs therefore humble ourselues, for wee knowe that God nameth himselfe the teacher of the lowly and of his ones, to the ende wee shoulde not come to the hearing of his worde, as people puffd vp with our owne greatnesse, fondly furnishing our selues to be men of great abilitie to discern: but that our whole wisdom should consist in obeying him, in considering that seeing hee hath stooped so lowe vnto vs; it is not for any of vs to aduaunce himselfe. And seeing wee haue no wings to mount vp aloft, let vs take heede that wee attempt it not: for so may wee fall and breake our neckes, mount wee neuer so little.

But let vs marke moreover, that his promise dooth importe also a condemnation to them that haue their eares continually beaten with the worde of GOD, and yet remaine hardhearted still, and receiue no profite thereof at all. In deede the Gospell (wherein the Law of rightcoulnesse is conteyned) is preached continually:

2. Tim. 3. 7.

continually: and if wee be of that sorte which S. Paul speaketh of, which are alwayes learning and neuer come to the knowledge of the truth; thinke we that wee bee excusable before God? Surely no. It will come to passe that whatsoeuer we haue at any time heard of the worde of God, the same must come to reckoning and we shall be proued of vnthankfullnesse, because great treasure shall haue perished without any benefite vnto vs. Wee shall not haue heard that Sermon in all our lyfe, which God will not lay to our charge at the latter day: as how? How haue you profited by it? Wee haue not heard one lecture, that shall not bee recited vnto vs. Let vs therefore bee well aduised, and whilst the Lorde is willing to teach vs, giuing vs faithfull expounders of his worde, and desiring so familiarly with vs: let vs for our parte bee diligent to receiue it, and embracing the doctrine that is deliuered vnto vs, let vs shewe our selues more and more conformable to the same: not alldging the obscuritie and depth of it therefore, as the Papiſtes doe, which goe about to shield them with their ignorance, saying that the holy Scripture is too high and ouer deepe to bee conceiued. It is true that the holy scripture is too high and too deepe: but that is in respect that wee be wrapped in mistie darkenesse. But it is the office of GOD to inlighten vs; as wee shall see hereafter. Howsoeuer the matter standeth; let vs assure ourselves of this, that if wee yeelde our selues pliable to Gods direction, he will instruct vs faithfully in his worde, so as wee shall feele it to bee neere vnto vs. But yet is this neuer accomplished in vs, vntill our Lorde instruct vs by his holy spirit, together with the preaching of his worde by the mouthes of men. And that is the cause why Saint Paul in the x. Chapter to the Romans sayth, that this sentence is to bee applied to the Gospell. At the first sight, it woulde seeme that S. Paul tooke it contrary to the meaning of Moses. And for prooffe thereof, doth not Moses in this place speake of the Law? Hee saith: The commaundement which I ordayne for thee this day. In saying, this day, hee speaketh of his office. Nowe his office was to bring the Lawe and to publish it. It is sayd in the first of Iohn, that the Lawe was giuen by Moses, but grace and truth were giuen by Iesus Christ: It seemeth not then that this can in any way agree with the Gospell. But if we marke it well; wee shall finde it good reason, that Saint Paul saith, that this poynt is not verified, vntill wee come thoroughly to Christ. And why? Let vs take Moses to witnesse without going any further. Wee haue seene here afore, that in fourtie yeeres space after the setting forth of the Lawe, the people had profited nothing in it. The reason thereof is this: 60 For thy God hath not giuen thee an vnderstanding heart, euen to this day. Wee haue the Lawe beate into our eares, and yet in the meane while wee are still dullheaded, and conceiue not the meaning of Gods speech. This (as I haue sayd afore) proceedeth not of a y faulte

Rom. 10. 6.

Iohn. 1. 17.

Deut. 29. 4.

ÿ is in the Law, but of our owne wretched blindness: As the Sunne is as bright to the blinde, as to all other men: but yet they bee not able to receiue lyke benefite by the light thereof: Euen so standeth the case with vs. (Thus much for one poynt.) Inſomuch that as long as God speaketh to vs but onely by the mouthes of men: It is but losse of time. And wherefore? Because wee are deafe, wee are blinde: wee are dullheaded; neither is it sufficient for vs that the commaundement bee layd directly before our eyes: that wee neede not to mount about the cloudes; and that wee neede not to descend into the deepe to seeke for it: for it must bee in our mouth and in our heart. But how shall we haue it in our mouth and in our heart: Soothly euen by Gods putting of it there by the grace of his holy spirit. Saint Paul therefore presupposeth this grace to proceede from God peculiarly toward his elect; that he not onely offereth himselfe freely vnto them, (which manner of speech Moses also did vse when he sayd, God sheweth vs his goodnes after a special manner:) but also imprinteth it in our hartes, making vs to vnderstand what he sayth, by giuing vs the spirit of knowledge and discretion: for vntill God hath so wrought with vs, his word lyeth still hidden from vs. And we heare what he saith by the Prophet Esay: I wil (saith God) speake vnto this people in a strange and vnknown language: And when I send forth my Prophets, euery man shall bee astonishd saying: What is this? What is it that God sayth? For I will speake to them in high Dutch, of purpose that they shall not vnderstand one iotte, and so shall all the propheties be vnto them, as a sealed booke: which if you offer to a learned man, hee will answer: I would read in it, but the booke is close and sealed vp: therefore let it be opened and I will see what matter is in it: Again: it shall bee a booke layd open, yea but as a booke offered to the vnlearned, and to litle children; and they shall say, I see heere is a booke, a man may well perceiue the letters, but I haue not bin at schoole, I am not learned: I see well the letters, but I knowe not what they meane. Wee see that our Lorde speaketh, and yet not withstanding, he is not vnderſtoode. Therefore let vs marke that Moses presupposed God to haue giuen vnderstanding to the people. Now his giuing of it was by the meane of Iesus Christ our Lord, and that not through the Lawe, but through the Gospell. The Lawe of it selfe bringeth nothing but condemnation, conuerting men before God, making forth their proces, and finding them guilty: as wee haue heretofore alledged: The case being so: there is but onely one meane, whereby to bee inlightened from God, so as wee may attaine to the knowledge of his holy will for our saluation: And that is to acknowledge the grace which is offered vnto vs in his Gospell through our Saviour Christ.

Deut. 4. 7.

Esa. 28. 11. 12.

Rom. 4. 15 &amp; 7. 7.

It is not therefore without cause that Saint Paul addeth this title vnto the worde: It is (saith he) the word of faith that wee preach vnto you.

Rom. 10. 8

He calleth it the worde of faith, when wee not onely knowe whereto we be bound, and vnderstand what God exacteth and requireth of vs, and what hee commandeth vs: but also, when wee come to him as deftitute of all goodnesse, beseeching him to vouchsafe to take pitie of our want and needinesse, and to enrich vs with his graces. When wee seeke God in this maner, and aske of him that which wee want: then haue wee the worde of faith, and not the word of the Lawe. For the worde of the Law sayth, Doe this and doe that, and beware of such a thing, which if thou transgresse, beholde the curse is prepared for thee. By the worde of the Lawe wee see wherunto wee are bound, but wee bee not able to discharge it; but wee stand all confounded and damned. It behooueth vs therefore to haue the worde of faith, that is to say, to taste of Gods promises, whereby hee sheweth himselfe so bountifull towards vs through our Lorde Iesus Christ. When we receive this as it is offered vnto vs in the Gospell; then is that fulfilled which is spoken here; to wit, that the worde is not about the cloudes, that it is not in the bottome of the deepe, nor on the other side of the Sea: but in our mouth and in our heart. Wee haue therefore to consider first of all, that God holdeth men sufficiently guiltie, after hee hath once taught them. For as soone as the worde is preached, there is present condemnation to all them that cannot profite thereby, and there is no way for them to scape. And why? For God hath called vs, and wee haue not answered him: he hath shewed vs the way, and we haue not vouchsafed to enter therein: to bee shorte, wee see that when Gods worde hath bin preached vnto vs, there is matter sufficient to reprove vs, and wee cannot reply vnto it. But herewithall let vs marke also, that as touching our parte, the worde of GOD is at it were aloft about the skyes, or as if it were in the bottome of the deepe, notwithstanding that wee haue our eares continually beaten therewith. Herein wee see the wretchednesse of our nature, that though God speake vnto vs with open mouth, and teach vs neuer so faithfully, yet doe wee continue still as we were, so as no amendment at all is perceived in vs, for all the long schooling that God hath bestowed on vs. What is to be done then? That GOD hauing spoken by the mouth of men, and by the holy scripture, doe also gather vs vnto him, and make vs to feele his goodnesse towards vs. For it is not sufficient for vs to vnderstand the things that are shewed vs in the holy scripture: but wee must also bee touched to the quicke with them in our heartes, that wee may bee well assured of Gods fatherly loue towards vs. Whē we are once at that poynt, there is no more hyding, then is there no more darkenesse in the holy scripture: but it is a sufficient instruction, inso much as it is good and expedient for vs. For this cause dooth Saint Paul sende vs to our Lorde Iesus Christ, saying, That if we beleeue with our heart to Iustification, and con-fesse with our mouth to saluation that Christ dyed, and that GOD rayled him againe, then are wee in that perfection which Moses speaketh of here. Nowe it is true that Saint Paul dooth vs in this place, the worde Hell, for the worde Deepe: which hee dooth for the fitter applying of that sentence to his owne purpose, which Moses did vs after a general manner. Moses speaketh after the common custome of men. O what is hee that can dig down into the bottome of the deepe? Who is he that can mount vp aloft about the skyes? Saint Paul minding to apply this to our Sauour Christ, sayth, that we need not to alledge either heauen or hell, or ought else that can bee imagined in this worlde; God dooth sufficiently shewe himselfe vnto vs, in that we haue witnesse that Iesus Christ dyed and is risen againe. For wee knowe that by the vertue of that worde, Hell is bereft of all power ouer vs; and heauen is set open for vs. True it is that wee must beginne with this simplicitie that Moses speaketh of. When hee saith that the worde is in our mouth, and in our heart; his meaning is that the being thereof in our mouth, is to the end wee shoulde talke of it, and so become learned: and that the being thereof in our heart, is to the end wee shoulde vnderstand it. But Saint Paul goeth yet farther: not that hee wretched and wingeth the Testimonie of Moses; but hee sheweth that the same is in very deed fulfilled: to wit, that wee haue power to speake the worde of GOD as we ought, and that we haue it also imprinted in our hearts. He sayth then, first that wee must come vnto our Lorde Iesus Christ, according to this saying, which is set downe in another place, namely, that Iesus Christ is the end of the Lawe, and also that hee is the lyfe of it. Then we see that if wee meane to profite by the holy Scripture, wee must hie vs to our Lorde Iesus Christ; for hee is the liuely Image of God; it is he in whome are comprehended all the treasures of wisdom and vnderstanding. Thus much concerning that poynt.

Are wee nowe come vnto Iesus Christ? It behooueth vs to knowe the principall thing that is giuen vs in him, to wit, that wee be redeemed by his death and passion; for he hath suffered the paynes that were due vnto vs, and hath borne that dreadfull vengeance of God, which belonged vnto vs, and hath thereby made vs free. That then is the benefite which wee reape by the death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ: and by his resurrection hee hath purchased righteoulnesse and lyfe for vs: and hath also opened vnto vs the kingdom of heauen, from the which wee were earth banished. Nowe first of all, when wee call to minde the death, and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ, wee must needes bee deliuered from all anguise and distresse of minde. For hee telleth vs (as it is sayd here) that it is not for vs to alledge any more; Who shall goe downe into hell? (as we haue beene wont to doe.) Howe now? If all sinners must be condemned before God: seeing that wee bee sinners; surely wee bee all vndone. And who is he that can assure mee that hell shall haue no power ouer me? I feele the sinne which doth accuse mee, and that is all one as if I should beholde the gulfe open ready to swallowe mee vp; Satan hath gotten the maisterie ouer me. See how men are dismayed and plunged in continuall griefe and trouble of minde, vntill they haue receiued knowledge of the benefite that cometh by the death and passion of our Lord Iesus Christ. But we knowe that our Lorde Iesus suffred the sorrowes of hell, and yet was not holden prisoner of the same (as Sainct Peter the weath in the Actes;) whereby wee be well assured, that the bandes of death are broken, and that hell hath no more power to swallowe vs. And why? Because the Lorde Iesus hath purchased vs freedome. But howe know we that? By the Gospell. But if I still stande in doubt whether I bee deliuered from the curse of God; it is as much as if I should drawe Christ againe from death: for hee is not dead in vaine. To what ende is it? Let vs consider a litle wherefore the onely sonne of God yielded himselfe to such thame; as to be hangd on tree, and to be as it were accused before God his father, (according as wee haue seene euen in the one and twentieth Chapter of this booke,) and to be beaten by the hande of God, vntill hee seemed as vile as a Leper, as the Prophet Esay saith in the 53. Chapter, that hee bare the burden of all our offences: as if he had bene a miserable sinner, and was environed with such extreme sorrowe, that hee wold not haue it to say, but to crie out: My God my God, why hast thou forsaken me? And thinke wee that the sonne of God dalyed when hee was so humbled, yea and not onely was made vicerly of no reputation, as Sainct Paul saith: but also fought with the pangues and tortures of death: He offered himselfe in the person of vs, as a wretched sinner to beare that vengeance of God which was due vnto vs, so as (to bee short) he knewe that God was bent against him, to thunders downe vpon him for our sake. Forasmuch then as we knowe that Iesus Christ abode such incouters for our redemption: stande wee yet still scanning and replying, as who woulde say, O I cannot tell, and howe can I bee sure of it? Surely that were euen as much as to deny the death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ. For it is a plaine scorning of all that hee hath endured and suffered for our saluation, when we acknowledge not the fruite that doeth growe vnto vs thereby. So then the first point is, that hauing the Gospell, wee haue whereuppon to rest, so as wee neede not to alledge: What is he that shall goe downe into hell? For Iesus Christ hath bene there, to the end that wee should not come there at all; and at this day hee giueth vs witness of the same by the Gospell, to the intent wee should knowe that his death hath alwayes present power and operation for all such as flee vnto it for refuge.

Allo there is on the other side, th at wee haue no more cause to replie, Who is hee that shall mount vp to the heauens? Why? That is as much (saith Sainct Paul) as to plucke downe Christ from the heavenly glorie, whereunto hee is exalted. Wee say in an article of our faith, that Christ descended into hell. In so saying wee ought to assure our selues, that wee bee nowe out of daunger, for hee entred thither to the ende that wee should be free from it. We adde thereunto, that hee is also ascended into heauen. And why? To the ende that wee might knowe that the gate thereof standeth open for vs. We heare also howe hee tolde his disciples: In my fathers houle are many mansions: signifying thereby that heauen was not onely for himselfe, but that it is a common heritage for all the faithfull, and that hee hath taken possession thereof, as it were in our behalfe. Nowe then, we protest in the article of our beleefe, that the heauens at this time stande open for vs: and that wee ought to assure our selues to come thither, because our Lorde Iesus Christ, our heade, is gone vp thither and I will not bee separated from the members of his bodie. Notwithstanding that wee haue confessed this: yet wee stand scanning still, and are full of watering fancies: Ah, say wee, I know not for all that, what shall become of mee, I cannot tell whether God doth reckon me to be one of his children: who is he that hath bin in heauen, who is he that hath come thence againe to bring vs newes? See these diuinish blasphemies. This is not onely to stande in doubt of the truth of the Gospell; but also to teare Christ Iesus in peeces, as much as we can. O horrible outrage against the sonne of God: for hee that doubteth of his saluation, sheweth himselfe to belecue no whit of that which wee confesse, namely that Iesus Christ hath soueraigne dominion both in heauen & in earth: that God gouerneth the world by him, he maketh all creatures to kneel downe to do him homage: to be short, wee acknowledge not that the Lorde Iesus Christ is risen againe from the dead: but to the vttermost of our power, we goe about to deface and to abolish the power of the holy Ghost, which shewed it selfe in his resurrection. See nowe in what case wee be, if we receiue not the Testimonie of the Gospell, to assure vs, that wee bee as it were, rapted vp into heauen, cuento enter directly into the possession of all those goods which ly hidden from vs, and are not visible; as the Prophet Esay saith: such as the heart of man is not able to conceiue. If wee seee not an open gappe euen vnto hell; to spyte Satan, to desie death, and to triumph ouer all things that may impeach our saluation: well, let vs on the one side consider howe sainct Paul saith, that when wee haue receiued the Gospell through faith, wee bee forthwith let downe in the heavenly places: wee be (as yee would say) enthroned with the Angels of Paradise, as already raised vp thither by God. It is true that heere beneath, wee be as wretched wormes creeping vpon the gronde; but when wee haue once the doctrine of faith, we haue the earnest penny of our saluation; according as saint Peter saith; that through faith wee may pur our selues into the handes of God in such manner, that lifting vp our eyes & minds into heauē, we be brought in thither, because that Iesus Christ our heade is there before in our behalfe, and hath there prepared the heritage which he will hold in cōmōn with vs. Thus ye see how we must practise this point, following the exhortation of S. Paul. Moreouer wee must likewise marke howe hee saith; that wee must belecue with the heart to iustification, and confesse with the mouth to saluation. I haue heretofore shewed you briefly the substance of our faith; howe it must rest wholly vpon the death and resurrection of our Lorde Iesus Christ: I say vpon his death, because that hee by his obedience, hath put away all our iniquities and transgressions: hee hath suffered the punishment that was due vnto vs, to discharge vs of the same, he hath also dispatched away the curse which lay vpon vs. So much concerning the first point.

Nowe concerning the seconde; wee must vnderstande, that by his rising againe he hath purchased righteousness vnto vs, and therby shewed himselfe a conquerour ouer sinne and death: and his resurrection doeth also import that hee is ascended into heauen, of purpose to take the possession of that inheritance, which hee will make common vnto vs, and of the which hee will make vs partakers with himselfe. This is the substance of our faith. Nowe it behooueth to haue this faith both in our heart and in our mouth. Truly it were to small purpose if wee did but talke of the graces and blessings which our Lorde Iesus Christ hath brought vnto vs; as wee see a great number of bablers doe; they talke much thereof, but what are they the better for it, sauing that it increaseth their condemnation? It is no great matter then to haue the confession of faith on the tippe of the tongue before men: for it must be rooted in the heart, we must (say I) haue ſure vertue of the death and resurrection of our Lorde Iesus Christ imprinted within vs, and saint Paul saith, that that serueth vs for righteousness. And why? Because wee knowe that wee be reconciled to GOD, in somuch that Christ hath taken our burden vpon him, so as wee being thereof discharged are become acceptable vnto God, so ſure he will no more impute our sinnes vnto vs. And why? For Christ should haue suffered in vain for vs, if we should nowe be called to reckening for our sinns. Thus then wee stand acquitted through the satisfaction made for vs by Christ Iesus; and that is the righteousness whereof Saint Paul speaketh. For when wee receiue Iesus Christ, it is certaine, that hee reneweth vs by his holy Spirit. And wee bee not onely adopted to be the children of God by his meanes; but also wee receiue therewith the warrant of our Election, which is that wee be referred for the inheritance of God. So then let vs vnderstande, that there is none other meane whereby wee may attaine to righteousness, but by beleeuing with the heart.

Nowe this worde Beleueing importeth that wee shoulde seeke in Iesus Christ, for that which wee want in our selues. For if wee rest vpon the Lawe, for as much as it commaundeth vs to doe that which wee ought to doe, it is nothing woorth. But if wee repaire vnto God, knowing that hee is readie to releue our wants: that is the thing which is meant by the worde Beleuee, according to the meaning of Saint Paul. And of a truth, when wee doe so beleuee, and are so iustified: the same sufficeth for our saluation: For iustification doeth of it selfe import life cuerlasting. Neuertheless Saint Paul doeth put our saluation to the confession, doing vs to vnderstande, that the children of GOD ought not to be tongue tyed, but to magnifie the goodnesse whereof they haue had triall, and euerie man to edifie his neighbour as much as in him lieth.

Nowe then like as wee haue our hartes set vpon God to receiue his worde which is offered vnto vs: so must wee haue our mouth open to glorifie him, by acknowledging howe much wee are beholding vnto him. They therefore which haue through faith embraced the benefices of the death and resurrection of our Lorde Iesus Christ, ought to indeuour to fet the same forth, saying, Our GOD hath so powred out the inestimable treasures of his goodnesse towards vs, as it is good reason that all our whole life shoulde be spent in glorifying him, and yielding him praise and thanksgiving; according also as Saint Peter in his first Epistle saith: that the same is the verie ende why we were brought out of the horrible darkenesse of death, to be conueied into the kingdome of Gods light, and into the kingdome of life. S. Paul then doeth expressly match the confession of the mouth with saluation, nor that faith being right and true is not sufficient of it selfe: nor that wee doe purchase Saluation by speaking; but to shewe that faith cannot be without confession. Whereby wee see that they which nowadays doe renounce God by holding their peace, or keepe the knowledge of the Gospell, as it were, buried within them; doe defraude GOD of the honour that is due vnto him, and neuer knewe what faith meane. O say they, I keepe my faith to my selfe. Yea? Then dost thou make the holy Ghost a lyer. As for those that be of the Popedome, communicating with idolaters in all their abominations, and being ready to turne with euerie winde: if a man tell them that it is a kinde of renouncing God, and a forsaking of him that redeemed them from death. O (say they) I holde my faith in my heart. It is vnpossible that there shoulde be faith in the heart, but that confession with the mouth shoulde presently followe: or else were the holy Ghost a lyer, as witnesseth Saint Paul. And that is the thing which hee meant in saying; that when we haue beleueed with the heart to iustificatiō, wee must then also confesse with our mouth, that wee haue a redeemer which hath deliuered vs from death, and opened vnto vs the kingdome of heauen, to the intent it should nowe bee our inheritance. To be shewt, we see howe saint Paul agreeth very well with Moses. For albeit that Moses intended heere to reprove such as had hearde the lawe, and to conuict them of vnthankfulnesse; yet hath hee shewed afore, that it is not ynough for vs to haue our eares beaten with the littrell worde, vntill that God doe also giue vs vnderstanding thereof; and that doeth hee giue vs by our Lord Iesus Christ. It followeth then, that vntill the lawe bee matched with the Gospell, it is not neere vnto vs: For although that wee for our part bee dayly taught it, and that the worde doe dwell amongst vs; yet shall we want to receiue no taste of that which is vnto vs. That then is the meaning of Moses, And Saint Paul doeth verie well agree therewith, in that he telleth vs that we must resort to Iesus Christ, and acknowledge what profite wee receiue by him, and to what ende hee was sent vnto vs from God his father. And moreover let vs acknowledge it in such sort, as wee may rest wholly vpon his Gospell, and stand contented when God hath spoken vnto vs; and not go about to fetch downe Iesus Christ from aboue, as folke that would crucifie him newe againe. Let it suffice vs, that hee hath fully redeemed vs by that one sacrifice wherewith hee hath made perfect satisfaction for all. Let it suffice vs that hee is ascended into heauen, to the ende to drawe vs vnto him. And sith we haue receiued knowledge heere of by the Gospell; let vs make our profite of it, and beseech God that this doctrine may first of all be printed in our hearts, to the ende that being iustified by his free goodnesse, wee may stand fully assured vpon the redemption and satisfaction which our Lord Iesus Christ hath purchased for vs, because wee haue no righteousnesse in vs. And thereupon let euery of vs endeavour to glorifie God, knowing that hee hath adopted vs to the ende that he might be magnified in all our whole life, according as it is saide in the Prophet Esay, The people which I haue created shall shewe forth my praises.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our sins, beseeching him to make vs to feele them better than heretofore wee haue done, and that wee may attaine to the remedie; that is to say, the forgiveness of them in our Lorde Iesus Christ. And that forasmuch as our God ceaseth not daily to instruct and to edifie vs in his word, it may please him not to suffer vs to be deafe hearers of him, but rather to pearce our eares, to the ende wee may become throughly obedient vnto him, and holde vs therein; and to shew forth the vertue of his holy spirite, to the ende, that the thing which is saide heere may be accomplished in vs: And that when we haue beleueed with our heart, we may also confesse his holy name with our mouth, and our whole life may be agreable to the same confession. That it may please him to deale so graciously not with vs onely, but also with all Nations and people vpon earth, &c.

15 See; I haue this day set before thee, lyfe and good, death and euill.

16 For I commaund thee this day to loue the Lorde thy GOD, and to walke in his wayes, and to keepe his commaundementes, and his ordinaunces and his iudgements: that thou maiest liue and increase, and that the Lorde thy GOD may blesse thee in the Lande which thou goest to possesse.

17 If thy heart turne away, and thou obey not, but beest led aside, and bowest thy selfe to other gods, and seruest them:

18 I doe tell you this day, that you shall surely perishe, and not prolong your dayes in the lande, into the which nowe passing ouer Iordan thou goest to possesse it.

19 I take heauen and earth this day to witnesse against you, that I haue set before you life and death, blessing and curse. Therefore choose life that thou maist liue, thou and thy seede, 20 By louing the Lorde thy GOD, by obeying his voyce, and by cleauing vnto him : for hee is thy life and the prolonger of thy dayes : that thou maist continue in the Land which the Lord hath sworne to thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, to giue vnto them.

VE sawe yester day howe Moses did magnifie the authoritie of the worde of God which was committed vnto him, saying: Seeing that God is come nere vnto vs, and hath opened his holy mouth to declare vnto vs his will, we must holde vs wholly thereunto, and without seeking any further, wee must not aske any more, who shall goe vp into heauen, or who shall goe downe into the deepe? For wee haue sure witness and such a one as cannot faile vs. Seeing that God hath spoken let vs followe it. He addeth here moreouer; See, I haue this day set before you, life and blessing, death and euill. Whereby hee sheweth vs, that the worde of God, when it is taught vs, doeth carry with it such vertue, and such power, that we ought to holde the things which are there tolde vs, to bee as certaine, as if they were alreadie done in dede. The worde which Moses doeth vse in saying, See, as if he should point with his finger, to make the matter visible vnto vs, doeth import that wee must yeelde such reuerence to the worde of God, that wee must esteeme the things therein contened, to be as present vnto vs. And the same is to be applied as well to the threatenings as to the promises. If God doe promise vs any thing, it is not for vs to cast doubts thereof, [and to say,] Yea, but how may it come to passe, seeing there is no likelihood thereof? Let vs sticke to that which hee telleth vs. Likewise if God doe threaten vs, wee must tremble and not doe as they doe which tarie for the strokes, for they be so ouertaken vnawares, as they haue not the power to crie alas, they be ouer raught with feare, and God giueth them not the grace to returne vnto him, because they coule not finde in their hearts to doe him the honour, to submit themselves vnto him at such time as he warned them a farre off that hee is their Iudge. Thus are we to practise this sentence which Moses vseth in saying, That when wee heare the worde of God, hee will haue vs to rest altogether thereon and to settle our wittes wholly vnto it. And this ought to serue vs to double purpose: that when as it shall seeme vnto vs, that it is but lost time in this worlde to serue God, yet notwithstanding we may not surcease to obey him, waiting for the blessing which hee hath promised vs, and assuring our selues, that wee shall not be deceiued because hee is faithfull. And likewise on the contrarie part, when wee be tempted to doe euill, in hope that we shall remaine unpunished: let vs bee holden backe with this bridle, namely, that wee cannot escape the wrath of God, because hee hath declared that hee is the Iudge to doe vengeance for such things. The faithfull therefore in ordering their life, must alwayes bee fully resolued of this, that in seruing of God, they bee sure that hee will guide them, and that their ende shall be good and happy. But in the meane while the worlde shall seerne them, and they shall haue many temptations to turne them away; they shall see the wicked prosper, they shall see them make their triumphes; and on the other side they shall all that while see themselves goe to wracke. Nowe when wee bee thus tossed, wee must take our stay in the worde of GOD. Seeing that God hath promised to blesse vs, when wee walke according to his will; we are sure that he will not abuse vs; for his worde is the infallible trueth; and therefore let vs sticke vnto it. Againe, it seemeth vnto vs, that we shoulde make mountains and work wonders, when we let loose the bridle to our owne lustes: Let vs feare God: for he telleth vs, that when men haue once misbehaued themselves, their sinne abideth stil at their doore and kepeth continuall watch, so as when they haue wandered hither and thither, and passed their boundes neuer so farre, yet they must come to reckening. Seeing it is so, let vs learne to bridle our selues, and not to tarrie till God execute his iudgements vpon vs: but let vs rather preuent them through feare. Nowe wee see to what end Moses hath declared, that he set before the eies of the people, both life and good, death and euill: verily euen to assure the Iewes thereof, that they might no longer stande in doubt, And wherefore? For there needeth nothing to carrie vs away, as wee see too much by experience. For it is a verie rare thing for men to rest them vpon the promises of God steadfastly without wauering, they bee blinded with the thinges of the worlde: and vnlesse God doe out of hande accomplish the thing which hee hath spoken; they thinke they shall be deceiued. And although they dare not accuse God of vnfaithfulness: yet can they not find in their hearts to doe him the honour to thinke him to be true. Againe, although God threaten vs, yet are we so dulheaded, y<sup>e</sup> euery of vs perswadeth himselfe y<sup>e</sup> hee shall goe unpunished, and scape scottfree. Seeing then y<sup>e</sup> there is such lightnes in vs, & that wee bee so wauering, we ought so much the more to put the lesson in practise which is set downe here.

Now as touching life and good; it is as much as if he should say, all manner of happinesse: and likewise by death and euill, is ment all manner of wretchednes. In dede this present life is not the full measure or perfection of the blessings which God hath promised vs. It is no more but a certaine tast of them. Death also is but a little token of Gods wrath. The state of the life to come is the perfection both of weale and woe. But Moses speaking vnto the people, that were yet holden vnder the figures and shadowes of the lawe, did name life, and thereunto added this worde blessing, to signifie, that the people by seruing of God shoulde bee blessed, euen in all manner of felicitie; and contrarywise that they must of necessitie looke for all manner of wretchednesse, if they did fall away fro the seruice of God. For the better confirmation hereof, hee saith, This day I commaunde thee to loue the Lorde thy God, and to keepe his commaundements, and to cleaue vnto him, that thou maiest come to possesse the Lande which hee hath promised to thy fathers. Heere is a confirmation to holde the people conuicted, that they might haue no occasion to reply any more, but be compelled to confesse that the Lawe of God serued to call them to saluation, if so bee they had obeyed him: And contrariwise that it shoulde bee vnto them a good Testimonie of their condemnation, so as they could not pretende any excuse, seeing they were so well instructed, and yet continued hardhearted and stubborn still. Moses sheweth this by the substance that is contained in this doctrine. What is it (saith hee) that I haue inoynded thee? It is, that thou shouldest loue the Lorde thy God. Hath not nature left this marke imprinted in our heartes, namely, that wee bee created euen to this ende: to loue our God? Wherefore are we in this world? Wherefore doth God keepe vs heere? Is it not reason that he should haue some homage of vs, and that forso much as wee be his creatures, wee shoulde haue an eye vnto him, & hee bee the scope of our life? If it be not so; what order will there be? Wee see in this worlde very many Testimonies of Gods wonderful wisdom, iustice, righteousnes, and power, and he hath placed vs here beneath, to beholde all these things; and also he hath fashioned vs after his owne image and likeness. Now if our eyes bee blindfolded, if wee bee dulled, if we will not vnderstand the things which haue bin shewed vnto vs, is it not a kinde of turning of all things vpsidowne which God hath established both beneath and aboue? Yes surely. Ye see then howe it is an vtter contounding and ouerthrowing of all order, whe men worship not their God, ne submit themselves vnto him. It is not therefore without cause that Moses alledgeth this reason, when he ment to shew vnto the Iewes, that it was not for the to argue any more as touching that doctrine, seeing that the ende whereto it tended was that God should be honored and haue his right. But this word loue importeth yet more. For it ought to touch men more liuely, than if he had spoken simply of feare & subiection. Indeede Moses addeth by and by wee must obey our God, and that we must keepe his statutes & his decrees. God then doth iustly require of vs a seruice, & we ought not to denie it him: but yet hee beginneth at loue, to the intent to draw vs vnto him after a louing manner, and not by force as if we woulde say, well it is ynough for vs to serue our God; but yet let vs goe to it with grinding our teeth, because no man can exempt himselfe from that necessitie. But Moses sheweth that the doctrine of y<sup>e</sup> lawe ought not only to holde vs in awe, and to bring all our senses and affections in captiuitie vnder the obedience of God: but also that it ought to win & possesse our hearts, so as we shold come of good will to offer our selues vnto God, to bee altogether his. Let vs therefore consider that God doth vs a singular good turne, when hee beginneth at this point, namely, y<sup>e</sup> he will haue vs to loue him. But wee be also exhorted to serue him, not by compulsion, as y<sup>e</sup> most part of the world doth, in who (as wee see) there is nothing but slaught feare. Therefore let vs learne so to gouerne all our affections as it may be our chiefe pleasure to serue God. Now on the contrary part, whereas Moses joyneth the obedience of the law with loue, thereby hee sheweth that there may bee hypocrites which shall make a countenance to loue God, & will boast themselves therof with full mouth: but yet the very true prooffe thereof is that wee honour his maiestie and submit our selues to the same. For God hath not bounde vs to him by halues: what manner of superiority hath he ouer vs? Now then like as a child loueth his father, & as a good subiect loueth his prince; euen so must we loue our God, that is to say, wee must beare such teuerce towards him, as to couet nothing but to frame our selues to his good pleasure in all things, so as he may weald vs at his wil, and bee glorified in all our life: And forasmuch as he wil haue a triall of vs; when hee hath guen vs his lawe and set vs downe the rule whereby our life should be guided: if we beaue our selues thereafter, then doe we shew indeed that we loue our God aright. And therefore let vs conclude concerning all such as pretend deuotion & holines, (of which sort we see many nowadays in y<sup>e</sup> popedome yea & euen where the gospel is preached, there be many that make pretence to be rauished and caried away with a zeale) that all that euer they do is but smoke, vnlesse our life bee answerable thereto, so as we follow the wil of our God, & in deuour to obey him by keeping his commaundments & ordinances. That (I say) is y<sup>e</sup> true mirror where we may beholde whether we loue our God or not, and whether there be any faith & purenes in vs. And herewithall Moses telleth the people againe, that they shall not loue God but to their owne profite & welfare: as if hee shoulde say, although God doe by iust title, require that we shoulde loue him, yet doth he not that in respect of his owne profite or aduantage, for he can receiue nothing of vs. Howe then? He seeketh and procureth our welfare. For hee seeth verie well that we be miserable when wee are fallen away from him: and therefore he is desirous to win vs, not for any gaine that can thereby redound to himselfe, but to the intent that all the benefite thereof shoulde redound vnto vs. Nowe then what a churlishnes is it, that men cannot finde in their heartes to submit themselves vnto God, specially seeing that he neuertheless hath such a care of their welfare, that hee seeketh them, and taketh paines to reduce them to him, howbeit (as I said afore) not for that he can be any thing bettered thereby for his part, but because he wold not haue them to perish. Seeing then y<sup>e</sup> we know this, must we not needs be too too dulled, yea starke mad, if our hartes be not meekened; yea & not onely meekened to stoop vnder the obedience of God; but also therewithal set on fire with a zeale to come vnto him, & to bende all our in-deuour that way? Nowe wee perceiue in effect whereat Moses aimed in all this sentence. And moreouer on the contrarie side hee doeth also set downe the threatenings; for (as I haue said) hee expoundeth more at length this doctrine, which he had erst touched in fewe wordes. See, I set before thee this day good and euill, life and death. Hauing saide so, hee taketh the first part thereof. For (saith hee) I craue nothing of thee, but that thou shouldst loue the Lorde thy God, that by obeying him thou mightest liue and possesse the land which hee hath promised vnto thy fathers, which is as it were, a pawne of his loue, and the true felicitie vnto the which thou art called, for to attaine to it, that is to say the kingdome of heauen. Thus much concerning the first part.

Nowe he commeth to the seconde and faith,
If thou swine away, and rebell, and beeſt caried to serue strange Gods: I tell thee, that thou shalt perish, (saith hee) and thou shalt not escape the hande of the Lorde thy God. Looke not to prolong thy dayes when you shall haue so despised him which hath all goodnesse in his owne power, and will in the end reuenge himselfe of the dispisers of his worde. Nowe wee see the meaning of Moses in generall. It remaineth for vs to marke the manner of speech which hee vseth. He saith, If thy hearte looke backe not to obey, and that thou beeſt moued to obey strange Gods, and so serue them. When hee saith, If thy hearte turne backe, his intent is to expresse heere the malice of men, which conuet nothing but to flee from God. For if we were not caried away by our wicked affections, it is certaine that euery of vs woulde followe this Principle, and the seede which is in vs; namely, That forasmuch as there is but one God, therefore we ought to worshippe and serue him. Let men bee as wicked as they list, and let them strue as much as they can to extinguish al manner of light, that they may haue no more reason in them: (as we see many doe, whose whole delight and indeuour is to make themselues verie beastes); yet doeth this remaine still engrauen in them, That there is a God which ought to be serued. What shall become of vs then, if we seeke him not as we ought to doe? Againe, see we not the worlde howe it is so farre out of course, that there is nothing but confusion throughout all, and that thercuppon euery man goeth astray?
Whereof commeth it (say I) that we bee so wit-lesse, as to followe the wicked trade of other men, and yet bee compelled to condemne the same?
Euen of this, that wee turne away our hartes backe; that is to say, that euery of vs wrappeth himselfe in wilfull blindnesse, and euery of vs setteeth himselfe backe, notwithstanding that we haue beene taught the contrarie. For albeit that it is true without exception, that all they which turne away from the truth, doe it of a certaine wickednesse: yet notwithstanding, wee bee double folde the lesse excusable, when wee haue bin taught by the word, so as God hath shewed himselfe vnto vs familiarly. Therefore when we heare this saying of Moses, wee must apply it to our vse. For we see how our Lorde hath shewed vs the way of saluation by his Gospel, wee see how he continueth it still from day to day: what will become of vs then, if wee stray away? Wee shall not bee as the Turkes, or as the verie Papistes: but it shall be vpbraided vs that wee haue turned our hartes backe, and that where as God had set vs in the good way, and reached vs his hande to guide vs: we haue beene frowarde, and woulde not hearken to the thinges which hee tolde vs: and that all this wee haue done of wilfull malice. Yea and Moses addeeth yet another worde, saying, If thou bee driuen to serue strange Gods. He sheweth that men be driuen with a certaine furie or frenzikenesse when they cannot finde in their hartes to submit themselues to God, to bee wunne vnto him by his worde. Needes then must there bee a dreadfull rage in this case, and that Sathan worketh after a horrible manner, when men bee so farr out of brder. Wee haue seene in the fourth Chapter, howe hee saide, Looke well to thy selfe, that in beholding the sunne and the stars, thou be not compelled to worshippe them and to make them ydols. There Moses sheweth that men woulde neuer runne out to ydolatrie, vnlesse they had some outrageous prouocation within them to driue them thereunto, as if they were out of their wittes. For were men well advised & settled in their wits, as they ought to bee: they woulde certainly come to their God.

And therefore wee bee double guiltie, when hauing turned away from our G O D, and draw-en backe our hartes through wilfull malice and stubbornenesse, ouer and besides that, wee haue been caried with such a raging moode, as wee cannot bee tamed, neither can any repentance take place in vs, neither will wee bee ruled by reason; but we behaue ourselues like folk that are straght or rather starke madde. And hereby wee ought to take warning to mistrust all our affections, and to bridle and imprison all our wittes, seeing wee bee so lightly withdrawn from God, and turned away to become backeslyders. If men giue themselues libertie, what followeth but that their heart will quickly bee turned backwarde? When wee shoulde walke vprightly, wee make it difficult to goe one step, but if it come to backeslyding, wee slitte away like water, there is nothing in vs but slippernesse. Therefore must wee holde our selues as captiues, knowing well that if wee haue neuer so little libertie, wee bee straight way gone quite from our God.

Moreouer when men doe so beleue their passions, they must needes become like madde beastes, neither reason nor equitie may beare sway, there is no more vnderstanding in them, and to bee short they are become brutish of their owne accorde. Seeing wee bee warned of these thinges, let vs learne so to fight against all manner of excessiue lustes, and against all the appetites that boyle within vs, as G O D may gouerne vs quietly, and wee bee readie to follow which way fouer he calleth vs. Now after that Moses hath spoken so, he addeth, that albeit that the people haue passed Iordan, and be come to the possession of the land, yet they shall not enjoy it for euer. Here our Lorde declarerth vnto vs, yf if he beare with vs for a time, wee may not thereupon fall asleepe, nor perswade our selues that wee bee at peace with him, as the hypocrites do, who vnlesse they be pinched with miserie, and that God doe pursue them roughly, doe alwayes make their market after their owne deuise. Well [say they] God must needs loue mee, for I am at myne ease: and thereupon they flatter themselves. And whereas they do but mocke God, they thinke that hee seeth it not a whit. To bee short, the blessings that God bestoweth on them, they turne as it were to a throwning sheete, of purpose to keepe God from espying any whit of their life. And thus they beare their owne eyes, & make them selues pastime & good cheare, as though they should neuer come to reckoning. And that is too common a fault. Now Moses sayth vnto them here, Albeit your God doe at this present time bring you into the lande which hee promised you, and that you passe ouer Iordan, where God will shewe his power, euen in drying vp y Jordan as hee did in drying vp the reed sea, where your enemies were vanquished & put to y foyle; in somuch that when you were like to haue bin stopped fro ntring into your inheritance, yet notwithstanding al those lettes were ouercome. For as much therefore as you see such fauour of God; beware that you sleepe not in the meane whyle, but walke in his feare; for he can as well driue you out of that land, as he doeth at this present bring you into it. To be short, whensoever we haue receiued any fauour at Gods hand, we be exhorted to vse it in such wise, as y same may be an occasion vnto vs to serue him, so as wee conceiue courage to yeeld ouer our selues to his obedience, for least we be bereft thereof againe either early or late, for playing the wyld beastes & for dealing stubbornly after that God hath made vs fatte, according as wee shall see in the song of Moses. Moses hauing spoken so, vseth a greater vehemencie, saying: This day I call heauen and earth to witness, that I haue set before thee life and death, blessing and cursing. The same in effect was spoken afore, but (as I told you at a glance) Moses meant to expresse yet more, to the intent that the people should vnderstande that he spake in good earnest, and that although their hearts were of stone, yet ought this to soften them. And let vs marke first of al, that if the Iewes were thus harde & slowe, yea and ranke rebelles too; we be no better than they. For it is not in respect of them only that God sayth hee wil change mens stonie hartes; it is a general promise. Hee sheweth that of nature men be such, namely, altogether rebellious, & that they will by no meanes be ruled. And therefore Moses is fayne to enlarge his speech, and to haue recourse to heauen and earth. Hereby we haue matter first of all to pricke vs forward. In deede men suppose that they be able fellows to come vnto God: but were there such forwardnes in vs as wee surmise: it were ynough for God to becken to vs with the finger, and to say, Come. But nowe when hee is fayne to crye out, and to vse roughnesse, and to handle vs sharply, yea, and (as yee woulde say) to coniure vs; it is a token that hee perceiueth well, that without this manner of dealing, hee coulde not drawe vs to him; but that wee woulde still drawe backwarde from him. Therefore let vs learne to condemne our selues: and moreouer when we heare that G O D doeth prouoke vs more roughly than wee woulde, wee may not for all that bee nyce, nor grieued thereat. In deede it is meete for vs to bee tender hearted one way, that is to say, that wee bee not like Strithyes or Anuyles, which beate backe the strokes of the hammer: but yet let vs take heede, that wee repyne not at the vehemencie which G O D vseth towardes vs; knowing that the same is necessarie for vs. If G O D then after hee hath taught vs gently, doe exhort vs with a more quietnesse, yea, and threaten vs, and moreouer summon vs, and afterwarde frame our inditement against vs, let vs vnderstande that it is necessarie that it should bee so, and that wee ought not to be offended thereat: for wee shall winne nothing by it. Yee shall see many which can fynde in their hartes that the Gospell should be preached: but after what manner? Forsooth after a deade manner, so as the letter should be layd forth, and then euery man holde what hee listed, without any exhortation to bee made, and without vnfolding of the inward force thereof. Such scoffers as these are to bee seene, which doe flatly mocke G O D, and yet in the meane whyle will needes bee borne withall. What, say they? Is it a preaching of the Gospell, when men threaten, and deale thus roughly? But in the meane whyle let vs consider what wee be, whether it be meete that God should deale with vs after our one liking. In deed if we were pliable, so as our hartes did yeeld at euery word: then were this vehemencie superfluous & vnprofitable: but seeing we be as slow as Asses, and also frantique, so as he cannot tame vs, nor reclaime vs vnto him: it is good reason that he should speake in an other phrase. That is the thing which wee haue to obserue, where Moses doeth in this place call to heauen and earth. Yea and let vs marke, that he expresseth more in saying, heauen and earth, than if he had called all the Angels of heauen, (as hee might haue done,) and in likewise all the dyuels of hell, as executioners of the iustice of God. But it ought to make vs more ashamed when he setteth before vs y senseless creatures. Now therefore when we haue not obeyed our God, who shall be our witnesses to condemne vs? The creatures y haue neyther reason, nor vnderstanding, nor senses. The earth knoweth not wherefore it was created, no more do the heauens; and yet doe euen they preach with a loud voyce, that their creator is to be obeyed.

Ezec. 11. 19.

To take these wordes of Heauen and Earth, for men & Angels: were too colde a doctrine. Moses vndoubtedly had a farther respect; which is, that men shalbe woorte than ashamed, if they giue not care to God when he teacheth them. And wherefore? For it might be replyed that it was an vnreasonable kinde of speech, to cal heauen and earth to witness. For they bee not of capaciti to alleage any thing. No: but let vs consider howe the earth, hauing no vnderstanding, doth through a secret inclination obey God; shee openeth her bowels to nourish men; shee bringeth forth fruite, shee doth her dutie in all respectes; yea, and shee doeth it in such wise, as shee maketh it manifest vnto vs by effect, that shee tendeth to none other ende, but to obey her creator. And what doeth the heauen? Wee see howe it goeth about, and is in continuall labour: what voyages doeth the Sunne make every day? hee fetcheth an infinite circuit. Wee see likewise howe the moone doeth the like, and so the rest of the Planets. Also wee see other motions which goe a contrary courte to these. To bee short, the heauen doeth as it were burne in desire to serue God; and yet these bee creatures without reason, without vnderstanding. Seeing then that these shewe openly vnto vs, that the secreete inclination of nature doth lead them thereto, & they neuer leaue off, but there is such a constancie in them, that since the worlde was first created, this order hath alwayes continued still: what is to bee done of vs in whome God hath imprinted his owne image, to the intent wee shoulde haue witte and discretion; telling vs in our consciences, that wee ought to discern good and euill asunder, and prouoking vs thereto by his wordes, whereby he discouereth himself vnto vs familiarly? If we for all this do draw backe stil, & wil not receiue his yoke, nor yeeld him any obedience, must we not needs bee worse than monsters; and consequently bee counted detestable? And on the other side, if after wee haue shewed some semblance of obedience to God, wee then become wauering, and by and by become wearie of seruing him, and turne away from him: shall wee not bee reprobued & conuicted by the continuall order of nature? Let vs marke wel then, that it is not without cause, that Moses, (to make men more ashamed) telleth the 10 that heauen and earth shalbee witness against them, whereby they shalbee conuicted. Thus yee see in effect what wee haue to obserue. Now let vs come to that which hee addeth, I haue set before thee good and euill, blessing and cursing: so the intent thou shouldest liue: verily, euen by louing the Lord thy God for that he is the life and the long continuance of thy dayes. Here Moses addeth not any new thing; but confirmeth his former matter. Whereby wee doe still see, that we be so dulheade 15 I when obedience to Godwarde commeth in talke, that it is not ynough for vs to haue the matter spoken briefly, & as it were by a glance: but it must be beaten into our heads. And therefore God neuer vseth any superfluous speache: but thereafter as hee seeth it expedient for vs, so doth hee reape things: and because hee seeth that we haue but a short memorie, hee is faine to put vs in mind of the things which we knew & haue now forgotten. Also for as much as hee seeth vs to be hard of digestion; he is fayne to chaw the doctrine to vs aforehand, that we may bee able to digest it. That is the thing which Moses doth presently, when he sayeth: This day I call heauen & earth to witness, that I haue set before thee good and euill, blessing and the curse.

 20 Nowe let vs returne to that that wee haue spoken; which is, that as often as the worde of God is declared vnto vs, wee must looke into the power thereof, euen to stay our selues thereupon: that after wee haue once receiued the grace which hee offereth vnto vs, wee may not dout that wee shalbe deceiued, being so stayed vpon the testimonie which hee hath deliuered to vs of his goodnesse and loue. And likewise that becing touched with dread and feare; to the intent we may prevent the threatenings, wee must not linger till hee put the things in execution, which hee hath denounced against vs, but we must goe and yeelde our selues vnto him, to pray him to receiue vs to his mercie and pitie. And albeit that this solemne protestation bee not made euery day, as it was here done by Moses; yet wee must vnderstande that it belongeth vnto vs at this day, to the ende that none of vs shoulde beguyle himselfe.

Moreouer it is sayde that both blessing and cursing are set before our eyes when wee haue the worde. Why so? For when our Lord trayneth vs vnto him, what remayneth then? Is not hee our life and the length of our dayes? Shall wee liue when wee bee parted away from God which is the fountaine of life and of all manner of happinesse? If wee take this worde God [in our mouth] and do not vnderstande whose we bee, nor what wee owe him; wee make him but an idoll, hee is but a fantasie: as there be many which talke ynough of God, but yet they do not thinke that they leaue him emptye of all his glorie. But it is not for vs to speake after that manner of our God: wee must yeelde vnto him that which belongeth to his maistie. Beholde, our God is the fountayne of life, hee is the wellspring of vertue, of ioy, of felicitie, & of glorie. To bee brieue, the fulnesse of all goodnesse lyeth in him; and therefore as soone as wee turne away from him, wee cannot haue any droppe of those things: but all manner of mischiefe shall pursue vs. That is the thing which Moses hath declared vnto vs in this place. So then by this worde God, and by his proper office, he sheweth vs, that when we haue his word, we must not then any longer stagger, neither is there any excuse for the misbeleuers which do not this honor to God, to conclude & to answer Amen, as soone as hee saith the word. And why? For it is alone as if they renounced him. And y<sup>e</sup> Apostle vseth as it were a like reason, in the Epistle to the Hebrewes, where hee sayeth: For as much as it is the office of G O D to search mennes heartes, hee hath also giuen

the same power to his word, so as it must peere our bones, and soake euen into the marrow and into y very thoughts. He putteth downe thier a likeness and conformitie betwixt God and his worde. So also in this place Moses telleth vs, that it is not for vs to cauil or wrangle any more, when wee haue once bene instructed by the worde of God. For therein hee sheweth himselfe what he is, there must wee behold his power. Nowe then, if wee sintyle God to this prayse that hee is our life, and the length of our dayes, it is certaine that wee must fynd the same in Gods worde, and thereof wee ought to bee thoroughly well assured. To be short, wee see howe Moses standeth vpon this point, that the worde of God ought to haue such honour & reuerence at our hands, as to accept it as if God himselfe appeared vnto vs visibly in his maiestie, and to submit our selues obediently thereunto, as in very dede that is the true prooffe and tryall of the obedience which wee yeelde vnto him. But herewithall, wee bee also admonished, that men deceiue themselves, when they seeke either life or prosperitie any where else than in God. For wee forthwith goe to wracke as soone as he draweth his spirite from vs. Do wee then desire to liue? Let vs abide vnder the wings of our God, and cleaue vnto him, according as it is sayde here. True it is that in this place Moses seteth forth an earthly life vnto the Iewes, and also the land of Chanaan, which was assigned vnto them for their inheritance: but yet he sheweth that God meant by exercising of them in those things to trayne them on farther. Let vs marke (I say) that Moses did not meane to holde the people to this earthly life, but to make them to vnderstande the goodnes of GOD, and to giue them some certaine taste therof, by the testimonies which they had here beneath. Moreouer, seeing that it is so that God protested vnto the Iewes by the mouth of Moses, that hee layde before their eyes both life and death, when hee willed that the lawe shoulde bee published: let vs vnderstande that the sayde life is yet better vttered vnto vs at this day. For the lawe is called the messenger of death, because life is not there so largely knowne, as our Lorde Iesus Christ doth shewe it vs at this day, in that hee cometh to offer himselfe vnto vs as the liuely image of his father, to the intent that wee shoulde be transfured into his glorie. Let vs then marke well, that as oft as the doctrine of the Gospell nowadays is preached vnto vs, God sheweth forth life vnto vs, and calleth vs in such wise vnto him, as wee may become one with him, according to this saying which wee reade in the seuenteenth Chapter of Saint Iohn; Holy Father, I beseech thee, that they may bee one with vs; as thou and I are but one. Seeing then that our Lorde Iesus hath pronounced this with his own mouth; let vs not feare but that whensoever we bee called vnto him, hee dooth ioyne vs perfectly to himselfe in glory. But yet therewithall, let vs also bee afrayed, least for our refusing to receiue life to inioy it; death bee giuen vnto vs. Not that that is of the nature of the Gospell; (for wee our selues be the cause thereof) but because the reprobates bee euermore consumed by the onely fauour of the Gospell, through their owne malice and vnthankfulness. Let vs bee aduised to choose the life that is offered vnto vs, seeing wee neede not to feele it farr off; but the matter resteth onely in receiuing it, when it is set before our eyes. But as touching the cause, and how God gouerneth vs by his holy Spirit: that was treated of yesterday, shewing that the same is done by his word, notwithstanding that it is vttered vnto vs by the mouthes of men. Nowe let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our finnes: beseeching him to make vs feele them more and more, yea, and to mislike them, and that wee may bee so reformed to his obedience, as we may couer nothing but to dedicate our selues wholly to his seruice, vntill that being quite dispatched from our olde Adam, wee be fully reformed by his rightcousnesse. And so let vs all say, Almighty GOD heauenly father, &c.

THEN Moses went and spake these wordes vnto all Israel, 2 Saying vnto them, This day am I fixe score yeres olde, and I can no longer goe in and out: And the Lorde also hath sayde vnto mee, Thou shalt not passe ouer this Iordan.

3 The Lorde thy God will passe ouer before thee: It is hee that shall destroy this people before thy face, and thou shalt possesse them. Iosuah is hee that shall goe ouer before thy face, euen as the Lorde hath spoken.

4 And the Lorde will doe vnto them as hee did to Schon and to Og the kinges of the Amorrhites, and to their countries, the which hee hath destroyed.

5 And the Lorde will deliuer them before thee, to the intent you may doe vnto them according to all the commaundement which I haue commaunded you.

6 Be of good comfort, and take courage, feare not neither be dismayed before their face: for the Lorde thy God goeth with thee, hee will not leaue thee nor forsake thee.

7 And Moses called Iosuah, and sayde vnto him in the presence of all Israel: be of good comfort, and take a good heart to thee: for thou shalt goe in with the people into the Lande, which the Lorde hath sworne to their fathers to giue them: and thou shalt diuide it vnto them for their inheritaunce.

8 And it is the Lorde that goeth before thee: it is hee that is with thee: hee will not forsake thee nor leaue thee, therefore haue, no feare nor dread.

ERE it is shewed vs, howe Moses was not contented to serue God & the people vnto y<sup>e</sup> which hee was appointed all the days of his life: but also did his endeour, that the remembrance of the name of God might continue among the people, and also that all things might be gouerned accordingly, euen after his death. Also hee gaue them to vnderstande, that Gods calling of him was not to the ende that the people should bee so entreated for a certaine time: but that as the lawe was giuen for a witness that God had chosen the children of Abraham; so hee would gyde them euen to the coming of the Redeemer, according whereunto hee went through with his calling. That is the very thing, which we haue here chiefly to obserue, when Moses by the commaundement of God ordayned Iosuah to bee his successour to gouerne the people. And therewithall hee sheweth that hee had faithfully trauayled all his life, and that it was not for any want of good will, that hee gaue ouer the charge that was committed vnto him: but because hee was altogether forworne with weaknesse. For if Moses should haue withdrawn him to hee at rest, the people might haue bene in dout, and also much discouraged thereby: but whereas hee declareth that hee neuer ceased vntill hee had finished his course: therein hee sheweth the way and example vnto all men, that none ought to turne head; but that so long as God doeth prolong their liues, they ought to goe on fourth whither fouer hee calleth them, and to bee firme and constant without swarting aside or changing. Moreouer hee sheweth vs, that wee must not thinke away for any mans death, because God continueth euermore in his state. And although y<sup>e</sup> they by whom he meant to be serued doe perish, yet must not his right be thereby diminished: and that is a poynnt worthe to be remembered. For wee see what happened in that people; notwithstanding that they had bene forewarned thereof, yet fell they away after the death of Iosuah, and God was driuen to afflict them by the handes of their enemies to bring them backe againe. But felt they once agayne the fauour of God? By and by they fell to their olde byasse againe, and remembered not a whit that they were deliuered, but returned to their idolatrie againe. The booke of the Iudges is full of these things. When God had raised vp Samuel who was the excellentest of all others: yet could not they abyde him, but desired a king, and the State was fayne to be changed after their appetite. Wee see therefore that this people were so wretched, that they continued not any longer in the seruice of God, nor in the obedience of his lawe, than a man of courage and stoutnesse had the gouerning of them. Therefore it is sayde here, that although Moses was olde and shortlyued, yet was it not for them to looke eyther this way or that way, but to consider that the liuing God had chosen and elected them for his people, and promised them to haue care of their welfare: and that seeing hee had taken them into his sauegarde, hee would neuer forsake them, so they did sticke vnto him, and were faithfull vnto him, and turned not away. And thus wee may gather a good admonition out of this place: that is to saye, that hauing both our eyes and our wittes fastened vpon the

the worde of God, wee must haue a right continuance in f̄ faith, albeit that things do change as touching the worlde. In deede, if wee haue good folke to leade vs, wee bee so much the lesse excusable, if wee profite not thereby. For if God stretch out his hande vnto vs, and giue vs gouernours which bee as his messengers; edifying and gouerning vs faithfully; it is good reason that wee shoulde strayne our selues so much the more: for wee haue one generall rule, to cause the meanes that God giueth vs to bee auaylable, euen by turning them to our profite. It is a singular thing, when hee giueth vs such men as haue the vertue of his holy spirite, which also bee so endued with whatsoever is for our benefite, as wee may vnderstande that hee offereth him selfe vnto vs in their persons: It behooueth vs I say, to bee so much the more moued at such times to serue God. But howeouer it bee, let vs content our selues with the doctrine; and albeit that men do dye and fayle vs, let vs neuer the lesse vnderstande, that God is alwayes the same, and that his truth cannot change. For it is sayde of men, that they bee but a shadowe; but the worde of G O D continueth for euer. And that not onely in it selfe, but it must also haue a rooting in vs, euen an incorruptible roote, as saith Saint Peter. Let vs learne therefore, that if the people of Israel were exhorted to continue in the faith and seruice of God after the death of Moses, wee also must doe the like at this daye.

And Moses in fo doing doeth make it manifest, that hee beareth no enuie towards Iosuah, as many do, who seeke their own renown, and would not that others should do any thing, for feare least their owne praye should bee stayned, and that men should not talke ynough of them. Moses had not this cursed ambition, that hee shoulde hinder the procurement of the peoples welfare by the aduancing of Iosua, but as much as in him lay hee did put him in authoritie, yea euen to performe a farre greater matter than was graunted to him selfe to doe. For God tolde him before, that hee should not enter into the lande that was promised to the people. In deede hee sawe it: but hee was shut out, because hee honoured not God, when the people murmured for want of drinke. Because hee did not then sufficiently glorifie God: but was troubled and vexed in his minde, hee was deprivied of that honour, and God did disgrace him in that behalfe. And yet for all that, Moses omitted not to take Iosuah, and appoynted him to bee his successeur, willing him to doe his duetie in setting the people in possession of their inheritance. Seeing then that wee perceiue that Moses did willingly submit himselfe, let euery of vs learne to haue no respect to himselfe, nor to vaunt himselfe, nor to seeke our owne credite in this worlde, of purpose to bee renowned both during our life and after our death: but let vs content our selues, that God doeth acknowledge, that wee were willing to serue him, so as the Church might feele the profite of our labour, and bee edified thereby.

When wee bee at this point, let vs referre our selues to our God, and beare no enuie to those whome hee rayseth vp in our steed. For wee knowe, that if G O D doe not worke continually amongst men, the grace that hee hath put into them will quickly vanish; (such is our frailtie:) and then all that wee haue profited shall bee nought woorth. Is it our desire that G O D shoulde continue that which hee hath wrought by vs? It is necessarie then that hee haue alwayes people to serue him. Let euery one therefore endeour to discharge his duty without enuie, and without spytting: let the master haue his honour and preheminance, and let vs bee cohelpers one to another, and doe our endeour to ayde such as wee feele to bee acceptable to God. Thus much is here shewed vs by the example of Moses.

Nowe hee sayeth vnto the people, I am an hundred and twentie yeares olde, I can no longer goe and come: and the Lorde hath sayde that I may not enter into this lande. First of all, hee alleageth his weaknesse, for that hee was so olde, so brused and broken: that hee was no longer able to satisfie so difficult a charge. I can not goe and come (sayeth hee). Nowe hereof I gather that which I haue touched, namely, that whilest Moses was lustie, or had in him any strength at all, hee spared not himselfe, knowing well that the same was not giuen him for himselfe, but for the common benefite, and welfare of all the people: hee then praistified that which Saint Paul speaketh of, namely, not to liue to himselfe. Nowe in deede wee bee not all so excellent as hee was: yet neuertheless this rule is common to all the children of G O D, that is, that no body is created for his owne particular behoofe; but that we must looke to our vocation, that wee may followe it, and offer vp our selues in sacrifice to God, & euery man liue and continue according to his abilitie and measure without ydlenesse. And let vs not flatter our selues, as to saye, I am excused: for it is not for vs to take our leave, and to giue ouer, and to discontinue when wee our selues list. Euery man (I say) must goe on euen to the end, without being wearie: and when it shall please G O D to deliuer vs out of this world, then are we discharged, and not asore.

Nowe when hee sayeth that God depriveth him of going into the lande; hee alleageth a matter not honourable to him selfe: but doeth call to remembrance the fault that he had committed. Hee doeth not here accuse God, neither freiteth hee at the punishment whereof he speaketh; but hee acknowledgeth his offence with meeknes. Seeing that Moses, a man so excellent which was as it were an Angel amongst mortall creatures, was contented to testifie his fault, and often times to reherse that he was not worthe to enioy the heritage which God had promised to Abraham, in so much that although hee had deliuered the people, and had doone so many noble actes, & had published the Lawe, and was reputed gouernour of f̄ Church of God euen vntill f̄ coming of our Lord Iesus Christ: yet norwithstanding euen after all this, hee was not ashamed to lay foorth his owne fault, and to declare that God would not admit him to the promised heritage: what ought wee to do? So then whensoever God punisheth vs, let vs not seeke vayne shiftes to couer our vncleanness: but let vs rather bee well contented, that the punishmentes which God hath sent vs, may profite & serue for instruction to all our neighbours. Hee sayeth moreover, The Lord thy God will goe before thee, and destroy all these people before thy face, and shouldest doe vnto them, as thou didst vnto Sehon & Og kings of Bazan & of the Amorites. Here Moles confirmeth the matter which we haue touched, to wit, that although hee be not present in person, when the people should enter into the lande of Chanaan, yet was God of right to be esteemed more than mortall men, so as the people ought not to bee afrayde though they sawe not Moles any more, nor aske, where is hee that hath led vs? Be contented (saith he) to haue the Lord to goe with you. Hereby wee bee yet better warned to yeeld God his due honour, which is, to rest in him alone, although wee bee benefiof all meanes heere beneath. In deede it is a thing to bee desired, that wee might euer bee gouerned by such rulers as are led by the Spi-rite of God: for it is a priuiledge and fauour, that cannot bee sufficiently esteemed, and it is also a signe and token that hee is amongst vs: Therefore it were greatly to be wished, Neuer-thelesse, although wee bee deuiued therof, and that God taketh them away by death, whereby his blessing, to the outward shew, is so much the lesser: yet, let vs looke vp higher and by sayth behold howe he is present to them which seeke him, and that he hath his hand euermore stretched out to helpe them, so as his power shall bee strong ynough, albeit that hee shewe them nothing visibly. That is the thing which we haue to remember where Moles sayeth, The Lord thy God will goe before thee. It is certaine that as touching my selfe I shal not be there any more, but shoulde you therefore bee dismayed and faynt-harted? What is God? Wote ye not that he hath all in his owne power? What am I? I am but a shadowe. Now God hath put a certaine droppe of his power in me, and you haue perceiued the experience thereof: and although the same haue profited you, what is it in comparison of his helping of you with the whole fulnes of his power? Nowe then, looke that you measure not Gods power by a mortall man: neither bee yee so grosse headed and witlesse, as to say that you be discouraged because I am no more with you, and that yee bee alreadye vanquished: for that were a cursed blasphemie. But vnderstand, that God is not diminished: when the creatures be perished, hee is able to raise others: and without raising vp of any at all, he is sufficient himselfe: for hee hath no neede to borowe from any where else. Now then the verie office and pro-pertye of faith, is to rest vs in God and to stay vpon him, so as although all the worlde sayle vs, yet wee assure our selues that God wil worke mightily ynough, without being ayded by any other partie. Moreouer, for the better confirming of the people in hope, Moles telleth them that they had seene alreadye after what maner God had wrought in his peoples behalf.

 You haue had (sayeth hee) victorie against Og the king of Bazan, and against Sehon the king of the Amorrhites, and you know that God did then fight for you. (For in deede the people had bene at that time, as it were vtterly sorlorne, and were driuen of force to confesse that the victorie came not of themselves, but that God through his grace did vanquish these two mightie kings.) Seeing therefore that GOD hath alreadye shewed himselfe a father towards you, feare not that he will continue so hereafter. Thus should wee bee confirmed in hope, by our former experience & feeling of the fa-uour and helpe of our GOD. When he hath once made vs to tast his goodnesse, let vs thereby bee so much the more assured. That is the thing which Moles meant to teach vs in speaking here of Sehon and Og. Now hee addeth farther, that the Israelites shoulde doe vnto all the nations whom God would deliuer into their hands, according as it is commaunded them here. It shoulde seeme at the first sight, that the people ought much rather to haue vsed mercie, than so to haue rooted them out vtterly. But (as wee haue seene heretofore) God had sayde vnto them: You shall spare none, neither litle nor great; all the race of them must bee rooted out: for I will not haue any of them remaine vnto you. Nowe it seemeth to bee a kinde of crueltie, that notwithstanding that they yelded them selues, and craved mercie, yet they shoulde neuertheless be al killd. Yea, but yet for al that, seeing God had spoken it, the people were of dutie to execute it, & not to be wise to the contrarie, nor to glose vpon the worde of God, or to reply vnto it at all. Wee see then that when men will needes swim betwixt two streames, and make a medly betwene the worde of God & their own fancies; they marre all. There is nothing better than to followe that which God sheweth & commaundeth vs. For if we take vpon vs to be too forecasting, hee will laugh our presumption to scorn, & in the ende we shal be accursed. Let vs marke then, that seeing it was Gods will that all those people (to wit, the Chananites, Pherezites, & their like) shoulde bee rooted out: it was the duetye of the Israelites to doe that which was giuen them in charge: for there was none but GOD him selfe that coulde bee iudge thereof. Yet notwithstanding, it is certaine y God dealt not excessiuely in punishing those people: for hee had long time patiently wayted for their amendment; euer since the time of Abraham had they bin vnreformable; they had bin spared foure hundred yeres. But were they thereby any whit amended? Nay, they were become worse than euer they were: was it not reason then, y after God had so long borne w them, he shold lay his hand vpon them at y last? [Yes verily;] & therefore let no bodie murmur in this behalf against god, as though his vengeaunce were too rough. And in very deed it is a wonderous thing that

Deut. 7. 16.

Gen. 15. 16.

Exod. 34. 6.

Men cannot content themselves with the iustice of God how moderately soeuer he vse it When we perceine any ouer great iniquitie (specially if it touch our selues, & that we receiue damage & hurt thereby) we cry vnto God: & be greued if he bestirre him not at the first dash, & we think that he is as it were asleepe . What say we ? Is it possible that God should suffer so long? If hee looke downe, how can he be so patient? We will needes haue God to take weapon in hande at our pleasure: and when hee doth any execution if it like vs not, we say: Howe nowe? What rigorous dealing is this? God sayth, that he is long suffering, full of goodnesse, slow to wrath, and inclined to mercie: howe is it then that he dealeth thus roughly with men? Nay, wee thinke that he is cruell, and we will also condemne him in that point. Seeing then that wee be so vnto-ward, and that in steede of iudging rightly of the workes of God, we wrappe vp all in confusion: let vs learne to like well of all his dooings, without any gaine saying: and when we perceiue not the cause, let vs make this conclusion, that howsoeuer the case stande, all that euer proceedeth of him, is rightfull, & that there is nothing in him but infinite wisdom and vprightnesse. And moreouer let vs also shut our eyes close against all conceites, which may hinder vs and make vs vnable to serue G O D, yet let vs not range hither and thither: but let it suffice vs to haue the worde from his mouth, and to holde vs to that which he hath commaunded. That is the thing which we haue to gather out of this text, where Moses telleth vs that the people of Israell must do vnto all their enemies, according as God hath commaunded them.

Nowe thereupon he sayth, Thais'ey should not be dismayed nor afraid, but that they should be courageous and behaue themselves manfully. Whereupon is all this exhortation grounded? Vpon the promise which he made, namely, The Lord thy God will goe before thee. We must therefore marke that men shall neuer take good courage, what soeuer is sayde vnto them, vnlesse they be assured of the helpe of God, and that he will be on their side, and giue good successe to all their enterprises. It is certaine that men be too bolde to do things, and to attempt more than is lawfull for them: but they do euer go about it carelesly, and without discretion. And as a madde bedlem, notwithstanding y hee be brought lowe with his long sickness & feele not his own weaknesse: yet is he much stronger and rageth in such wise, as he cannot be ruled, and worketh more trouble than if he were in perfect health: euen so is it with men when they haue no promise of God, but be chafed in their owne rashnesse and presumption. They dare doe wonders: but in respect to doe well, we neuer take courage therein, vnlesse we be assured of the will of God: and to be short, we can neuer build but vpon his promises. We must therefore remember that Moses, before he exhortheth the people to bee valiant & to behaue themselves stoutly, sayde vnto them, Thy God will be with thee, feare them not. And why so? For thou art sure that thou canst not quale, because thy God gouerneth thee. Howbeit, forasmuch as wee doe not at the first take sure holde of the promises of God, neither are they so certainly settled in our heartes, as is to be wished; Moses doth also adde a confirmation, and sayth: Nay, the Lord thy God will not leaue thee, neither shalt thou euer be forsaken of him. It was ynough that he hadde sayde afore. Thy God will goe before thee, hee will giue thee victorie against all thine enemies; thou hast already had experience of his helpe: It shall be alwayes the fame: this may seeme to haue bene ynough. But yet that which Moses addeth vnto it is not superfluous, because of the vnbeliefe of men: who notwithstanding that God doe assure them, doe yet still doubt and be wauering, vnlesse they haue a newe confirmation. Whereby we perceiue that it is no light matter to giue credit to the promises of God, and to holde vs to them, as many do suppose; but that is because they neuer tryed it. They that thinke themselves to bee most faithfull, haue neuer tasted what faith is: according as we see a great manie fooles, which speake of warre, and thinke to deuour all at one bitte, whereas in deede they neither knowe nor haue seene any thing. Euen so is it with thē that haue a speculatiue faith: they make themselves y ablest folk in the world, they boast themselves to be as faithfull as any can be founde: but they that knowe what faith is, doe vnderstande that there is nothing more harde, than for vs to stay ourselues vpon God; and in that behalfe wee must bee faine to imprison our senses, and to take the bit in our mouth (as they say) and to enforce our selues; yea and that God also on his side doe worke in that behalfe, as we doe see that he doeth. For it is no superfluous talke, when hee setteth his promises before vs, and putteth vs so often in minde of them. For it is a token that they beare no great sway with vs, or rather that they enter not into our heartes to settle there, as were meete they should. Thus yee see what Moses meant, in saying, That the Lorde will neuer forsake his people.

Moreouer, vnder this worde, he sheweth vnto vs, that Gods offering of his grace vnto vs is not for a day, but that hee will continue it vnto the end, conditionally that we also do receiue it with the like condition. In deede it is true that in this place he treateth but of the Land of Canaan: but we knowe that it was a pledge of the eternall life, and of the inheritance that is prepared for vs in heauen. Now he sayth exprefly, Thy God wil neuer leaue thee, neither will he euer forsake thee. Wee see therefore that our Lorde meaneth not to encourage vs for a day, but he meaneth that we should depende vpon him to liue and to die, and that we should be fully resolu'd, that when he hath begonne, he will performe his worke towards vs, and that he will not leaue vs at the halfe way, (as they say). And this is to bee well noted, because that although men imbrace Gods promises, yet are they sometimes or other in dout, and wot not where to become: and specially when any temptation cometh meth vpon them, then be they so scarred, that to their seeming, God is loth to doe them good, or else that he will not continue to doe them good. Seeing then that we be thus tossed with doubttes and troubles, we haue so much the more neede to remember the lesson that is here deliuered vnto vs: namely, ŷ God doth offer vs his grace, with such condition as it shall neuer faile vs. But we see how this doctrine hath bin peruerted especially in the popedome. They be not ashamed to say, that we must stande alwayes in doubt of continuance to the end, and that we wote not what God intendeth to doe hereafter; inso-much that it is a principall article of their faith which they holde in the Popedome. Neither meane I that it is the ignoraunt sort of the simple people only which do say so, but that it is the resolution of all the Monks and Freres; who affirm it to be the principal article of their faith, that men must stande alwayes in doubt whether God will faue them or not. Seeing then ŷ the deuil hath borne such a sway, so much the more ought we to be confirmed in this doctrine, where it is sayde, The Lord thy God will not leaue thee, neither shalt thou euer be forsaken of him.

Now when Moses had thus spoken to the people: then hee called also Iosuah and confirmed him. And moreover in the person of Iosuah, we may perceiue the thing yet better which I haue sayd afore; namely, ŷ it sufficeth vs not to be once certified of the grace of God; but that because of our weakenes, we haue neede to be vpholden & maintained, least wee fall away or swarue aside. For behold, here is Iosuah whom God had chosen to be gouernour of his people to set them in ŷ possession of their promised inheritance. And yet notwithstanding for all that he had hearde his duetie and office at the mouth of Moses, yet was God faine to giue him new reuelations after the death of Moses; & to vse the like words vnto him againe. And how so? Was he so short witted, that ere three dayes to an end, he had quite forgottē what had bin said vnto him before God and the sanctuary? He was there present, and a solemne ceremonie was vsed thereabout, & was it because that Iosuah had forgotten his duetie? No: But he was a fraille man: and God knowing him to be so, did confirme him, and encourage him. And if this neede to be done to Iosuah; what needeth to be done to vs? Therefore let vs beware of the presumption that blindeth vs, in that we thinke we neede not to sette our mindes continually vpon the worde of God as there be many doe, which hauing hearde some one sermon, do suppose that they be clarkes good ynough, not considering that the things which they haue heard will soone vanish away, and be quite and cleane gone ere three daies to an end, vnlesse they doe still beate vpon it. So then, let vs be well aduised that wee exercise ourselues in the promises of God, and when they be often laide afore vs, let vs not thinke the tyme to be lost in hearing them: but let vs vnderstand that our Lordes intent is to emprint them in vs, to the ende we should sticke vnto them, and be so thoroughly grounded in them, as Satan may neuer haue power to turne vs away, by any meanes whatsoeuer. That is a thing which we haue yet farther to remember.

Now let vs come to that which Moses spake vnto him. Moreover thou shalt go before the people (sayeth hee) and therefore bee of good courage and behaue thyselfe manfully. When hee sayeth vnto him, that he shall go before the people, he stablisheth his auctoritie in the name of G O D.

10 Whereby he maketh it manifest, that it is not for men to thrust in themselves; accordingly also as the Apostle saith, ŷ no man ought to vsurpe honour vnto himselfe, but hee ŷ is called to it must vndertake and discharge the same: let vs then learne to hold vs in such modestie & simplicitie, as ŷ none of vs auance himselfe about measure, ne passe his boundes, as who would say, I will do this or that, not knowing whether he be appointed of God or not, but let euerie man be contented to doe that which is his charge, let a man gouerne his owne housholdes; and sith he is but a priuate person, let him not vsurpe vpon that which is not permitted vnto him. Let the minister of the worde preach, and exhort, and accōplish his dutie, let the magistrate in like wise looke whereunto hee is called, let euerie of vs, keep his degree & his order: and let there be no confused mingling among vs. That is the thing which we must remember. Very large doctrine might be gathered out of this article, but I will not stande much thercuppon; for it hath bene often spoken of, & it is sufficient for me to touch these matters in fewe wordes, for when they be once hearde, euerie man may thinke vpon them afterwarde. And greatly shall they haue profited in Gods schoole, which can holde themselves in quiet, and not attempt more than God hath cōmanded them, but simply followe their owne vocation. That is the thing which we haue to marke in this place, where Moses ordaineth Iosuah in his steede, howbeit speaking, as in the person of God, and by his auctoritie.

Moreover he sheweth that when God calleth vs to any charge, he doth also giue vs the ability to accomplish that which he cōmandeth vs. And this is a necessary doctrine. What is the cause ŷ men be so fearful, that if they see but a shadow, by and by they be amazed and at their wits end how to do the things which they knowe to belong to their office? They see wel ynough wherunto God hath called them; and yet for all that they shrinke away their shoulderts: and what causeth that? Euen that cursed distrust of ours, in that we consider not that God doth giue vs, and that he hath his hande euermore stretched out to helpe vs, so we walke simply, and doe our endeour to obey him, and followe him quietly, hauing regarde to our office and calling. And so it is a lesson whereof we can not be too mindful, which is ment in these wordes: Thy God will not forsake thee. And well ought we to put the same in vte. For it is a Testimonie, that God will neuer giue them ouer, whom hee setteth a worke, but that he wil giue them power, & bleffe them, & make the successe of their trauaile to be good and happy, if they stay vpon him and leane vnto him.

him . Yea and wee see that in the epistle to the Hebr. 3. 5. Hebrues, the Apostle extendeth the same yet further, where he saith, Let your heartes be farre 13. 5. from couetoufnesse, and know ye that it is written, The Lorde wil not forsake you . Whereby he sheweth vs, that whereas we vse so many wicked trades; and whereas treason, crueltie & malice doe leade vs into such extremities, that we sling ouerthwart the feeldes, and walking in by-paths doe followe our owne disordered lustes: 10 the wellspring of all these vices is that we put not our trust in God; neither is it throughly wel seled in our heartes with any certaine assurednes that the Lorde is neere vnto vs, and that he will neuer forsake vs. And therefore seeing we haue no stay, but be so wauering & carryed away with vnquietnes, yea & set on fire, and our lustes be as a thousand fornaes continually burning within vs, because we haue not our trust in God; let vs learne to comit ourselues to his prouidence, & to 20 holde ourselues assured y hee will not faile vs: & then shall we finde the thing y is tolde vs heere: namely, y euerie man in his vocation may be assured y God will be alwaies present with him. Is a man charged with a household: Then will he be full of care, & if he haue a nuber of children, hee grudgeth, saying, Alas what shall I say? If I had but one or two children, I could deale as wel as they y haue no charge at all: but now y I haue so many hanging on my shouldurs; alas what shall I do: True it is, y a father ought in deede to take care for his children: but what manner of care should y be? It must moue him to call vpon God to haue recourse to his helpe, to hold his family in order, that things go not to hauocke; it must cause him to instruct his children to lue in seberitie, and to bee contented with a litle, & not to lauish out y which they haue: but labour that God may blesse the. Such is the care that a father ought to haue. And this kinde of care lundereth him not to rest vpō God, y hauing tasted this promise; namely, Thy God will not forsake thee, he do alwaies his dutie, and gouerne well his household. And euen to it is of all others. Although they see neuer so great difficulties (as there be many which in their vocation, notwithstanding y they be priuate persons, do finde theselues greatly pulled backe) yet must they euer haue recourse to this anchorhold; Thy God is aboue, he will guide thee, care not: so thou folow him, his helpe shall neuer faile thee. Much more reason is it therefore, y such as be in higher office and haue a heauier burthen to beare, should haue recourse to this promise when they see troubles, and many grudgings against the, and perceiue the world inflamed with malice, & to say, What will our Lord sleepe in heauen? The thing y was spoken to Iouah, was it spokē only for one yere?
 No: but in y person of him God meant to assure vs, y when we walke in our dutie, and go directly to work as he hath comāded vs, hauing regard to obey him rather than to please the world, he is with vs and will assist vs. Seeing it is so, let vs march on, and not care for any thing that can happen vnto vs. This (I say) is the tue vse of this doctrine.

Moreover, although we haue this assurance, that God will accomplish & performe the worke that he hath begun, yet doth it not follow therefore, y we also should not inforce ourselues. For these two things are ioyned together, namely, thy God will neuer giue thee ouer; and therefore be thou of good courage. & behaue thyselfe valiantly. It is not ment then, y God leadeth vs as it were sleepeing, and as though it were no harde matter for vs to do him seruice, when it pleaseth him to imploy vs to any charge & office. No: no:
 for we must labour therein, till wee pant againe, & sometime it shall seeme vnto vs y God is farre frō vs & things shall be doubtful & disordered, y we wot not what shall become of vs: but then let vs cheere vp our selues. After y maner must wee trust in the prouidence of our God. And when we be so stayed thereupon, it is not ment y we should therefore let things fall out as they may, as wee see many doe, which take occasion to waxe cold. God (say they) will prouide, & in the mean while they neglect their owne duerie. It is not ment that we should shut our eyes, saying, God will prouide for it. Truly although all things in the world were as far out of order as could be; yet ought we to be well assured, howsoever we fare: but yet on the other side we must serue God after such maner as he hath appointed vs to be his in-strumetes, yea and y in such wise as if it be his will, that we must suffer much, y then wee must haue patience & not be ouerthrowē nor broken thereby. The thing the in effect which we haue to beare in mind concerning this place, is y we must labour all our life long in such wise, as euery one may keepe himselfe within his owne boundes & limites, and y we attempt not rashly more than God giueth vs leaue to do. And moreover y we must not be afraid to do, & to employ vs to those things which our duty requireth, assuring ourselues y God is neere vnto vs, and that we shall feele his power at our neede, and y hee will not forsake vs. When men thinke y all is lost, & doe mocke vs, & count vs as people past hope of recouery, let vs not doubt but y our Lord will ac-40 complish that which is heere promised: and therefore let vs euermore holde on with patience, waiting for the performance of that which wee heere spoken of heere.

Now let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our fautes, beseeching him to make vs to feele them more & more, and y in likewise by acknowledging the frailty y is in vs, we may seeke to arine vs so with his promises, as we may be senced vntil the end, not only to sustain one cōbat or two, but also to fight all the daies of our life, & to re-maine inuincible against all manner of tēptations: And y forasmuch as it behoueth vs to depend altogether vpon him; we may be so stayed thereupon, y when things do happen vnto vs contrary to our mindes as in respect of the world, we may not thereby be abashed or dismayed, but trust that he only is as good as all other helpes, & therupō comit ourselues vnto him, endeavoring to glori-fie him: and y seeing it is his will to gouerne vs by the hand of our Lord Iesus Christ, we may be pliable

pliable and obedient vnto him; that being assured that he is our good and faithful guide, & that he will not faile vs, we may euermore take the more courage to giue ouer ourselues, and whol-

The CLXXIIII. Sermon which is the second vpon the one & thirtieth Chapter.

9 And Moses wrote this lawe and deliuered it to the Priestes the sonnes of Leuie, which bare the Arke of the couenant of the Lord, and to all the Elders of Israell.

10 And Moses commaunded them, saying, At the ende of euery seuenth yeere, in the time of the yeere of freedome, in the feast of Tabernacles, 11 When all Israell commeth to appeare before the Lord thy God, in the place which hee shall choose: then shalt thou reade this Lawe before all Israell, in the hearing of them.

12 Thou shalt gather the people together, men, women, and children, and thy stranger which is within thy gates, that they may heare and learne and feare the Lorde your God, and keepe all the wordes of this lawe, to doe them.

13 And that their children also which haue not knowen it, may heare it and learne it, so as they may feare the Lorde your God all the dayes that thou hast to liue in the Lande whither thou goest ouer Iordan to possesse it.

14 Then the Lorde sayde vnto Moses, beholde, the dayes of thy death are at hande: call Iosuah and stande ye at the Tabernacle of the Congregation that I may giue him his charge. And so Moses and Iosuah went, and stood at the Tabernacle of the Congregation.

WE do wel confesse that God dealeth graciously with men, when he vouchsafeth to teach them, and to shewe them the way of saluation. For we see well it is a most miserable state when men haue no teaching all their life long, but do guide themselues at all aduentures. Nowe the ease so standeth that we can not holde any way that is certaine for vs, but only  $\bar{y}$  which God sheweth vs: for as for the thinges which men deuise, in deede they thinke them good ynough, but in the meane while, albeit that they bee blinded with their owne fantasies, yet must they needes euermore stande in dout, and God maketh it manifest at the last, that it was but vanitie and folly. If men therefore were well aduised, nothing should be more deere vnto them, than to haue Gods truth to guide them, which would be a lampe to shewe them the way of saluation. Beholde, God calleth vs, hee tarieth not till we come to seeke that which is good for vs, neither would he haue vs to fetch long windlasses: but he offereth himselfe of his owne good will, assuring vs that we can not faile, if we will hearken to his voyce; he will giue vs sufficient instruction, and he p<sup>r</sup> tested: that it shall not be in vaine for vs to followe that which we shall haue heard at his mouth. Yet notwithstanding, wee for all this doe make smal account to be taught of him; euery of vs wandereth after his owne imagination: and (which worse is) hauing hadde some taft and knowledge, and hauing founde by experience that all our whole happinesse lyeth there, and that our whole contentment and rest ouglit to be settled in the obeying of Goddes worde; yet is there none of vs but hee turneth aside from it, and the same hath beene common in all ages. Nowe therefore, to remedie this mischeife, G O D hath vouchsafed that his word should be kept by some meane, and that some certaine folke should haue the charge to preferue it safe and sounde; that it might not perishe. Wherein we behold the inestimable care that he hath of our saluation. Be not wee worthy to be deprived of such a treasure, seeing we do esteeme it to litle? Yes: for our vnthankfulness deserueth the wrath of God, and that he should withdrawe the thing which hee hadde bestowed vpon vs. Yet notwithstanding, hee ceaseth not to drawe vs still backe vnto him: and heereof wee see heere a goodly example in that it is sayde that Moses hauing written the lawe, committed it to the priestes

the children of Leue, which carried the Arke, and to all the Elders of Israel, which hadde the charge and authoritie to gouerne the people . True it is, that when G O D hath once published his worde, euery man ought to be thinke him to receiue it, for euery man ought to take heede to it, for himselfe; men ought not to depende one vpon another: neuerthelesse there is not any man that is greatly carefull thereof. It is behouefull therefore that G O D should appoint people to watch ouer vs, whilest we sleepe, and to call vpon vs: and if they see vs readie to swaue aside, they must restraine vs. This is the cause, why it was specially requisite that the lawe should be deliuered into the handes of the Priestes. First of all it was written; and it was sufficient, that the people had hearde the will of G O D. If men had good remembrance, and would not forget that which they haue learned; it were ynough I say, that Moses had once declared vnto them that which was requisite for their welfare. For hee hadde commaunded them to occupie their mindes about the studie thereof both night and day, and to write the lawe vpon the postes of their houses, vpon their tables, and euery where else; to the intent, that whyther soeuer they turned their eyes, they might euer be stirred to thinke vpon G O D. Againe, they ought to haue had a care to instruct their children: and besides this, the Lawe was copied out, yea and to be kept as it were vpon Recorde of authoritie, as which proceeded altogether from the hande of G O D. And the reason was that the people did soone growe out of kinde. Although they hadde their eares beate with the things that were contained in the lawe; yet turned they away to superstition, and afterward euery man became dullheaded & had nothing in him but ignorance, so as w<sup>h</sup> in a while there was no knowledge of G O D among them. But is the lawe written? Yea it is necessarie that it be committed as a treasure into the handes of the Priestes, which be y<sup>e</sup> messengers of G O D, as saith the Prophet Malachy; Knowledge ought to dwell in their mouth; and when we haue asked counsell of the, we ought to hearken vnto them to be informed of the truth. Nowe then they are appointed to be keepers. But what came to passe after that G O D had provided so well for the matter? The lawe perished and was lost. And surely seeing there was so good order takē for the preservation thereof, that men might heare it spoken of, yea and y<sup>e</sup> at the end of euery seven yeere in the feast of Tabernacles, in y<sup>e</sup> solemne day, the covenant of G O D was to be renewed, & the whole law was to be repeated before all the people: it is an incredible matter y<sup>e</sup> the same was so straitly kept, yet notwithstanding y<sup>e</sup> in the meane while there was such rechelesnes, y<sup>e</sup> the people made no reckoning to be deprived of their chief welfare. For me (as we haue already sayd) be more wretched than brute beasts, vnlesse they be taught by G O D. To what end serueth all the reason & vnderstanding y<sup>e</sup> they suppose theselues to haue by nature, but to their greuouser condemnation, vntil G O D hath put forth his hand to them, and haue shewed the wherunto they must sticke: But yet howeuer the worlde went, the children of Israel, blest seede of Abraham, the chosen people, elect & adopted of G O D, his inheritance and his Church, they (I say) vnto whō G O D had done so great honor, whō hee had exalted vnto so high a dignitie, hauing heard the law published, ought euery of them to haue borne it in minde, and to haue kept it as carefully as men keepe the charters of a kingdom, or the Crowne, or other such things. And truly in all coparison, the lawe of G O D deserueth well to haue the preeminence aboue al y<sup>e</sup> euer is in the world. But yet for all that it vanissheth away, & in the mean space the people had no great care thereof. And surely it is a very strange case how it shold come to passe, considering y<sup>e</sup> the remembrance thereof was so solemnly kept, by reason wherof al the people ought to haue thought thus: How now? We lose this good custom, whereby y<sup>e</sup> law of G O D shold now found in our eares, whereby we should haue y<sup>e</sup> remembrance thereof renewed; whereby we shold be confirmed in his covenant, & whereby the same should be ratified vnto vs by y<sup>e</sup> reading of the law. The people (I say) had no regard to any of these things. In deede they assembled at y<sup>e</sup> feast day, & made great cheere, but yet euery body returned home to his owne house, w<sup>h</sup>out hauing regarde to these things, in so much y<sup>e</sup> the lawe lay as it were buried vntil the time of Iosias, in the which it was found againe. True it is y<sup>e</sup> at that time they were greatly abashed at it: but yet we see the rechelesnes of men in y<sup>e</sup> they spake not a word when they were deprived of so great a benefit. And y<sup>e</sup> is a token of too shamefull thankelnes. Heere haue we a lookinglasse, wherein we may very well behold the affectiō of men: for we at this day be no better than the Iewes were. And in deede wee perceiue howe the world seeketh nought else but to be exempted, y<sup>e</sup> they might not haue their eares troubled with the law of G O D, nor with his word. True it is that they are ashamed, & do abhor to say y<sup>e</sup> *G O D*s word shold be despised; but yet they would make it a relique, to be worshipped a farre off, & as a sealed letter, so as men shold content theselues with the doing of some honor & ceremony to it, as if they should say, Lo, the word of G O D shal be reuerenced, but yet it belongeth not to vs to trouble ourselues ouermuch therewith, by applying our study thereunto. We see then how the world doth euermore shuffe it selfe from taking any such knowledge of *G O D*s word as they ought to haue. For whereof cometh the horrible ignorance, which reigneth yet still in many countries, & generally in all the popedom, but only of this, y<sup>e</sup> men referre theselues to the Monkes & Freers, and such other people, or at leastwise to the Popes Clergie for the knowledge of the holy scripture: For it is not for secular or temporall persons (as they terme them) to deale therewith. And the secular priestes also (as they call them) discharge theselues thereof & put it ouer to the Monkes: they say it belongeth to none but doctors of diuinity to deale with it. See how buttif the world was become. And yet a man would thinke it strange y<sup>e</sup> men shold be so grossly ouerseene scene, as to haue no discretion in y<sup>e</sup> behalfe, but that they shold be led by the muscles like beasts, and go astray after y<sup>e</sup> manner. How is it possible y<sup>e</sup> God should so forsake his church, & that things should be so grossely abused? Let vs looke to the cause & fountaine of the mischief. When God kindleth the light of life amongst vs, if we shutte our eyes therat, & turne our backs, or take couertes to sleepe in, & play the sluggardes, which shut their windowes, y<sup>e</sup> sun should not shine into their eyes: if we seeke to fertile after y<sup>e</sup> sorte in our leas; is it not meete y<sup>e</sup> God shold withdraw all his teaching from vs? Surely it is the paymēt which the world hath receiued, because y<sup>e</sup> where it shoulde haue sought learning fit for it; it chose rather to be ignorant, y<sup>e</sup> it might haue excuse before God. And moreover, when our Lord vouchsafed y<sup>e</sup> his Gospell should be preached, that the world might be inlightened by y<sup>e</sup> brightnes thereof; men did openly rebell against it, & chose to obey lyes rather than the truth. Therefore it could not be but y<sup>e</sup> such horrible vengeance must needs come vpon them. Againe we see the care that God hath had to preferre his gospel in perfect state. For like as he had provided for y<sup>e</sup> law, euen so hath he also done by the gospell, which is the perfection of all learning, according as S. Paul sayth in the second to Timo thee. We see there what order he established in the Church, Looke what thou hast hearde of me (saith he) by many witnesses, commit thou it ouer as a gage vnto faithfull folke, which be meete and able to teach others. There S. Paul appointed keepers of the gospell, as God had earst appointed y<sup>e</sup> Leuiticall priests for keepers of the lawe. Also hee would y<sup>e</sup> they shold be faithfull folke which shold be occupied & employed therein: and he would y<sup>e</sup> they likewise shoulde doe their dutie in deliuering y<sup>e</sup> things ouer frō hand to hand, as they had receiued the, to y<sup>e</sup> intent they might not be hidden in darkenes. Yet neuertheless we see howe it is come to passe. Therefore, wee must marke well in this place, y<sup>e</sup> God hath euermore procured the saluation of his people, & of those whom he hath chosen, & not forgotten any thing that might be a meane to keepe them vnder his obedience. Thus much for one point.

Morcouer, whereas the world hath bin alwaies wauering, & caried hither & thither, and could not stay nor hold it selfe to y<sup>e</sup> seruing of God, nor suffer it selfe to be guyded by the doctrine which is for the saluation thereof; & to be short, whereas men play the wilde beasts; it is not at the first dash y<sup>e</sup> they haue so resisted God, or made countenance to disobey him: but they haue turned away frō him by litle & litle, in such sort y<sup>e</sup> within short time they haue salne quite & cleane away. And so ye see how men haue continued in their nauhtines, & not kept the lawe y<sup>e</sup> was deliuered vnto the for a rule to liue by, & for y<sup>e</sup> way to lead them to saluatiō. Seeing it is so, we ought to take so much the more heede to the things which are shewed vnto vs heere. What must then be done? It is not ynough y<sup>e</sup> the truth be [but only] writtē for to what end shall y<sup>e</sup> serue me but to my greater condemnation? But forasmuch as men are so wedded to the things that concerne this transitorie life, & think not on the heauenly treasure; it is requisite y<sup>e</sup> there should be good keepers: and about all things wee must note y<sup>e</sup> there will alwaies be a speciall order to retaine vs euermore in the obedience of God, so long as his worde is daily shewed vnto vs, & that euery man hath it in his handes. And if this be not permitted, wee shall quickly be carried hither & thither, and there will be no stay in vs, vnlesse we haue such a bridle to hold vs backe. That is a thing which we haue to marke.

Nowe in y<sup>e</sup> meane while we see what charge is here cōmitted aswel to the Leuites, as to the rulers. True it is, y<sup>e</sup> at this day there is no certaine kined allotted thereto by God in his Church: for his wil is, y<sup>e</sup> Shepherds shold be chosen: which office is no heritage: but he would y<sup>e</sup> they shold be taken according as they bee knowen meete. Neuertheless al Pastors, & Elders, that is to say, all Officers, & such as haue publike charge, must vnderstande that they must employ theselues to maintaine the pure religion, & that they must be as keepers of the word of God, to the end that it shold not perishe. And albeit y<sup>e</sup> there is no excuse for the rest of the people: yet shall these feele double vengeance, if they do not, what lyeth in them, to cause men to continue constant in the pure worde of God, & to see that euery body be taught, & that both great & small do yelde theselues thereunto. If they straine not themselues to the vttermost of their powers y<sup>e</sup> Gods trueth may continue sounde, it is certaine that they are to account therefore.

Now as touching that which Moses saith further, That he cōmandeth the children of Israel, that on the solemne day at the feast of the Tabernacles at the end of euery seuen yeere, the law should be recited to all the people: it is not meant y<sup>e</sup> God would not haue the Iewes taught it daily: but it was yet a straiter band, & the keeping y<sup>e</sup> solemnitie, (as we haue seene heretofore where we treated of the covenant made by Moses) was not to the intent y<sup>e</sup> the people shold [at other times] be vnmindfull of the lawe, but to y<sup>e</sup> intent they should be y<sup>e</sup> deeeperly touched therewith, & haue it the better ratified after a solemne manner. That is the very meaning of this place. Euery yeere, yea at euery feast or solemnitie, y<sup>e</sup> people cōming to the tēple were to be taught in deede. The sacrifices were not to be done as a vaine pompe; but in such sort as men might know the end & vse of the, so as euery body might vnderstād what God he serued, & be put in mind of the covenant which he had made with their fathers. But yet herewithall, besides all this, God did moreover ad a larger confirmation thereof, by renewing the remembrance thereof at y<sup>e</sup> end of seuen yeres, as it were by the solemne taking of a new oth, to the end y<sup>e</sup> it shold not vanish away. Let vs vnderstand then, y<sup>e</sup> when men had exercised theselues frō day to day, and frō moneth to moneth, & had all their life long studied in the lawe of God, & bin taught his wil; yet this ceremony was neuertheless obserued, that they did reade all the contentes of the lawe that the people might consider thus y<sup>e</sup> theselues;

Matt. 18, 20

Deut. 29, 11.

Eph. 5, 26.
Tit. 3, 5.

This is not a treasure y may at any time perishe from among vs, God hath not giue it for a time: but it is for vs & for our childre for euermore, as we haue seene in y 29. chap. Seeing it is so, let vs take heed y we continue the possession therof amog vs, & y through our own rechelesnes we be not defeated of so inestimable a benefite, which ought to be preferred aboue all y riches & delectable things of this world. Now wheras he spea keth of y feast, it is said, At such time as al Israel shal be asssembled together in the presençe of his god. We haue heretofore often times treated of this maner of speaking, & it is nowe needelesse to stande long vpon it. It is ynough for vs alwayes to remeber, y God in commanding men to come & worship him in his holy sanctuarie, meant that the faithfull should haue a certain testimonie, & pawne of his presence, to the intent they should the willingly resort thither, & vnderstand that so to do was not an vnprofitable & lost labour. Yet notwithstanding God ment not to hold y Jewes in any grosse imagination, as if he had been enclosed in the Arke of the couenant, or as if his essence had bin betwixt y Cherubins: but his coming down was of purpose to make y faithful to mount vp to heauen through faith: & that is the common maner which hee hath alwayes holden in his church. For in as much as wee are not able to approach vnto him, nor to haue any access thither because of our infirmities; hee vouchsafeth to stoop to our littleness: howbeit not to make vs to nestle ourselues here beneath, or to conceiue grosse opinions, as though hee were tyed to the elements of this world: but rather y by such means, hee might raise our faith vp on hye. Thus were they taught in the time of the law. And euen now also doth he vse the same maner of dealing with vs at this day. We haue at this day the Sacraments. In dede wee haue not so great a multitude, as the fathers had, for it were more than needed for vs, because we haue the substance of all the olde shadowes our Lord Iesus Christ. But yet for all that, God doth ful at this day apply him selfe to our rudenes by his sacraments. In y water of baptisme we haue a testimonie y we be washed & made cleane, and that we be renyed by his holy spirite. Now then we must not muse vpon the water; but when we see the visible signe, we must rise aloft, & vnderstand, y God accomplisheth the thing in trueth, which is signified vnto vs by the visible Sacrament. Euen so also it is of the Supper. Wee see there bread & wine, but we must through faith mount vp to our Lord Iesus Christ, who is y true foode of our soules, that we may be fed & satisfied in him. And the same is called the presence of God. And why? For it is no deceitfull matter, neither doth God intend to beguyle vs, when he declaredh & witnesseth vnto vs, y we be washed, & fed by the vertue of his onely sonne; but hee would that we should be assured of it, by feeling the verie effect therof. Now when God uttereth such vertue, do not we feele him present? Let vs note then, that God is present with vs when we come vnto him, being called thither, & hauing the meanes which he hath ordeined: and in like wife when wee be asssembled together, there is a presence of our God. For our Lord Iesus Christ sitteth in the midst of vs, because wee bee his. We must not think that he is farre off, but that he receiueh al our requests, & that we be hard, & do obtaine of God his father all that is conuenient for vs. Thus ought wee to take courage. When we vse the Sacraments, when wee come to heare y word of God, when we make commo prayers, & when we obserue the whole order which God hath established in his church: let vs be assured that he is with vs, & that hee assueth vs not in vaine, & that we make no windlalles as other men do, greatly tormenting themselves in following their owne fancies. No no; but in so doing our God preuenteth vs, & seeketh altogether to haue vs ioyned vnto him; & that hee will shew the same openly & make vs to vnderstand it by effect. That is the thing in effect, which we haue to remember concerning the manner of speech which Moses vseth here.

And by the way, the people are warned by this meane, to heare the law with y more heede & reuerence. What is the cause, that when the worde of God is preached vnto vs, many in the meane while doe wander in the ayre, or bee at home with their household, or else fall on asleepe; and (to be short) that although they doe both heare & vnderstand, yet they bee not moued a whit; the law & the Gospel bee vnto them as a matter of nothing; whence cometh such contempt? For it is against nature; that our GOD should speake, & that the creatures which liue by his grace, & which ought to dedicate themselves wholly vnto him, should yeeld him solite honor & authoritie. We do easily vouchsafe to heare a man, if we haue him in any estimation; no worde that proceedeth from his mouth shal fall to the ground; but we wil as it were suck vp whatsoeuer is spoken by so great a personage; in so much that before his words be fully pronounced, we conceiue what he meant to speake. Behold, God speakeh, & albet y it be by y mouth of men, yet is it his will that his word should be of like maiestie with vs, as if hee himselfe were here in person. But it preuaileth not: & that is because we thinke not on this presence wherof Moses speakeh in this place. Let vs marke wel then, that where it is sayde that when the people asssemble together, in the presence of their god, then the law shalbe repeated; it is as a preparatiue. For to the end that wee should be drawne away, & carried vp from the cares of the world, & from the vaine & fond gasings, with y which we be intangled by nature: our Lorde doth here waken vs, and tel vs, that it is he that speakeh, & that hee wil throughly in struēt such as wil heare him with all humilitie, and that his worde shal in like wise haue the power and force to searche mens heartes and to trye all their thoughtes & affections. Seeing it is so that we cannot eschue the presence of our God, and that hee sunnioneth vs before his maiestie, and declareth that when we heare his worde, it is to note and marke out them that obey him; that so at the least wife wee shoulde not bee so doltish, as nor to apply our endeouour to bee taught as wee ought, nor to conceiue a feruent zeale, with such meekenesse and aptnesse to learne, as S. James requireth in vs, but that wee may haue the seed of life take roore in our hearts to bring forth such fruites as may bee acceptable to our God. This then is one circumstance more which wee haue to obserue in this place, where Moses declarerth y when the people were come together after the order which G O D had set downe in his lawe, hee woulde bee present with them, and it was as an opening of the gate of heauen.

Nowe let vs come to that which hee adderth. He sayeth, That all Israel shall be gathered together, and that they shall read the law before men, women & little children. When he saith, Thou shalt assemble the people, he doth againe make it manifest that men will neuer come at God vnlesse they bee thrust forward & pricked as oxen or asses: & that serueth to make vs yet more ashamed of such rechelesnes. For little children need not to be exhorted to breake their fast, they can very well aske their food: the great ones also are desirous ynough to be fed, euery man hath care ynough for his belly: we neede no sollicitors to come vnto vs to say, And wil ye not dyne? But in y meane while, behold, our soules starue, if they want the food which God hath ordeined for them: and yet who is he that careth for it? Who is he that commeth to seeke that food? None. Therefore it is said, Thou shalt assemble the people. We see the what beastinesse there is in vs: albeit that wee think our selues to be very able, & that euery of vs boasteth himself to be a reasonable creature, & that we haue wit & discretion to gouerne our selues: magnifie we our selues neuer so much after y maner, yet seeke wee nothing but to perish in our ignorancie: and we be so farre off from seeking God, that he is faine to giue vs many strokes with the spurre to draw vs vnto him, because we be so ill disposed: yea & we see y example hereof in our selues, in so much y if there were not an houre appointed for it, how many should a man finde that would haue the regard to say, Let vs heare the word of God, y we may haue some teaching? Nay, euen when the houre is come, & the bell hath bin tolled, euen then stil the most part make none account thereof. I speake not of them which haue small leasure therunto, & which haue some excuse: but of such as haue ease & all things at wil, in so much as they knowe not howe to bestow the time, they are euen wearie of it & wote not what to do, nor (as they say) how to driue away the time; and yet rather than they will go to the church, they will sit downe ydly in their houses, or else in the streetes rather than come to heare a sermon. It is certaine y there be some venimous toads, which gnash their teeth against the word of God, & doe flee from it as much as they may; but there be others which come thither, they wote not wherefore, sauing that they looke for no teaching. Others come thither for a fashion, & because there is in it a certain ceremony: but yet for all that, they be neuer y better mynded nor the better disposed towards it.

Now then we perceiue y looke how much God calleth vpon vs to heare his word; so much the more slow we be thereunto. And also contrarywise, we see how our Lord reprobeth our vnthankfulness, & y we misapply & misuse the good which he doth to vs, & as much as in vs lyeth, suffer it to perish, vnlesse he vse all maner of helpes, to ser vs forward more & more.

As touching that he saith, that the law shall be preached & recited to men, women, & little children: we see in this place, y God hath not giuen his word to a smal portion of people only, but would y al in general should be partakers of it, euen fro the most vnto the least; & that is a very notable lesson. For we see the craftines of Sathan, how he hath laboured to depriue the greater part of the world of that benefite, vnder colour that the word of God is no comon matter; y it is too high & too deepe; and that it is too obscure. And moreouer they haue had this opinion, that it is not for men to enter into it, for that it is a Labyrinth to maze men withal, & men cannot fasten vpon it. Wee see howe these hypocrytes in the popedome do terrifie the people from reading the word of God. Take heede (say they) for it is dangerous for you to aduenture so farre. In every deede y word of God is sacred and holy: but what then? If the vnlearned sorte should taste of it, they should forthwith be infected with heresies, & their errors would be infinite, so as they should fall into great confusion. By this meanes men dare not once seeke after the will of God: but they be borne in hande, y as soone as they enter into it, they by and by plunge themselves into a bottomlesse gulfe. Contrary to that, here God sayth, y when he gaue his law, it was not aonly for the Trybe of Leui, but for al y people: and not for men only, but for women also, yea, & euen for the little children. Let vs holde it (say I) for a conclusion, that where as God hath giuen vs his lawe, and all the doctrine that is contained therein; it is the testament which he hath left for vs: and thereby hath he adopted vs for his children. Nowe if wee be not the children of God, then are wee not worthe to haue any thing in common with him: but hee calleth vs vnto him. And how shall we be sure of it, if he himselfe bee not a faithfull witness vnto vs of his will? Seeing then that our Lorde certifieth vs of our saluation, when he giueth vs his word: we must vnderstande that he will not suffer vs to stray, as though wee knewe not whether wee shoulde turne on the right hand or on the left: but that hee doth giue vs an infallible direction. Seeing then that hee vouchsafeth to doe the office of a schoolemaster towards vs; let vs in deuour to profite thereby, and let vs behaue our selues like good scholers towards him, and let none of vs in this case alleage, I am no clarke. For God hath not spoken to the greates doctours onely, but his will was to deale fourth his worde in common both to great and small, and to the most ignorant: and he hath so tempered it to their capacities, as that all they which come to yeeld themselves teachable, shall very well perceiue that our Lorde knew well what is meete for them, and they shall be taught after such sort as he knoweth to be most convenient for them. Now if this be verified of the lawe, much more reason is it that it should at this day take effect in the time of the Gospel. For we heare how it is saide by the Prophet Esay; that in the kingdom of our Lorde Iesus Christ all shall be taught of God. Marke the prophet Esay, who knewe very well that God had giuen his law to al the Lewes, and that it was a good and profitable instruction, as well for the litle children as for the Elders. But yet for as much as hee knewe wel that God would vter forth his grace more largely, and sende a newe manner of light of vnderstanding, when as Iesus Christ should be manifested vnto the world; hee sayeth that then all the children of the church should be taught of God. And we see that in the Popedome, where they turne away the people from reading the holy Scripture. It is a wicked blasphemie, when men suffer themselves to be so blynded, and vouchsafe not to suffer themselves to be lead nor taught at Gods hands; yea & they haue proceeded to so diuclish blasphemie, as to accuse the holy Scripture of too much darknes, as a thing of too great depth where in men ought not to be instructed, for feare lest they should forthwith be possessed with many errors. When they talk on that wise, the iniurie tendeth to y<sup>e</sup> liuing God; for they accuse him of vntrueth, notwithstanding the protestation that he maketh by his Prophet Esay; Yea & wee see, howe all the whole Scripture is full of the like testimonies, whereby it is auowed that the holy Scripture is profitable. There needed no more but this one place of S. Paul, where hee sayeth, That all scripture is profitable to instruct, to exhort, to disprouue and to rebuke. Hee sayeth not that it is profitable for three or foure rables of scurvie Monkes or shauelinges; hee sayeth not so: but he sayeth that it is profitable to make the man of God perfect. And therefore let vs not doubt, but that when our Lorde deliuered his lawe hee knewe our capacitie, and applyed himselfe in such wise therunto, as hee teacheth vs according to our measure. In so much that if wee bee teachable, wee shall fynde that his doctrine was not deliuered vs in vayne, but that hee meaneth to guyde vs thereby vnto saluation, as it is in deede the true meane to attayne thereunto: onely let vs suffer our selues to bee governed of our G O D, and not behaue our selues stubbornly towardes him, seeing hee offereth himselfe so freely vnto vs. And surely it ought to moue vs very much, when hee sayeth, that God will haue all, yea euen the litle children and all to bee hearers of his lawe. For he telleth vs (as Salomon also sayeth in his booke of the Preacher) that men must not delaye to thinke vpon G O D, till they beginne to droope and bee broken with age. Yet notwithstanding, wee see howe youth runneth astray, and that there is nothing harder than to make young folke beleue that they must be bridled in, that they must employ themselves, whilft they be strong and histic, and that they must so much the more apply their wittes

to be instructed in the word of God. A man can not bring this to passe, but the stronger & lustier they be, the more carelesse be they. Now Moses sheweth in this place, that as soone as the litle ones begin to discern betweene good and euill, they must learne to knowe what God created them; and then what God hath shewed him selfe to be their father; & what God they ought to serue; & wherein they must put their trust.

10 And in very deede, at the verse same time, God did alreadie at y<sup>e</sup> eighth day, giue a marke of his free adoption; for before they knew either good or euil, God entertained them to be of his flock, and the circumcision serued to seale the promise of saluation which he had made in saying; I will bee the G O D of thy seede. Seeing that children be thus entertained, and God hath made it manifest that they bee of his church, & houholde people of the kingdome of heauen: 20 is it meete that when they be come to the age of vnderstanding, they should holde some of him which hath presented them with so great goodnes? Ought they not to know, who is their creator, and in likewise, who hee is that hath vouchsafed to shewe himselfe to bee their father, when as hee hath receyued them for his children?

And wee at this day haue so good reason as the Lewes had. For as soone as our children be born, they be caried to baptisme. And there God doth shewe that hee hath already chosen them, and that his will is that they should bee as of his houholde. Therefore when an infant is thus declared to bee a member of our Lorde Iesus Christ, before he doth vnderstand what y<sup>e</sup> grace of God or religion or any thing else is: should he not when he cometh to age of vnderstanding, indeouour to learne y<sup>e</sup> he was created of God; who 40 having created him after his owne image, hath vouchsafed also to choose him to be of the number and company of his people: and hath placed him in the body of our Lord Iesus Christ, to the end he should be partaker of the inheritance of saluation? Considering so many and so inestimable benefites receiued at Gods hand, ought he not (say I) to giue himselfe whole to him and to his seruice? And if they doe it not, doe they not shewe themselves too much vnthankfull in 50 disappoyning the grace which was then giuen vnto them? Also our Lord sheweth the zeale that ought to bee in them which bee taught by his word: namely, that so much as in them lyeth, they must not suffer any despisers of religion to dwell amongst them: but rather take paines to winne the poore ignorant sort, and euery man reache his hand to him that goeth astray, so as it may not bee long of vs, that all men bee not brought into the way of saluation, and that all of vs liue not with one accorde as wee ought to doe.

It is saide: The stranger also that dwelleth with thee, shall in likewise be saung. In deede they had not the promise, as the childre of Abraham had: they were not of the body of that people. But neuertheless God would not haue any brutish people to abide there, which should despise all religion; for it is such an infection and corruption as is not to bee borne withall in the church, when such folke are to bee seene there as knowe not whether there bee a God in heauen, or not, or which knowe not what religion they shoulde holde. Such are to bee ridde away, or else there wilbee nothing but corruption, which in the ende will marre all.

Againe, it is sayde, The children of them which haue not heard thereof afore. It is shewed in this place, that when the lawe of God hath serued to establish vs in his feare, and in the hope of his goodnes, and that wee our selues haue bene edified thereby from day to day: wee must not forget them that haue not yet tasted of  $\bar{y}$  trueth, but doe as yet goe astray in their errors: we must pitie them, and doe our induour, so much as in vs lyeth, to winne them, that God may be honoured of vs all together. That is all in effect which wee haue to beare away concerning this place. Nowe (as I haue alreadie sayde) if the people of Israel were exhorted to haue such a care, in the time when they had the doctrine yet more darkely than it is nowe deliuered vnto vs in the Gospel, (for albeit that it was sufficient for that time; yet in comparison of the Gospel, it was not so large as wee haue it now) sith it is so, let vs looke well to our selues, and marke well, that if euer wee be bereft of this so precious treasure which God hath giuen vs, so as it be taken from vs; it is for our owne malice, rechelesse, and vnthankfulness, because wee haue despised God, and thrust the things vnder foote which wee shoulde haue kept most carefully.

And therefore let it be a warning to vs to make vs giue good heede to the heauenly doctrine when it is once taught vs, and set afore vs. And moreouer let vs followe the order which our Lorde hath established in his Church, and not onely let euery of vs for his owne particular part and person followe it and induour to profit his owne housholde: but also let vs benefite al other folk in common by exercising our selues in that which God commandeth vs. And againe, when euery of vs hath so considered of himselfe; let vs in likewise bee careful of our neighbours, & doe our induours to winne the ignorant, & to confirme them which be alreadie brought into the good way, vntill wee bee all come to the marke that God hath set before vs.

Now let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faults; beseeching him to make vs to feele them more and more, euen with such repentance, as being beaten downe in our selues, we may seeke nothing but to obtēin mercie of him, according as he hath promised vs in our Lord Iesus Christ: so as he will cause the desert of his death & passion to be auailable, that we being washed from all our filthines, may be so gouerned by his holy Spirite, as we may desire nothing but to giue ouer our selues vnto him, fighting against all manner of wicked lustes & affections, & labouring more and more to bee ridde and deliuered from all things that may hinder vs from yeelding our obedience to his righteousnes. That it may please him to grant this grace, not only vnto vs, but also to al people & nations of the earth, &c.

The CLXXV. Sermon which is the third vpon the one & thirtieth Chapter.

14 Then the Lorde said vnto Moses: Behold the dayes of thy death be at hand. Call Iosuah, and stand both of you at the Tabernacle of the Congregation that I may giue him his charge. So Moses and Iosuah went and stode at the Tabernacle of the congregation.

15 Then appeared the Lord at the Tabernacle in a clowdie pillar: and the clowdy pillar rested vpon the doore of the Tabernacle.

16 And the Lord said vnto Moses: Beholde thou goest to sleepe with thy fathers, and this people will stande vp and commit fornication with the strange gods of the lande whereinto they goe: and will forsake mee, and breake my couenant which I haue made with them.

17 By reason whereof my wrath shall in that day be kindled against them, and I will forsake them and hyde my face from them, that they may be a pray. Many mischiefes and troubles shall they fynde: By reason whereof they shall say at that day: Do not these mischiefes finde mee out, because my God is not with mee?

GOD hath such a care of mans welfare, that hee delayeth not the remedying of a mischiefe till the mischiefe be come; but preventeth it aforehand, as we haue here a faire exaple thereof. He tarried not till the people were turned away after idols; but forasmuch as he knew well y<sup>t</sup> it would so come to passe, hee y<sup>e</sup> chesafed to warn them of it, & made an assay to see whether any preseruatiue medicine might holde it from breaking out. God therefore ordeined this song to the intent y<sup>t</sup> the people shoulde daily haue in their mouth a testimonie against themselves, & y<sup>t</sup> they should by that meanes be either restrained, if it were possible; or else bee left viterly without excuse. And here we see first of al y<sup>t</sup> God did not chooise this people for that they were more worthie or more righteous than other nations, of y<sup>e</sup> earth. For prooue wherof, he knew very well that they would be alway inclined to euil, and not cease to shrinke away, but become hardhearted in rebelling against him: & yet for all y<sup>t</sup> he forbare not to deliuer them out of the land of Egypt, & to poure out all y<sup>e</sup> treasures of his infinite goodnes & mercie vpon them in doing the good. We haue then heere a certaine prooue, y<sup>t</sup> when God did chooise the people of Israel, hee had no respect to any worthines or merites that were in them: but rather meant to glorifie his own ttee mercie, in shewing, y<sup>t</sup> although men be neuer so vnworthie to be receiued to mercie, yet doth he not therefore cease to shew himselfe a father towards them. But herewithal we see also (as I haue already sayd) that god ordeineth such remedies as hee knoweth to bee conuenient to bring them back into the right way, & delayeth not the releeuing of them till they haue done & are falne downe: but prouideth all the helps aforehand which he knoweth to be meete for the leading & guiding of them, to the intent they should not swarue nor start out of the way.

Now in deede here might be a question put, whether God could not haue restrained y<sup>e</sup> people of Israel better, if he had would; for we knowe y<sup>t</sup> if he list to restraine mens harts by his holy spirit, he is able to do it. And why then wrought he not so with this people? We cannot binde God to giue vs such constancie, as y<sup>e</sup> we might continue in his seruice. And therefore we must not argue against him in this case, nor say that this sog was not sufficient, & that it had bin better that God had wrought effectually by his holy spirit. For it was not his will, he left the people in their own fraulue. Howbeit wee must not say as some blasphemers do, that God mocked them, in that hee vsed such a remedie, as hee knewe to be vn-sufficient: for God may well still vphold, that he hath discharged his office towards men, when he hath once giuen them his worde, in so much y<sup>t</sup> although it cannot touch them to the quick, but remaineth as a dead letter vnto them: yet neuertheless, they continue iustly condemned. But this woulde bee darke if it were not better declared. Let vs marke therefore first of all, that by this song, (according to the storie ther-of reported by Moses,) Gods will was that the people, ( before they were fallen away and estranged from the way of saluation, ) shoulde haue a testimonie against themselves, as wee shall see more at length hereafter. But if sufficeeth for this present, to touche the contentes and summe of this song: which is, that God being the creator of all the worlde, chose the line of Abraham, who in hee adopted, and bestowed vpon them all the blessings that were possible to bee wished, and lastly brought them out of the lande of Egypt, and put them in possession of the lande which hee had promised them for their inheritance, and there fedde them fatly, notwithstanding all which things, that people rebelled against him, (as hoises that bee too much pampered in the stable, and bee too fat, and therefore doe kicke against their masters) and turned away after strange Gods. And therefore that God being provoked to anger, stirred vp strange nations to chastise them and to punish them for their rebelling after that maner: howbeit that grieued him to deale so roughly with them, like a father that is very sorry to vie rigor towards his children, after which maner we shall see y<sup>t</sup> God letteth forth himselfe like a man sore grieved: (as if he should say) were not this people very far out of the way, had they any drop of reason & good vnderstanding, to consider their owne ende: they would not haue bin so turned away from me. After that manner then is the song, as we shall see. Now it was a common song. God willed that it should bee in euery bodys mouth both great & smal, to the end that euery man should be daily called vpon, to walke in the feare of God. And so we be warned of that which may happen vs vs. God doeth first declare vnto vs his curse: and to what end, but that euery one of vs should keepe himselfe from it?

46 Again, he sheweth vs the inconuenience wherinto we shall fall, he telleth vs that he wil requenge our rechelesnes, & therefore let vs beware of it. For to what end doth he it, but that he woulde not haue vs to tempt him, but rather y<sup>t</sup> it should reteine vs in his seruice? Ye see then howe the people ought to haue taken warning hereby.

But now we aske whether that ought to haue sufficed, and whether the people had power to restrayne themselves, as it is imagined that men haue free wil to chooise good or euil. The answer is, that it was not ynough for GOD to put his word in their mouth, but it behoued him also to imprint it in their harts by his holy spirit. We see howe it is said farther in this place: Thou goest to dye, and the people after thy death will fall away, and runne a whoring after strange gods. It is God y<sup>e</sup> speakech on this wise to Moles. Now it must needs be y<sup>t</sup> he foresaw that would come to passe, yea, but they wil allege y<sup>t</sup> Gods foresight kepeth not men back fro turning vnto God wher they list. In deed it is certaine y<sup>t</sup> the foresight of God is not y<sup>e</sup> cause that men do either good or euil, but yet god did know very wel y<sup>t</sup> this people, whatsoeuer doctrine or religion they should haue, would not cease to be wicked & froward: he knew very wel y<sup>t</sup> his warning of the aforehande would not suffice to conuert them. God knewe it wel ynough. Wherefore then did he not prouide for it? See here how men do take vpon them to pleade against God: but they must bee stopt with their presumption. If they alleage, Wherefore is it that God, when hee seeth men go out of course, doeth not remedie it? The answereth therunto is this, that God is neither tyed nor bound thereto; it is ynough then that they bee made thereby inexcusable. And therefore, although God doeth knowe aforehande, that wee, because of our infirmitie, shall not bee able to continue in his obedience; and that there wilbee such malice in vs, that wee shall not, cease to prouoke his wrath: yet is it ynough y he doth instruct vs by his word, & that wee be accused & condemned by him. Yeabut in dedde it lyeth not in vs to do well. Al these replies be friuolous before God. For men cannot allege that the euil cometh from any where else [than themselves]. Although wee be enclined to sinne, & although we be altogether thereto ghuen by nature; shall we say that it is by any constrainde? Shall we say that the fault therof is not in vs? It is impossible. Seeing then that our mouth is stop in this case, we must condemne our selues & humble vs before God. And albeit that his word serue but to make vs guiltie, & not to change our hearts from euil to good: yet neuertheless, it is not superfluous, neither ought we to say that God doeth daly, or that hee doeth mocke vs: for hee doeth the office of a teacher toward vs, & telleth vs what his will is. Wherefore let vs desire him, not onely to teache vs by the mouth of men, but also to print his worde in our hartes, and to make it prouayle, to the ende it bee not in vaine. Such request must wee make, sith wee see what is contained in the song of Moses. Moreover we must honor the wonderful prouidence of God, in that it is sayde vnto vs, that hee foreseeeth what shall befall vnto men, & yet notwithstanding taketh no order for the redresse thereof, as wee woulde if hee should followe our appetite. It seemeth a straunger matter at the first sight, that God shoulde say, This people wil runne a whoring, and goe and defile themselves with strange Gods. He sayth it, and yet he giueth none other remedie but a song, of purpose that this people should bee condemned by their owne mouth. And wherefore doth he not rather preuent the mischiefe? For he might do it. But (as I haue said alreadie) it is not for vs to enter into disputation in this case: for surely all they that vse such arrogancie & boldnes, shall finde themselves confounded. What must wee do then? We must stoope & honor the glorie of God which is incomprehensible to vs, & suffer our selues to be governed by him. And whereas he knowing mens ledwnes aforehande, doth neuertheless suffer them to rotte therein vntil he prouide for it: we must vnderstand that he doth it iustly, though the reason thereof be vnknown and hidden vnto vs. Wee in dedde will euer be grunting at it, vntil we be subdued vnto such humilitie & reuerence, as to conclude that God is iust, & that we know not what is good for vs, except that God reueile it vnto vs. Nowe then if wee haue not this modestie and sobrietie in vs, there wil alwayes seeme to bee some cause for vs to grunt at: But yet must wee euer be confounded, according as it is laide in the 51. Psalme, that when men haue condemned God, yet his rightcoufnes shall not bee a whit diminished thereby, but hee will well defende it. Seeing it is so, let vs beware that wee enter not into such boldnesse as to reply against God, and to moue the questions which many people in the worlde at this day do moue, like these mastife dogges which cease not to bark against God when they cannot byte him: but let vs stand silent, when it is sayde that God doeth well: knowe what shall come to passe vpon men, & neuertheless bestoweth not his grace, but vpon those whome he listeth. For it is certaine that hee toucheth with repentance whome hee will, but not al. For a great number of the people are farre out of square. If wee aske howe it cometh to passe, that some haue continued in the pure religion, & haue alwayes serued God: vndoubtedly it came of a speciall grace; no man prepared himself to it. As touching the others which haue misfed, & repented: if it be asked who recouered them; it is not of men that they bee conuerted, it is the speciall gift of God. We see then how God hath wrought in some, to gyde them alwayes in the purenesse of his seruice; and that others haue bin receiued to mercie, albeit that they had offended; & that the same hath not fallen out to al indifferently. We see then that God bestoweth his grace where it seemeth good to himself, and we must not pleade against it, to say: And why doth hee not deale egally with all, as hee doeth with some? Why wsteth he not like measure? We shall winne nothing by pleading so against God. Thus much wee haue to consider concerning this place.

Here withal let vs mark also what hath bene touched aforeto wit, that although the word of God, of it selfe, hath not power to reforme our harts, to lead vs vnto God, to heale our faultes, & to bring vs to good: yet is it certaine y we cease not therefore to be condemned thereby. For although the word of God be daly preached vnto vs: yet are we neuer the better for hauing our eares beaten therewith as wee see a great many people are, who hauing bin instructed in y Gospel, become worse thereby than they were afore. And the reason is, because y the worde of God entreth not into their harts, but through y grace of y holy Ghost. And this grace is not bestowed on all. They therefore which come to heare the worde, become so much the more blameworthy when they once know God, if they profite not thereby, & God must needs cast them off in a leawd mind. Let vs mark then y the word of God being spoken by a mortal man, without any further help than y outward teaching thereof, is not ynough: for so it shal but beat our eares: as for our harts, they shal not be touched therw. What must then be done? We must pray God to speake vnto vs inwardly after a secreete manner, and to cause the voyce which soundeth in our eares, cares, to enter like wise into our thoughts and affections, that we may be touched therewith to the quicke . That is the point which we must come vnto. Yet neuertheless we must not think that the word of God serueth to no purpose, whē we reade it in holy scripture, or haue it expounded vnto vs . Let vs assure ourselues that it shall not fall to the ground, either it must serue vs to saluation, or else we must receiue thereby ſ grieuouſer condemnation . Now if we couet to haue this doctrine profitable to saluation, let vs pray God to write it in our heartes; and furthermore we must beware ſ we be not thereby ſ more gultie . For when we haue heard the will of God, and be not therein thoroughly certified; if afterward we continue hardened in our stubbornes, what excuse is there for vs then ? We haue bin wont to make a buckler of ignorance, but ſ will serue the turne no more . Therefore we must marke, ſ although the only word of it selfe can not conuert men; yet doth it suffice to cast them into viter condemnation, as those which would needes desie God wilfully . It is also sayd in this place, ſ God appeare d to Moses at the Tabernacle, euen in a cloudie pillar. This was not done for Moses only; but rather for all the people . In deede it was very behouuefull ſ Moses shold be assured of Gods guiding. For the enterpriſe which he vnderooke to bring the people out of the lande of Egypt, was not for a mortall creature to haue done [of himselfe.] It was needefull then ſ they shold know ſ God did auow him. And therefore it was Gods will to ratifie the cōmission which he had giuen him, ſ it might haue full authorite among the people. After the same maner was it Gods wil to deale in giuing new cōmission to Iosuah, who was to succede Moses. Also it was his wil to cause this last song to be receiued without gaine speaking; & to do them to vnderstand ſ it was not forged nor hāmered in ſ head of a man, but ſ it came frō heauen, and ſ it was God that spake it. To the end therefore ſ the people might be thoroughly assured of these things, he sayth, Come thou & Iosuah to the Tabernacle. And what is the cause ſ God would not awfull speake to Moses in his owne Tent ? It was because hee would haue the people to be ſ more moued. For men are so slender witted & earthly, ſ they haue neede to bee led vnto God by visible signes. To what end serued ſ Tabernacle? It was as a witness ſ God dwelled amongst his people, as we haue seene heereofore . It is certaine ſ God filleth all places with his power & essence: But yet because men are rude & grosse, it behoueth thē to haue some helpe to bring them vnto him. So then, the Tabernacle serued to waken mens wits that they might vnderstand, ſ in cōming thither they came neere vnto God, as if they had bene present before his maiestie. For ſ cause therefore it was said vnto Moses & Iosuah, that they shold come to the Tabernacle of the congregation. But that is not all. For there appeared a cloudie pillar, and (as we knowe) ſ was a double signe or miracle, to shew vnto the Iewes ſ God was nigh vnto thē . For in the day time there was a long thicke cloude, which was like a great pillar; and in the night the cloude turned to a fire . And to what end was the pillar darke, & like a cloud by day? Because the fire shold not be so apparant to the people. Moreouer it was Gods will to refresh them, as if it were sayde, I haue my wings stretched out, to giue you shadowe, & to maintaine you vnder my protection; that if the sonne be ouer whot by day, you shalbe hidden as vnder me & vnder my leading. And by night, when all is darke, I will serue you for a light, & you shalbe guided thereby: there shalbe continually a burning fire, to shewe vnto you ſ I am waking, and that I am neuer asleepe, & that I haue not mine eyes shut, but that I do foresee for all your necessities . That is the cause why God appeared in such maner to the Iewes, to wit, ſ by day he gaue them a cloud to couer them, which was long and in forme of a great Pyller (as I haue said), and by night there was a burning fire, all on a length, like vnto a train of fire ouer all ſ people. And this fire serued to giue light to the people; as if God had shewed his hand, as who would say, feare not; for I haue not forgotten you; wor what is necessary for you. But yet it is sayd ſ when Moses was called to the Tabernacle to receiue any great charge, then the cloud descended by day, like as the fire also did his office by night . Thus did God cause the cloud to descende of purpose ſ the doore of the Tabernacle shold be shut; and that was as much as if ſ people had bin taught thus: Behold, now is Moses to be withdrawn from all ſ world, God speaketh to him as if it were mouth to mouth, it is not for vs to looke to haue him conuersant any longer heere beneath after the maner of mortall men, there is an other respect to be had of him: God hath sequestred him, because it is his will to haue such familiaritie & cōmunicatiō with him, as we may receiue ſ which he bringeth vnto vs, as if it came from heauen. That then is the cause why the cloud descended vpon the Tabernacle . And this is not spoken here only, but as often as it was Gods will to authorize Moses, and to ratifie the office which he had giuen him, to ſ end that the people shold w the greater reuerence receiue ſ doctrine which proceeded from him . The same in likewise was also done when Moses appointed Iosuah in his owne place to succede him . Inſomuch ſ when God was about to shewe him what he had to do, the cloud appeared againe . Now these things ought to stande vs in steede at this day. For God did not meane to giue authoritie to his law, only for that time; but to the end of the world. Therefore when we reade ſ which is set downe heere concerning the cloud, it is all one as if God had set his seale to the doctrine of Moses, to the intent that we shold receiue it without any replying or doubting, and thinke that it was not Moses that was the chiefe author thereof: but that he was the instrument of the holy Ghost . Thus you see howe the same miracle doeth yet at this day apply it selfe vnto vs, and howe we ought to be edified thereby . But by the way, we see the malice of men, in that they which hadde seene such a signe with their eyes, did yet for all that not cease to play the rebels against Moses. It is a great matter, that God should put forth his hand as if his maietie descended from heauen, & testified vnto men y<sup>t</sup> was he that spake, & that yet notwithstanding the people should stil continue like wilde beastes, and not vouchsafe to hearken vnto him. Is there any reason in that? Neuertheless we see it in the people of Israel. Albeit y<sup>t</sup> in the time of Iosuah, there was some good gouernment; yet ceased they not to abuse y<sup>e</sup> benefits which they had receiued afore time. Indeed there was no general falling away: but yet to say that the people did behaue themselves vprightly in y<sup>e</sup> obedience of God, it wanted a great deale thereof. Therefore we see that whatsoeuer God doth, men notwithstanding be so blinde & blockish, that they cannot find in their hearts to submit themselves vnto him: and if they doe, it is not with any constancy or steadfastnes. Sith we know this, let vs cast downe our eyes, and pray to our God, that when he giueth vs any signes to confirme vs in the obedience of his word, & to edifie vs in the faith, we may haue y<sup>e</sup> skill to profit ourselves thereby, so as he loofe not his labour, nor we strue against his power: but that as soone as it sheweth it selfe, we may be moued to honour him, & to yecde vnto him his due glorie. Thus much haue we to gather vpon this place, where it is sayd y<sup>t</sup> God hauing caused Moses and Iosuah to come vnto the Tabernacle, did therewithall appeare in y<sup>e</sup> cloud. It is out of doubt, y<sup>t</sup> God shifteh not his place: for (as we haue already sayd) he filleth all places with his essence: howbeit in respect of men, it is sayd that he descended from heauen. To what end? Because that when we perceiue his presence, it is sayd y<sup>t</sup> he is nigh vnto vs. Is it because that there is any change in him? James. 1. 17. No, there is not so much as a litle shadowe, as saith S. Iames. But let vs consider how foolish we are, and then shall we not find it strange that the Scripture speaketh in this manner, to fashion it selfe to the weaknes of our vnderstanding. We suppose that God is farre from vs, and y<sup>t</sup> there is a great distance betweene him & vs. And wherefore? Because he hath told vs y<sup>t</sup> he is in heauen. Howbeit, it is not ment that he is there shut vp, we must not imagine so: but if it were sayde that God is heere with vs, we would tie him to the earth, yea and we would tie him vp in euery corner. We see how men deale in that behalfe, when it is tolde them y<sup>t</sup> God sheweth himselfe in Baptisme and in the supper also: they make Idols of those visible signes, & thinke that God is inclosed in them. Therefore it is sayde that he is in heauen. But yet we must not imagine it to be in power onely; but wee comprhend him not in our vnderstanding. And that is the cause why the holy scripture stammereth and stuteth after our rude maner, & saith that God cometh downe, as I haue sayde: not for y<sup>t</sup> he shifteh places touching himselfe; but it is sayd in respect of vs. Wherefore let vs learne to conuert to our profit all the signes y<sup>t</sup> God hath giuen vs of his presence, in such sort, as we may thereby honor him as in his glory celestiall, by lifting vp our mindes aboue all the world. That is the thing which we haue to gather.

Exod. 19. 9.
Num. 13. 36

Now let vs come to y<sup>e</sup> which is here recited. Bold, thy dayes are come that thou shalt dye (sayth God to Moses) thou shalt goe sleepe with thy fathers, & this people shall arise (saith he) & go a whoring after strange Gods (or else the Gods of the strangers). When God told Moses in this wise that he must die: we perceiue thereby that he strengthened him, and that this tidings of death was not to make him afraid. And in deede, if we be not alwaies ready to depart the world, when it shall please God to fetch vs, what profit receiue we of all y<sup>e</sup> doctrine that is preached vnto vs? What doth God purpose when we be taught in his word, but to giue vs to vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> he placeth vs in this world as in a passage, y<sup>e</sup> we must be strangers heere, that our inheritance is aboue, and y<sup>e</sup> we must be newshapen from day to day, by putting away fro vs all our affections, & whatsoeuer else is of the old man, to the end we may come vnto him, vntill y<sup>e</sup> he hath clothed vs wth his heauenly glorie: Thus ye see how it is the purpose of God, to draw people from the world, & to bring the vnto himselfe. But now if we be so giuen to this present life, that God must plucke vs away from hence as it were by force: and y<sup>t</sup> when his will is that we shall die; we be full of spite & rage and torment our selues therat; we shewe well that we vnderstande not what the word of God meaneth, and that we neuer had such rest thereof as was requisite. Let vs therefore by the example of Moses, be so disposed to dye, that whensoeuer it shall please our Lorde to take vs away from hence, we may be readie to goe, and to depart out of this prison of our bodie. If it be alleadged that wee haue not so much profited as Moses, and that wee bee not so farre forward as hee: it is out of doubt that God bestowed on him a special grace, which was not comon to all, & is very rare to be found. For it is no smal matter, when it is sayde, y<sup>t</sup> there neuer rose vp a Prophet in Israel, so great nor so excellent as he. But yet notwithstanding we haue the Gospell which Moses hadde not. Albeit that God gaue him largely of his spirit, more than wee haue; yet had not he the doctrine [of the Gospell] but in shadowe and figure: because Iesus Christ was not yet manifested: hee had the sacrifices of the lawe, as well as the rest of the people. And whereas our Lorde Iesus is come to bee our life, we know that he is now ascended vp to heaue, we know that first he was beneath in the deepe, that is to say, that he satisfied the wrath of God to the end to redeeme vs from eternall death. Seeing wee haue such an aduantage, what excuse is there, if we bee afraid when death is talked of vnto vs, and thinke that all is lost for our part? So then, let vs marke that to bee well learned in the gospell, it behoueth vs to knowe, as well what it is to die, as what it is to liue. And how? We must not be tyed vnto this present worlde, nor make account to dwell heere for euer: but wee must haue the one foote vp (as they say) [as fulke ready to goe]. Also wee must consider howe fraile our life is, and euen in our full health wee must alwaies haue death before our eyes. For the performance whereof, let vs looke vp to the heauenly heauenly life is promised vnto vs, whereof also we haue so good a pawn in our Lord Iesus Christ. That is the way for vs not to be afraid, whensoever God shall make vs ro understand his our end is nigh, and shew vs that he wil take vs vnto him. I say it shall neither abash vs nor make vs afrayde, but we shall be determined to go vnto him with a good will: as no doubt but Moses receiued that tydings with great ioy, [as if hee should haue sayde] Wel Lorde, I haue finished my course, I haue trauailed in his world so long as I had power and strength, and now behold I am old & drooping, but yet shall I be restored in thy saluation. Seeing then his it is thy will to sequester me from all the troubles of this world, behold I am now ready: like as I haue continued in the world, so long as it was thy wil, euen so doe I now desire nothing but to yeeld my selfe vnto thee. And for the same cause S. Paul sayeth, that the Christians turne all things to their owne benefite, as well death as life. For if we lue in this worlde, though it be in miserie & wretchednes, so as we be afflicted and despised, and tormented, and seeme to be as people cast away yet detel, I ame turne to our profite and aduantage. And why? For all our afflictions be blessed in our Lorde Iesus Christ, because God maketh them available to our saluation: according as it is sayde in the eight to the Romanes: that the things which seeme to hinder our felicitie, are in deede giuen vs of GOD as helpe and furtheraunces thereof. When it cometh to death, we know that Christ Iesus had victorie thereof, and his rising he is risen, we be assured forasmuch as we be his members, and haue one common life together with him, therefore wee shall not perishe. Thus doth death turne to our gainne and profite, and we haue cause to reioyce in all respectes.

Moreover where it is sayd, That after the death of Moses the people will rise, there is no doubt but his greued Moses. For he bare such a feruent zeale to the welfare of the people, that he forgot himselfe and said, Race me out of the booke of life, and let the people be sau'd. See heere howe Moses was content to be cutte off, yea, and euen to be damned so that God would saue the people; not because that that was possible, but he was so rauished, that hee had no care of himselfe. Nowe therefore when he heard that the people would fall away from God, there is no doubt but his heart was mortally wounded. But what? Yet must hee needs heare these tydings full of sorrowe and anguish. Heerein we see how God did exercise him euen vnto his end. We must not therefore suppose, that Moses discharged his duetie, as it were with dallyaunce; but that he had terrible hartbyting, so as he was tossed too and fro, and God gaue him alwayes dreadfull grypes of minde. But yet neuertheless he did still continue. And therefore when we see that matters fall not out as we wold, albeit that we haue faithfully laboured, and it seeme that our trauaile is vnprofitable, and that Sarhan will throwe downe that which we haue induored to set vp; and things fall out to trouble and disorder: let it not turne vs aside from the good way: let it not repent vs that we haue serued our GOD, let it content vs that our labour is acceptable vnto him: for although it be not so profitable vnto men as were to be wished, yet haue we done such a sacrifice vnto God as he doth receiue and accept. Yea but yet if men fare litle the better thereby, wee may be sorrie and sigh therefore. Neuertheless we haue not lost our time, because God liketh well of our dooings. That (say I) is the thing whereby the ministers of Gods worde should comfort themselves at this day, when they see the worlde so drunken, as we see it is, and that in steede of going forwarde, the greater part goeth backwarde; and that whereas Gods worde is so preached vnto them, that the very walles doe ring of it: yet doe they but make a scoffe of it. When we see such thinges, let vs resort to God and say: Alas Lorde, thou knowest wherfore thou hast employed vs heretofore, and albeit that thy doctrine be so slenderly receiued of the worlde, yet is it alwaies a sacrifice of good saour vnto thee; according as Saint Paul sayth: Beholde (sayth he) it behooueth our preaching to be as the saour of death to many people. They be the misbelieuing which be hardened against God: but howsoever they fare; that saour is a sweete sent to our God, forasmuch as it is his will, that his Gospell should be preached vnto all creatures. And all the faithfull in generall ought to apply the same to their owne vse, specially when wee deale vprightly with men, and they render vs euill for good. For then it seemeth that the things which we haue induored to doe for their welfare, are taken in dildayne; and by meanes thereof we commonly repent vs, by reason of our frailtie. What then? We must arme ourselues with steadfastnesse in this case. And although there be neuer so great vnthankfulnesse in the world, yet must we neuer be sorry that we haue obeyed our God. No; but the issue is not answerable to our desire. There is no remedie. Let vs be contented that our God alloweth our obedience. So much concerning that point.

Moreover whereas it is sayd that the people will rise up: God rellecth of a change, that whereas they shoulde holde them quiet vnder the bridle which God had giuen them, they would rise vp proudly and stubbornly, & through inordinate desire seeke to shake off the yooke which was layde vpon their necke. By the sight hereof we may learne what our owne nature is. For it is certaine that heere God ment to shewe vs as in a glasse, what wee be, vntill such time as hee hath wrought in vs. Nowe then, when we be taught in the doctrine of the Gospell, what is our dutie, but to hold ourselues quiet, without wrenching either hither or thither, as we be too much giuen by nature? The word of God then must hold vs in and fetters, that we couet not newe changes euery day & euery minute of an houre: but that God may haue the obedience that is due vnto him, and wee followe that which he commandeth vs. Thus ought the word of God to preuaile in vs, to keepe vs quiet. But yet we see howe the children of Israell deale in that behalfe, and howe they rose vpp, that is to say, that they changed, and could not keepe themselves in the obedience of God. At the same point are we. Therefore let vs mistrust all our owne conceites. When so euer any thought comes in our minde, or whensoever we take any thing in hande; let vs euermore suspect it, for feare least we shake off the yoke which GOD hath layde vppon our neckes, and let vs vnderstande that God must guide vs to the ende. Seeing then that we be so waivering by nature: let vs learn to submit ourselues the better to the word of God, & not to enterprise thinges of our owne heades, as who would say, I will doe this, I will doe that: for as soone as we followe our owne wit, and aduise, we become stray beastes. There is no more then for vs to doe, but onely to liue in continuall obedience. And for touch as our Lorde hath shewed vs howe he would haue vs to walke; let vs hold vs thereto, & not follow our rickling lustes, to be carried too and fro by them. After that manner are we to practise this place, where it is sayde, That the people would rise vp after the death of Moses. True it is that we ought to haue our hearts alwayes lifted vpp to Godwarde: but yet must they also be brought lowe through humilitie, and we must not lift vp ourselues with pride and presumption, to cast away that which hath bene taught vs.

Nowe let vs kneele downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes: beseeching him to vouchsafe to receiue vs to his mercie. And forasmuch as we know we bee no better than these whom we see here condemned euen before they were borne, according as it is here spoken of them which should succede after the death of Moses: let vs pray to that good God, that seeing he knoweth the vices that be in vs, & that we bee not able to helpe it, vnlesse he worke by his holy spirite, he will therefore cleanse vs from all wicked affections, and so subdue vs vnto him, that though we be strayed away by nature, yet notwithstanding he suffer vs not to continue still in our iniquities: but that being drawn vnto him, as he hath once called vs therunto, we may continue constantly therein, and so perseuere vnto the ende: and that in the meane while, hee will vpholde vs because he knoweth vs to be weake, vntill hee hath fully restored vs by his power. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely vnto vs, but also vnto all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

17 Is it not because my God is not with me, that these euils haue found me out?

18 But I will hyde my face in that day because of the wickednesse which hee shall haue committed, euen for that he shall haue turned away to other gods.

19 Now therefore wryte this song for you, and teach it the children of Israell, putting it in their mouthes, that this song may be a witnesse to mee against the children of Israell.

20 When I haue brought them into the lande which I sware to their fathers, flowing with milke and hony: and they shall haue eaten and bene filled and become fatte, and haue turned away to other gods, and serued them, and blasphemed mee, and broken my couenaunt.

21 And when many euils and tribulations be come vppon them: then shal this song answere to their face for a witnesse: for it shall not be forgotten in the mouth of their seede: for I knowe their thoughtes, and what they doe already at this day before I haue brought them into the land for the which I haue sworne.

The chief thing that God telleth vs, to assure vs in this present life, is this, that hee hath his eye vpon vs, and that he is so mindefull of our welfare, that nothing shall want vs, because he is able to prouide all thinges that be necessarie for vs; and therewithall is able also to defende vs from all anoyauce, inso much that his eye is vnto vs a buckler, a fortreffe, and a shadowe to shroude vs vnder it. Likewise it is sayde of his good will in the fifth Psalm, that it shall be our shielde. The thing then wherein the faithful ought to rest and reioyce: is y God looketh vpon them with compassion y he neuer forgetteth them, that he guideth all their steps, and

and that he hath a fatherly care ouer them to remedie all their euilles . And on the contrarie side, the greuouslest threat that God can vtter is to turne his face away from vs , and no more to vouchsafe to haue care either of vs, or of our life, but to forsake vs. For then wee are set open to Sathan and all manner of misfortune. And where is then our defence ? For wee haue no meane to resist, we see we be fraile and wretched creatures, there is nothing in vs . And therefore we be to them of whom God will haue no longer care ; but forsaketh them as those that belong not vnto him at all, ne be of his householde . And that is the thing which he sayeth in this place, that when the people of Israell haue left him, hee will hide his face from them, and will be no more their father, as he had bene afore time . Nowe this is so spoken vnto the Iewes , as it ought to serue vs also for a warning at this day . Will we then haue this soueraigne and inestimable benefite, namely, that God should guide vs ; that our life should be in his hande , and that he should take vs into his keeping to vpholde vs ? Then must we looke that we call vpon him , and as we profess his name, so must we also serue him in truth according to this saying of Saint Paul, that who soeuer calleth vpon the name of the Lorde, that is to say, who soeuer protesteth to be of his people, must depart from all iniquitie . Therefore let vs learne to serue our God with a pure conscience, to resort to him for refuge , and to put our whole trust in him. And then are we assured that one hayre of our heade shall not fall away without his will. For if he haue care of the sparrows, ( as our Lorde Iesus sayth ) what will he doe by them whom he hath chofen for his children ? We be not onely men created after his owne Image, but he hath also set his marke vpon vs, to the end to saue vs as members of our Lord Iesus Christ. Let vs not doubt therefore, but that he wil euer more performe the duetie of a father in looking to vs . But if in the meane while we become wandering beastes , and euery man fall away from him; then must that which is pronouced heere be accomplished vpon vs , namely, that God will hide his face : not because that he forgetteth any thing : but he speaketh in this manner after the fashion of men, to make vs to vnderstande that in deede he will not looke vpon vs with compassion, nor prouide for our life, nor succor any of our necessities; but that he will doe y cleane contrary, that is to say , that he will leaue vs for such as we be, and shew vnto vs, that we be not worthy for him to encumber himselfe any more with vs, or to busie himselfe about vs. Surcly it is a dreadfull vengeance , when GOD hath so forsaken vs . Therefore let vs beware that we sticke so vnto him, as there may bee an inseparable band betwixt vs, that is to say, as we for our part may honour him as our father , reposing and setting all our trust in him: and he go forward continually in doing vs good, and as his regarde may be the couert to hide vs from al y assaults of Sathan, from all the troubles that he deuileth against vs , and from the hurtes and annoyances of this worlde.

Now he sayeth expressly , that he will bring the Iewes to that passe , that they shall confesse those mischiefes to bee false vpon them , because God is not amongst them. Heere he treateth of a forced confession: for hee speaketh not a whit of true repentance, but onely of a remorse which all the despisers of God doe feele, for that they haue of long time bene stubborne, yea and skorned all correction . When they be pinched to the vttermost y they can no longer hold out; then must they needs confesse spite of their teethes, that there is a God which is their Iudge. He sayth that the Iewes shall make such a confession, when he hath brought them vnder foote with maine strokes. Heereby we see y he threatneth them that his punishing of them shall not be mildly and after the comon maner; but that also he will vse such rigour , that what hardnesse and stubbornesse soeuer be in them, yet shall they be broken if they will not bowe , accordingly as I haue handled the same point heere before. Neuertheless it is good for vs to bee often put in mind of it, & to thinke vs thereof oftentimes. For men do alwayes deceiue themselues herein, that they thinke that they shall by and by scape the hande of God, and when they haue receiued a stripe or twaine, they doe but shake their eares & thinke all is done . Therefore if wee be stubborne in naughtinesse, let vs looke surely to bee beaten downe, vntill we be driued to confesse that he punisheth vs iustly . Nay, let vs not tarry till then . But when we heare how God proceedeth against such as are vtterly hardhearted and will not yeeld vnto him, let vs be afraid. And as soone as we heare him threaten vs, or perceiue any token of his anger , let vs turne againe vnto him, and meeken our heartes, and let vs vnderstande y vnill he be appeased, our sorowes must needs increase, euen to the vtter ouerwhelming of vs. That is the thing which Moses ment in saying, that they which despise God and his word, shall feele that there is neither ende nor measure of their calamities, and that they shalbe constrained to say, These plagues are come vpon vs, because God is not among vs .

And heerewithall we must also marke the experience which the people had . For (as the comon prouerbe sayth) experience is the mistres of foolles . The people had then already of long time known what it was to haue God dwelling amongst them, and y it brought all maner of ioy, all maner of rest, and all maner of happines. And when y God was turned from the, they were driuen to consider to their cost , what an vnhappinesse it was to haue him a stranger to the. To be short, heere Moses sheweth the diuersitie y is to be seene, when God doth for a time blesse a people, & make them to prosper : and contrariwise when for the misusing of his grace he turneth away , and sheweth himselfe an encmie and aduersarie against them . Nowe therefore while we inioy the tokens and Testimonies of Gods loue, let vs learne to serue and feare him, that y possession thet of may continue with vs for euer. If we be so wicked and froward, as to skorn God when he vseth such goodnesse towarde vs, and forbeareth vs with patience : let vs assure ourfelues that he will giue such glorie to his benefitis as that the extreme miseries which he will make vs to feele, shall force vs to say, Where is the Lorde that dwelled with vs afore time ? How-euer the case stand, Gods will was that the song which was deliuered to Moses, should be a wit-nesse to aunswere against the people. He sayth yet againe that hee will hide his face, and that by reason thereof the people shall be a pray, and vtterly deuoured, and that there shall be nothing but tokens of horrible confusion in all their state.

 The people then is sufficiently warned and certified of Gods wrath : but yet God addeth this song more, to the ende that on the one side the people perceiuing their state so wretched, should say, God punisheth me and that iustly. And on the other side, that in this similitude they might behold themselves as in a glasse, and that by the hearing of this song, they might be put in minde of their misdeedes and transgressions; and made to consider that God doth the office of a Iudge, and thereby be the more moued to thinke vpon their faulces, and to humble themselves. Now we see heere first of all, what dulnesse there is in men: for God giueth vs no superfluous thing, nay there neuer departeth word fro his mouth which is not profitable for vs, and which ought not to serue vs for instruction. Wherefore is it then that God giueth this song to the people of Istraell ? It is because it should serue them for a Testimonie. At what time ? Euen at such time as they should be afflicted to the vttermost, that they might be holden as it were on the torture, and be constrained to confesse the faulces and iniquities which they had committed. And how then ? Could not the plagues which they endured, suffice to bring them to reason, and to cause them to turne againe vnto God, whom they had forsaken ? Yes in deede, were it not that men be so hard hearted, that in seeing they perceiue not a whit, and that their wittes be as it were dilled and dead. We see by this then, that although our Lorde chastise men, euen with such extre-mitie, as they must needs confesse that it is he to whom they be to aunswere and to yeelde account, and that it is his hande that pursueth them, and that he is their enemy: yet they be so foolish that they fettle themselves in their owne imaginations, and although they knowe it, yet they be not thoroughly persuaded of it in their heartes : but let it escape them and by and by forget it, vnlesse God doe put to his worde, and tell them, It is to me that you must haue an eye: for I do summō you before my iudgement seate.
 When I do thus scourge you, I set your faulces before you, I do heere make out your processe for you. If God spake not when he striketh with his hande, the stripes would be vnprofitable to vs.
 Now we perceiue the hardheartednes that is in vs. For although it be heere spoken of the children of Istraell, yet tell vs the holy Ghost vnder the example of them, toll vs what we be. Therefore let vs learne to know our selues better, and consider that although it bee needfull for vs to receiue instructiō concerning Gods punishments, least we should become vnreformable: yet notwithstanding it would profit vs nothing, vnlesse we had the word of God, whereby he draweth vs to repentance, and by the which he doeth vs to vnderstande, that the things which we suffer must not be imputed to hap hazard, but we must vnderstand y they come fro him. And thus must we resort to the holy scripture, so often as wee be afflicted. For on y one side, when men are scourged they chafe vpon the bridle, and become as doted, as if they were astonished with the stroke of a hammer; they thinke not of God. True it is that when they feele themselves pinched with aduersities, they crye alas, but they doe neuer the more lift vp their eyes to y hand of God, to vnderstande him to be their Iudge. Therefore we must proceed thus far; that is: we must haue recourse vnto Gods word; and when God smiteth vs on this maner, let vs take warning to submit ourselues vnto him, & not keepe vs aloofe as we are wont. Now y same word not only will shewe vs y it is Gods hande that smiteth vs; but it will also bring vs to examine our life. It is not said in the scripture y God punisheth men not knowing wherefore, or y he taketh pleasure in tormenting them: but it is sayd, that he punisheth them for their faulces so as we must alwaies needes acknowledge his iustice; insomuch y if men coulde skil to profit themselves by the afflictions y are sent them, they be all of them as medicines, and Gods intent is to shew himselfe a father by warning them after y maner. Moreover they serue to make men inexcusable: insomuch y all the afflictions which they suffer in this world, shall be an augmentation of the last vengeance, because they would not stoope vnder the hande of God, while he nurtured the for their welfare. Thus ye see y when we be scourged, we must resort to the holy scripture, first of all to vnderstand y it commeth not by aduenture, but that our Lord doth thereby shew vnto vs y we haue offended him, & that he meaneth thereby to make vs to feele our sinnes, to the end we should not be so senselesse as we were before, to flatter & to hardē ourselues as that we should come directly vnto him, and yeelde ourselues guilty, yea euen with such mis-liking of our sins, as we should hate the euil y is in vs, and seek nothing but to be receiued vnto his government, to be changed & renewed by him, so as wee may take no pleasure but only in framing ourselues to his good pleasure. That is the thing which Moses meant in saying, y although the people should be constrained to say, y they suffered those so many plagues & miseries, because God was no more among them: yet should they also haue a testimonie to follow the, and to holde them as at a bay, as who would say, Thou shalt not escape, but shalt know y thy sins be the cause of all these euils; although thou seeke star-tingholes, yet must thou bee as it were pent vp, and feele y God is against thee, & that thou shalt be more & more tormented, vntill thou turne againe vnto him. True it is that this is spoken of a witnesse y was against y people, and y it serueth to expresse y stubbornnes which was in y children of Istraell, as hereafter we shall see more at large.

And surely although God vouchsafe to shewe vs mercie, and would haue vs to heare his woord, to the intent to bring vs to repenraunce, yet must that woorde first be a witness against vs. As for example, we shall neuer obtaine fauour of God vntill hee haue condemned vs. And wherefore? Bicause we be wrapped in our sinnes, and doe sooth and flatter our selues in them. Nowe so long as men doe thus glory in themselves, or become carelesse, there is no place for mercie: for they make but a scoffe of the goodnesse of GOD. Yee see then that wee be shutte out from all hope of saluation, vntill wee be condemned of God. To bring this to passe, his word must discouer our iniquities, and all our filthinesse, and make vs abashed and ashamed, and also driue vs to feele the sorrowes of death, and to see hell which is prepared for vs. The point then whereat God beginneth when hee meaneth to bring men to saluation, is that he sturth vp his worde to a witness to them, to make them to know that they be vtterly forlorne and damned. Is that done? Then doth God admonish vs, and giue vs Testimonie of his good will; and not onely lay vs forth his doctrine, but also recite the processe of all our faultes. Nowe then, let vs receiue the woord when it testifieth vnto vs our condemnation; that being drawn thereby to repentance, and altogether ashamed of our selues, wee may obtaine fauour before GOD. Yet let vs vnderstande moreover, that when GOD doeth so frame our inditement, it is for our benefite: for hee maketh vs our owne Iudges, to the intent that hee himselfe would not iudge vs, but surceasse from it. Nowe if wee will needes play the wilde beastes, when as GOD testifieth our sinnes vnto vs; or else if wee goe to seeke for leaues to couer vs, that is to say, if wee will needes scape his iudgement by our lying and hypocrisie, and play the skoffers which make a mocke of all warnings that are giuen vnto them; or if we play the mad bedlems in despising GOD as we see many doe, who cannot abide any rebukes, but doe grinde their teeth as often as they be made to vnderstande their sinnes; if (I say) wee doe proceede so farre, then must the woorde of God stand still in his first force, to wit, it must be a Testimonie to vs of our damnation. And therefore seeing it is sayde herte that the Song is a witness to a uow that GOD hath iust cause to punish his people, and that the people stande convicted thereby: let vs feare, let vs feare (I say) least our Lorde doe with lyke extremitie pursue the processe which hee hath made against vs, and that there be no place of refuge to his grace after wee haue once reiected it: nay rather, as soone as hee summoneth vs, let vs learne to stoope, and to shut our mouth; and not to make any excuse, but to say; Lorde, wee see verie well, that if thou wouldst vse rigour towards vs, we were vndoone, there is no shift for vs but that thou must receiue vs lyke damned and forlorne cast-aways. as wee be, and bestowe thy mercie vpon vs: for all our welfare lyeth in this, that thou looke no more vpon our sinnes to punish them, but that through thy free goodnesse, thou doe take them away and blot them out. Thus yee see howe we ought to put this place in vre, where Moses sayeth, that this Song shall be for a witness to the people of Israel.

Hee sheweth yet better what testimonie hee giueth by this Song. It is (sayeth he) that I will bring you into the lande which I haue promised to your fathers, a land flowing with milke and honie. Heereby he giueth vs to vnderstande, that it is a fatte lande, and fruitfull of all good things in such abundance, as if milke did runne therein, in stead of Riuers: and as if they had withall the like abundance of hony. This manner of speech is verie commonly vsed whensoever God speaketh of the land of Chanaan: and not without cause. For God had blessed it aboute all the rest of the world; yea and no doubt, but the people found that with their comming thither, the fruitfulness of that land was augmented. And surely it is a maruailous matter, how such a huge multitude was nourished in so small a countrie. But at this day we see it is a land halfe barren. True it is that euen as yet there are some places thereof as little speckes, which are very fat & abundant; but yet farre vnable to verifie that which we reade of it here, namely that the land did flowe with milke and honie. But herein we do so much the better see that which is spoken in the 107. Psalme, namely, that when God hath giuen neuer so great fruitfulness to a land, he can make it barren againe, as if it were sowed with salt, so as there shall be nothing but leanness, nor any sustenance to be found therein. Wee perceiue then by the land of Chanaan, how it is the hand of God that giueth abundance to a land: and likewise that his withdrawing of his blessing, causeth a land to become fruitlesse and altogether baraine. And therefore doeth Moses nowe protest that when the people come into y land, and there be nourished, filled and fatted, & then serue strange gods: they shall be condemned so much the more: and then they must not looke for any startingholes, but be discouraged to the whole world to their condemnation, and this present song shall be as a processe wherein the forme of law is obserued; so as y summons shall be made first, & then the examinations and informations shall be exhibited; and afterward y malefactors being arraigned and condemned by their owne mouth, shall receiue the sentence of iudgement against them. Now we see what the meaning of Moses was.

Heereupon let vs marke that by making comparison of the woord of GOD with the thinges which are befallen vnto vs, and which wee haue felt by experience; wee ought to be wakened, or else we be too brutish. As for example, whereas the Scripture telleth vs that God bestoweth his riches vpon men, of purpose to bring them backe vnto him by his gentleness, and ratherly goodnesse; and also that hee continueth to doe them good, of purpose to drawe them to repenraunce, when he seeth them goe astray: although wee had no experience thereof, yet is it certaine that the holy Scripture might suffice vs. But if wee looke into our owne state, and vpon the things whereof God hath giuen vs experience; and consider howe many wayes he hath shewed himselfe liberall towards vs, so as his goodnesse is thoroughly knowne vnto vs, and wee be resolu'd that it is his hand that hath fed vs: surely y<sup>e</sup> beholding of so many benefites which God hath bestowed vpon vs, ought to make vs to proceed yet farther, & to consider that although we haue offended him, and bin wicked and vnthankfull; yet is he not weary to do vs good: but doth rather strue against our leaudnes, & ouercome it with his goodnes. When we think vpon these things, then hath y<sup>e</sup> scripture a good testimony of our experience, and then must we needs be so much y<sup>e</sup> more guiltie. That is y<sup>e</sup> thing which Moses meant in this text. For hauing tolde the Iewes that this Song should serue for a testimony to stop their mouths so as they should not haue any thing to reply against G O D, hee saith: for prooffe hereof, I wil bring them into the land which I promised vnto their fathers, and there they shall be fedde and fatted. For seeing that euen after they haue tasted my goodnes so great towards them, they will needs turne away from mee, and follow after strange gods: is it not ynough to bewray their filthynes vnto all the worlde? Must not all creatures be witnesses thereto? Shal not my word thei haue good authoritic to say, that they be too leawd a people, & a people that are not worthy, that I should euer haue giuen them one morcell of bread to eate, & much lesse that I should haue adopted and chosen them from among all the nations: of the worlde, to be a holy people, and a Royall presthoo'd? Now we perceiue the meaning of Moses. It remaineth y<sup>e</sup> we apply it to our vse. It was meete that the Iewes after this warning peale, should haue acknowledged that they came not into y<sup>e</sup> land of Canaan, otherwise than by the leading of God, and that the same lande was giuen them in possession because of the Promise made to their father Abraham. Moreouer they saw, how God held them there. It is good reason then that they should haue concluded, that (seeing they were depriv'd of so great a benefite, and yet God is vnchangeable & altereth not his purpose) the euill came of themselves, in that they suffered not God to continue his mercy toward them, but did refuse it, & shut the gate against him. Indeede we haue not at this day a land of Canaan; we haue not y<sup>e</sup> which the Iewes had, to be gathered into one certaine Country. But what? We be too blind, if we vnderstand not that what Country soeuer God hath giuen vs to lue in, yet it is he that doth harbour vs. And although we had neither Testimony nor Token of his goodnesse as concerning this present life; yet there is a matter which passeth all this; which is, That he hath drawn vs out of the darkenesse of damnation wherein we were plunged: and hath brought vs to y<sup>e</sup> heritage of saluatio. For through hope, we be already set aboue with Iesus Christ; as S. Paul speaketh in the Epistle to the Ephes. Yet neuertheless besides this, God of his exceeding great goodnes, saileth not to giue vs many mo testimonies of his fatherly loue: for who else nourisheth and feedeth vs in this world? Howe many wayes doe we dayly perceiue that he hath his hand stretched out, yea or rather his wings, (as he saith in the Song) as it were to broode v<sup>s</sup>. Deut. 32. 11. heere like little chickens? We see it with our eyes. Seeing then that wee haue so much experience of the goodnesse of God; and againe y<sup>e</sup> on the other side, he by his scourging of vs doeth traine vs to the vnderstanding of our finnes, and thereupon doeth offer vs his worde wherein to beholde the articles that are layd against vs: must we not needes be too hard hearted and brutish, if wee bee not moued to come vnto him with true repentance? So then, let vs learne to exercise our selues better in the remembrance of Gods benefites, & to acknowledge them accordingly, as he hath bound vs vnto him: and on y<sup>e</sup> other side to consider, that if he at any time saile vs, the same must needs come of our vnthankfulness. For as for him, he will continually proceede more and more to doe vs good, vnlesse we hinder him, and turne away the course of his goodnesse, as if a man should stay the running of a River. For the goodnesse of God is a fountaine that neuer dryeth: it is certaine that he neuer ceaseth to doe vs good. Doeth he then scourge vs? Our finnes must needes be the cause thereof, because we haue provoked his wrath. After that manner must wee consider as well of Gods benefites, as of the afflictions that he sendeth vs, specially when wee bee warned by his word, as the way is here shewed vs.

And whereas he sayeth, That the people after that they be filled and fedde: It serueth to aggravate their vnthankfulness the more. For if the people of Israel had bin afflicted, and that thereupon they had fallen away, [there had bin some colour] as oftentimes men being tempted doe fall away from G O D because they be at their wits end. And albeit that the same be no sufficient excuse, yet may it seeme that the fault is so much the lesse. As for example, when a man hath meanly serued God, and it hath not appeared that he hath dealt amisse, but rather that hee had a good zeale and affection: if God thereupon doe punish him, and he bee so vexed that he woteth not where to become; in so much that hee doe murmur, chafe, and blaspheme God, or is induced to doe euill, men will say, Well, this man, as long as G O D dealt gently with him, did inewe himselfe to bee in good order: but now we see what temptations doe. But when a man is blessed of G O D, and doeth prosper by all means, and it is Gods pleasure to wynn him by gentleness and goodnesse: if thereupon hee become a rebell, and despise God, and giue ouer himselfe to all manner of loosenesse, (as some are seene to do, or rather as the common manner is, that as soone as G O D giueth men that which they doe long for and desire, they become drunken, and doe lose both wit and reason;) if a man [say I] doe then ouershoot himselfe after that fashion when G O D dealeth with him so graciously: is not his sinne so much the more haynous? Yes certainly.

That

Eph 1. 6.

That is the thing which Moses meant to declare in this place; [where he sayeth,] They shall come into the Lande which I haue promised them, there will I sustaine them, there shall they bee filled and made fatte; and then will they surue away after strange goddes. By these wordes we are made to vnderstande, that the more our Lorde maketh vs to feele his fauour and fatherly goodnesse, the more ought we to be allured to rest wholly vpon him that hee may possesse vs, and the more ought all our wittes and affections to bee stayed vpon his loue, so as the diuell may not finde any breach nor gap open to deceyve vs, for so much as GOD hath so wonne vs vnto himselfe. That is the instruction which we must learne by this text, otherwise the complaynt that GOD maketh against the Iewes by his Prophet Ieremie, shall lyght vpon vs. My people [sayeth hee] what haue I doone to thee? Heere GOD entereth into disputation with the people because they were so defiled with Idolatry and had persecuted all together. Goe to (saith hee) let vs now pleade together; my people, what haue I doone to thee that thou shouldest complaine? I haue brought thee out of the lande of Egypt, I haue stretched out my mightie hand to deliuer thee from thence, I haue ledde thee, and directed thee, I fedde thee in the wilderness, I caused Manna to come from heauen, I gaue thee the foode of Angels: and when thou wast come into the lande which I had promised thee, I fought against thine Enemies, and I gaue thee victorie against them all. But these bee not the cheefe matters: I haue moreouer giuen thee my Lawe, which is the couenant of life and saluation, I haue giuen thee my Sacrifices, to the intent thou shouldest haue a Testimonie that it is not without cause, that I would haue you to my selfe. Also I haue made thee to finde so great riches of my bountie, that it is impossible to value the benefites which I haue bestowed on thee: and doest thou nowe fall to despising me, and to breaking thy sayth, and to turning away after strange Gods? Is this the recompence that I looke for? If a man doe plant him a vine and tend it; he meaneth to eat and drinke the fruit thereof. And if the vine do yelde a strange and a bitter fruite, to choke the maister withall, what will come of it? Deterueth not such a vine to be quite plucked vp? Let vs therefore bethinke our selues, and not tarie till our Lorde accuse vs to haue greued his holy Spirit: but let vs turne this text to our profite. And for as much as we knowe by experience, that he is a liberall father vnto vs; let it moue vs to soften our hearts, how heardsoeuer they bee, that wee may learne to giue our selues wholly to him. Thus ye see whereto this Text ought to serue vs where it is sayde, I will set them in the Lande which I haue promised to their fathers, they shall bee nourished there and made fatte, and they shall surue away vnto strange gods; and therefore seeing that GOD mainraineth vs, let vs suffer him also to guide and gouerne vs, vntil he hath brought vs to y eternal inheritaunce, which he hath promifed vs, and which we looke for.

Yet moreouer hee saith, that this song shall aunswere them as a witness, because it shall neuer depart from their mouth. Hereby we do see how it is our Lordes will y his word should serue not to some one vse onely; but also for a continuall instruction euen vnto the end; & that the fathers should conuey it ouer to their childre. And the chiefe succession which we ought to leaue to them that come after vs, is that when GOD hath once vttered his will vnto vs, we must beware that it be not buried, so as none of vs bee so fond as to hold himselfe contented with his owne only knowing thereof, as though the light of saluation ought to die with vs: but rather that they which come after vs may inioy it also. And therefore when we our selues haue known God, and haue had his trueth preached among vs; we must to the vttermost of our power indeuor, that it may continue after our death, and that our children may come to receiue y doctrine which we haue followed. And if the word of God slip away, and men think not thereon (as it is come to passe in the Popedonie, & as it was afore time;) it commeth of their owne leawdnesse, and they must needs yeelde a reckoning for their disannulling of so great a benefite. Wee see that the law was lost for a time amongst the people of Israel, and this song was out of the mouthes of both great and small: but yet God at the last did not suffer the people to continue in such ignorance; but it was his will that the Lawe was founde, and that the people came with great solemnitie to receiue it, and hee tolde them that they were woorthy of blame for defacing the doctrine of Saluation, and therefore hee willed them to repent. Nowe, seeing it is so; as I haue already touched, when GOD hath once taught vs his will, let vs learne (as I sayde afore) not onely to profite therein for the present tyme or for the tyme of our owne life, but also to procure as much as in vs lyeth that our Children after our death, may still enioy the same Religion, and that the name of GOD may euer bee had in remembrance.

And although there be many that cannot profit themselves thereby; yet shall it turne to their condemnation, and God shall not faile to be glorified. For surely Moses speaketh in this place, not onely of Gods elect, and of such as were the true seede of Abraham: but also of such as were willing to take profite by the lawe, and were not altogether reprobates. For seeing it was Gods will that this song should bee in their mouthes; thereby wee ought to be so much the better aduertised, that our Lord doeth oftentimes leaue his wordes to the worlde, to be a message and a testimonie of his loue and goodnes; howbeit not for the saluation of all men, but for the condemnation of the greater part. Wee see that euen among the Heathen there remained alwayes a remnant of the truth: wee see such sentences vttered by the heathen, as it is impossible for a naturall man to thinke the least of them which they haue alleaged. By what meanes then did

Ier. 2. 5.

Ier. 3. 10.

they it? It was Gods dooing, who brought them so farre forth to their greater condemnation; and at the last day they shall full well be brought in minde of it againe. Nowe if we haue the word of GOD, which ought to bee a much more familiar instruction to vs; and that God constraineth vs to haue our eares beaten therewith, and to bee able to talke thereof; if wee make none account thereof, but walke altogether contrarie to it, so as it may seeme that wee haue conspired to prouoke the wrath of GOD against vs; Alas how dreadfull condemnation is readie for vs? Therefore let vs looke well to our selues, and let vs consider that our Lorde doeth often times leaue his worde in the mouth of men, not to the intent they should be instructed thereby to their profite; (for they be neither worthie nor capable thereof, bycause of their malice and rebellion,) but to the intent they should haue the lesse excuse, at such time as they must condemne themselves, and when this sentence is to be executed vpon them, namely, Thou wicked seruant I condemne thee, yea euen by thine owne mouth. Let vs therefore take heede of that, and let vs make such confession of Gods truth; as the same may proceede from the roote of our heart, and be a good Sacrifice, and so consequently turne to our saluation, as Saint Paul sayeth in the tenth Chapter to the Romanes, which was alleaged by mee, not long since. Thus must the worde of GOD bee al-

waies in our mouth, not to condemne vs, in such wise, as wee may sit rucking still continually in our filthinesse: but to condemne vs in such wise as wee may bee touched with repentance, and vtterly mislike of our sinnes, and flee vnto GOD to obtaine fauour at his hand: yea euen in such wise, as he may rule and gouerne vs by his holy spirit, and from hencefoorth bee glorified in all our life.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the Maiestie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes: beseeching him to vouchsafe more and more to giue vs a true vnderstanding and feeling of that which wee haue deserued, so as wee may bee altogether cast downe in our selues, and lay away all glorying of our selues, and that our whole resorting for refuge may bee alonely to his goodnesse: and that in the meane whyle we may sigh vnder the burthen of our flesh, for so much as wee bee so ouerloaden, that wee are not able to come to him with so pure affection, as we ought: and that he will augment the graces of his holy spirit, vntill he haue rid vs quite and cleane of all maner of vices and imperfections, and renewed vs after his owne image, so as we may forsake all thinges, to giue our selues vnto him: and that renouncing this present world, we may labour to attayne to the inheritance of the heauenly life. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely vnto vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

22 And so Moses wrate this Song the same day, and taught it the children of Israell.

23 Then hee commaunded Iosuah the sonne of Nun, and sayde, bee strong and of good courage: for thou shalt bring the Children of Israell, into the lande concerning the which I haue sworne to them, and I will bee with thee.

24 And it came to passe that Moses finished his wryting of the woordes of this Lawe in the booke: so that hee made an ende.

25 Then Moses commaunded the Leuites that bare the Arke of the Couenaunt of the Lord, saying:

26 Take the booke of this Lawe, and lay it in the side of the Arke of the Couenaunt of the Lorde your God, that it may bee a witness agaynst thee.

27 For I knowe thy stubbornnesse and thy stiffe necke, beholde, whyle I am yet a liue with you this day, you bee Rebelles agaynst the Lorde: how much more then will you be so after my death?

28 Cause all the Elders of your Trybes and your Rulers to come before me, that I may vtter these words in their hearing, and that I may call both heauen and earth to witness agaynst them.

29 For I knowe that after my death, you will bee corrupted and fall away from the way that I haue commaunded you . And finally euill will come vpon you , bycause you shall haue doone euill in the sight of the Lorde, by prouoking him to anger through the workes of your handes.

30 So Moses spake the words of this song in the eares of all the congregation of Israell : vntill he ended them.

Wee haue heerebefore already scene, howe Moses exhorted Iosuah, whom G O D gaue him tobee his successor. And therein wee haue scene also, that he was contented to haue serued God during his owne lyfe time, and that hee was not grieued y<sup>e</sup> another was reserued for the charge which was more excellent than that which had beene committed vnto him. For the chiefe matter was to put the children of Israell in possession of the heritage that God had promised them. Moses is remoued from that honor, and G O D tolde him that it was to shame him withall, because he had not glorified him, when the people strove, at such time as they asked water to drinke. God sayd that Moses behaueu not himselfe constant ynough at that time, and therefore hee punished him, and would not that hee should put the people in possession of the land of Chanaan. Nowe see with what patience Moses did beare this chastisement which God layd vpon him : In so much that although Iosuah was appointed in his place, yet hee was not a whit moued thereat with enuie or euill will: but did rather exhort him, desiring nothing, but that such a man might be let vp, as should maintayne and preferre the state of the Church. Hereby wee are taught, that although God doe pardon our faultes, yet neuer thelesse if it please him to send vs corporal punishments to the intent wee shoulde the rather humble our selues, and not spurne against his power, but stoope to it, and yeelde our selues altogether obedient; surely it is conuenient for vs as he knoweth verie well. And therefore let vs suffer our selues to be gouerned by his hand, as it is the generall rule that we must obserue in all the punishments that God doeth send vs.

And by the way, wee are also to marke, that the zeale of the honour of God and of y<sup>e</sup> welfare of his Church, ought to beare rule in vs: so as none of vs doe couct to bee in high degree, and to mount about his neighbours: but bee contented that God doe conduct vs by the meanes of men, and that hee choose such instrumentes as it pleaseth himselfe. For so hee may alwayes haue the soueraintie, and the Church prosper, let vs reioyce therein, and let no man haue regarde of himselfe. Moreover wee are to call to remembrance, that when Moses meant to encourage Iosuah, hee assured him vpon the promyse of G O D. And that is the thing which must bee the stay of all our strength. For if wee will bee stout vpon our owne heade; G O D will ouerthrowe such a rashnesse, lyke a fond thing as it is. What must then bee done? Wee must embrace the promyses of G O D; and when hee hath once tolde vs that he is our defender: wee must not feare that wee shall bee forsaken of him, but bee resolute in all thinges. And although the worlde doe offer vs many ouerthrowtes to make vs to distrust: yet let vs stande stedfast in the thing which our G O D hath tolde vs. For it is good reason to doe him the honour, that his woorde may bee preferred before all thinges that may turne vs away from the assurance that hee hath giuen vs.

Thus see you heere a very profitable lesson which is, y<sup>e</sup> bycause we feele so many infirmities in our selues y<sup>e</sup> there needeth nothing to beare vs downe, but as soone as y<sup>e</sup> wind bloweth, we be shaken, or elle doe fall altogether: we perceiuing such feeblenesse in vs, must receiue the remedie that is offered vs here; which is to hearken to the promyses of our God. And for as much as hee assureth vs that he will neuer faile vs; let vs trust to that stay: For when the winds, the Stormes, and the Tempestes of this present world come; wee shall neuer bee shaken. Ye see then that the strength and stay, of the faithfull, is to rest altogether vpon that which God hath promised them. And for that cause doeth Moses say to Iosuah, Thou shalt put the children of Israell in possession of the land. And Moses speaketh it not at aduantage; but to ratifie that which we haue scene more at large here before; namely that God had chosen Iosuah to that office, and that hauing committed the charge vnto him, he promised him in likewise to vphold him with his mightie hande, Whereupon it is saide vnto him, be strong, and behaue thy selfe manfully. So then let vs learn to fight against all temptations when wee haue once tasted the force of Gods promyses. For it is a token that wee giue no credite to that which God speaketh, when wee continue lyke Reedes shaking with euery winde, and tremble at euery trouble that commeth: standing in a maming, or starting from the right way, and waxing rechlesse in discharging our ductie. As often as such thinges happen, wee shewe our weakenesse: and wee giue good proofe that wee beleuee not that which G O D hath spoken. Wee may well alleage and say, As for my selfe, I hold the promyses of God for certaine, I doubt not but that whatsoever proceedeth from his mouth is an infallible trueth. Wee may well so say; but the deece it selfe proeueh that there is nothing in vs but hypocrisie, and that wee bee not firme to go through with that which is commaunded vs, and to discharge our duetic in following our vocation, ne walke steadily when all things seeme forlorne. To be short, let vs learne that faith is ioyned with such power, as ought alwayes to make vs to go forward still, whiche soeuer God calleth vs: And so shall it doe, conditionally that we bee grounded vpon his woorde. And on the contrary side, we must needes be tossed with vnquietnesse, and be wandering hither and thither, and trotte vp and downe without any stay, if we haue not the word of God to guide vs, and to be our lanterne. And it is the right payment of all them, that leane to their owne fantasies, and make foolish enterprises, and passe their boundes and lymites: It is requisite (say I) that our Lord should beate them downe at the last, though they were aduanced for a tyme. And what is the cause? By cause (as I saide afore) there is no power but that which is grounded vpon the woorde of God.

But there is yet one point more, which is that euerie one of vs must haue respect whereunto hee is called, and what it is that God hath committed to his hands: for (as we see heere) if Iosua had thrust in himselfe, without God had appointed him, what power could hee then haue had? Peradventure for a braide or twain he might haue done wonders, as we see y<sup>e</sup> Children of this worlde doe, who in their brauerie doe as it were spitte fire for a while as they say, but in the end are quite confounded. And euen so shoulde it haue happened to Iosua. But forasmuch as hee raryed till God had shewed him his wil, therefore he was not disappointed of his hope. So then, let none of vs take more vpon him than is lawfull for him: but let vs consider what our office and calling require, and so let euery of vs keepe him within his degree, with all sobernesse and modestie; and then will G O D be our guide, according to this saying of his, that his Angels shall alwayes beare vs company, euen in our iourneyes, so wee goe not astray. Nowe heerewithall it is declared heere, that Moses did write this Song and all the booke of the Lawe; and that hauing written it, hee red it openly before all the people, and gaue the booke of the Lawe to the Leuites, willing them to lay it in the side of the Arke or Coffer of the Couenant, and telling them that it should be a Testymonie against the people. Yea and once againe hee accuseth the rebellio. Thou shalt know (saith he) what a one thou art. God must alwayes haue an action framed against thee and bee thy Iudge; for thou art full of Rebellion, thou wilt not be governed but by strong hand; If thou wouldest willingly serue thy God, hee would vse thee after a more myeld and gentle fashio. But what? By cause thou art so barded in euill, that thou wilt not by any meanes be bowed, G O D is fayne to vse rigour. And nowe yet once againe (sayeth hee) I will call heauen and earth to witness against you. That is the effect of that which is declared in this place.

Now as concerning the first poynt, we must marke that this woorde Writing doeth import, that Moses was not the author of the Lawe nor of the song: but was onely the writer or recorder thereof, at the mouth of God. Nowe then, like as a cleark of an office writeth what is appointed him; Euen so it is sayd expressly here, that Moses wrote the things which he receiued of God, and not any thing that was forged in his owne brayne. And this serueth to giue such authoritie to the Lawe and to the song which wee shall see heereafter; as may make vs to giue care with all reuerence, not to a mortall creature, but to the liuing G O D, whose will it is to haue his Maestie knowen there. Thus much for one poynt.

And heerewithall it is shewed vs that our faith oweth no obedience but to him onely, neyther ought to depend vpon men, howe wise soeuer they be; but that God ought to haue the governing and whole Lordship thercof. According whereunto Saint Paule protesteth, that hee raigned not like a Lord vnder any colour ouer their faith, but that hee refered that right vnto God, to whom alone it belonged. And in verie dede if wee should compare all the men liuing in the worlde with Moses, it is certaine that we should alwayes finde, that hee is the excellentest Prophet that G O D hath chosen of all the rest, according as wee shall see in the end of this song: and yet for all that, his speaking of the Law which was published by him, is not to bring vs in admiration of his person, that wee should say, Truly that was an excellent man: but it is sayde that God was serued by him. After what manner? Soothly euen thus, that hee did not take any thing in hand, nor put fourth any dreame or dotage of his owne, but onely wrote that which hee had receiued at the mouth of God. Seeing that this testimonie is deliuered concerning Moses: what diuinish boldnesse and arrogancie is in them that be farre inferior to him: which will needes be heard, when they bring fourth nothing but their owne fantasies, and submit not themselues to the worde of God? And yet wee haue to marke that the charge of Moses differed greatly from theirs which be at this day ordained Ministers in the Church. For God gaue him his lawe; and therefore hee was fortie dayes and fortie nightes in the mountaine without meate or drinke, to the end that his doctrine shoulde bee authorisid. Nowe, this was peculiar to him, and as a special priuiledge. Seeing it is so, then are we so much the better confirmed in that which I haue spoken: to wit, that it becommeth not men to enterprise any thing of their owne braine (as they say,) but that they must onely deliuer forth that which God commandeth them, and be (as it were) his instruments.

And heerewithall let vs marke also, how it is not without cause, that Moses commandeth the Leuites to lay the booke of the Lawe in the side of the Chist or Arke of the covenants: for thereby it had the more Maestie, not by cause the Sanctuarie of it selfe was of more worthinesse than other places; but bicause God had ordained it to y<sup>e</sup> vse, and that it was his pleasure that it shoulde be as a pledge, & a visible signe of his presence.

This

1. Cor. 12. 17

Deut. 34. 11

This matter hath bin already treated of heretofore: & therefore we need not to stand vpon it any long while: neuertheless it is requisite to haue y<sup>e</sup> remembrance thereof briefly renewed vnto vs. Men of their owne nature bee so dull, that they can neither attaine nor indeuout to attayne vnto G O D vnlesse they haue some helpe.

As for vs, wee haue not nowe the figures and shadowes which the fathers had vnder the law. For G O D hath nowe reueyled himselfe vnto vs more familiarly in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ, who is his liuely Image: but vnder the lawe, it was necessarie that the fathers should haue the figures to aide them, to the intent they might bee confirmed in the fayth. And when they came to the Sanctuarie or the Tabernacle, it was a kind of offering themselves before the face of God. There were no Images nor Puppets: for it was not their fashion to haue anie such remembrance of God, as the Papists doe imagine; but there were the ten commandementes, which were laide vp there, and God woulde that his maiestie should bee looked vpon in his worde. And Moses giueth expresse commaundement, that the booke of the lawe which he had written, should bee laide there in the side of the Chest of the couenant. And to what ende? As if God should say, Here is my Testimonie, you must not receiue this doctrine as if it were framed after the deuice of man: ye must hold it as a thing that comes from mee: for you haue a visible token thereof. Nowe then we see wherunto this ceremonie of y<sup>e</sup> putting vp of the booke of the lawe into the Chest of the couenant did serue: It was all one as if God had protested that hee auowed it to be his owne, and that Moses had no further to do with it than onely that hee serued him as his minister.

Here we see yet againe that which we haue declared already: namely, that God calleth vs altogether to himselfe, and that hee would not haue drawn vs away one way or other to haue regarde vnto men: for so should our faith bee alwayes waucering, and there would be no stay. It is his will that wee should haue our eye vpon him alone, to yeelde our selues to his obedience. And therefore let vs learne to betake vs wholie to our God, if wee meane to haue a true and holie vnion in the Church. The Papists do prate much of the Catholike church, and of the agreement that ought to bee therein: Yea, but in the meane while there is horrible diuision and hellish confusion among them, because God beareth not rule there by his word, neither is there any allowable doctrine, but they be tossed too and fro: I meane nor the common sort onely, but euen them also which make the articles of fayth and frame commandementes & traditions at their owne pleasure, whereof they haue hoorded and heaped fo manie one vpon another, that they can scarcely wel tel who is the reporter of this or that, or who is the inuenter thereof, or who was the first maker of such an order or of such a tradition. Thus yee see how all things goe to confusion and disorder, when men direct not themselves by the pure doctrine of G O D. And therefore let vs marke, that when our Lorde willed that the booke of the law should be put vp in the Sanctuarie: it was as it were his Royall seate where hee sate himselfe, & where hee would bee honoured. And thereby hee shewed in effect, that hee would not haue his Church to be gouerned after the pleasure or liking of men: but meane to holde it in awe, and that his onely worde should be receiued, so as men should looke onely vnto him, and be gathered together there. But now that wee haue our Lorde Iesus Christ for our heade, and that he is appointed our Shepheard, and telleth vs that if wee bee his sheepe, wee must not onely heare his voyce, but also discern it from the voyce of strangers: I pray you shall there be anie excuse, if we be so waucering in the aire, as we see the Papistes are, following euery man his owne deuice, or else busying themselves about the Traditions of men? Therefore let vs learne to submitte our selues vnto God and vnto him whome he hath set vp in his behalfe to be our onclie gouernour: Alie let vs learne to heare the lawe and the Gospell in such wise, as wee may quake at the Maiestie of our God: and let vs come with such reuerence and humilitie to the hearing of the doctrine that is deliuered out of it, as wee may not in anie wise replie against it, nor bring thither anie one droppe of our owne wisdome, to say, I think it not meete; to what purpose is this spoken? But let vs without gayne saying, receiue all that euer our Lord declareth vnto vs. Thus much for one point.

And moreouer let vs so stick to him, as our faith be not tossed to and fro. When wee see diuersitie of opinions, and that to aduance themselves men doe through ambition vnder take great matters; let not that carie vs away; but let vs continue still resolu'd that there is none but G O D alone that will teach vs [aright.] & that hee hath doone it by his lawe, and lastlie by the Gospell, inasmuch that our Lorde Iesus Christ is appointed by him to be our Teacher, and we haue expresse commaundement to heare him, This is my welbeloued sonne, heare him. by the which point he doeth men to vnderstande, that he will haue them to stick vnto his doctrine and to be obedient to the same.

Moreouer it is saide, That the law shall bee laide vp there for a Testimonie against the people of Israel. It should seeme at the first shewe, that the law serueth but to condemne men: but I haue already declared yesterday, that it is saide so in respect of folkes frowardnesse which will not be taught but by compulsion. True it is that this hardenesse is to bee founde in all men: for by nature wee are hardlie brought in order, wee be comber some, the wilde beastes doe not casilie become gentle, nor suffer themselves to bee tamed at our hands; but yet there is not so wild a beast to bee founde in the worlde as euerie man is, vntill our Lorde haue subdued the stubbornnesse that is in vs, and giuen vs the Spirit of meekenesse; and therefore our Lorde is saide

to speake vnto vs, and as it were to enter an action to reprocue vs. In respect whereof it is saide, that the spirite shall iudge the worlde. There our Lorde Iesus Christ treateth of the Gospell, and sheweth to what ende it shall be preached. I will (saith hee) sende soorth my doctrine, and to what ende? To iudge the worlde. Yea but the Gospell is a message of grace and fatherly louing kindnesse. God doth heere offer vnto vs his heart, and telleth vs that hee requireth nothing, but to bring vs to saluation: and wherefore then speaketh hee of condemnation? It is impossible for him to bring vs to saluation, vnlesse we bee first condemned. Therefore it behooueth vs at the first entrie to be inforced to submit our selues vnto God: for vntill he hath made that chaunge in vs, wee will neuer yeelede to bee gouerned by him. Yet notwithstanding our Lorde so worketh in his elect, y after he hath humbled them, they suffer themselves to be led without any more resistance; insomuch y their whole pleasure and ioy is to bee subiect to God, and to frame themselves altogether after his will. The others be y rebellious, that our Lord is faine to vse continuall roughnesse and sharpnes against them. True it is that euen the faithfull haue alwayes in them some kind of struiing, so as they bee neuer so thoroughly reformed but that there is euer some replying. Yet notwithstanding, as manie as are gouerned by the Spirite of God (as all his children bee) shall cheefely haue their whole desire and affection to bee altogether subiect vnto God, and to doe nothing vpon their owne heade or after their owne liking. As for the others which be not reformed, it is requisite that God shoulde alwayes stande in lawe against them, and vse rigour to their condemnation. For this cause it is saide here, that the booke of the lawe shoulde bee a witness against the people. Moses meaneth not but there shoulde bee some, that should profite by the law, so as the doctrine thereof should not be a warrant vnto them of Gods goodnesse to guide the to the hope of euerlasting life: but he treateth here of the greatest sort which was wicked and froward. And y scripture vseth such a maner of speech, when a people is for the most part wicked, saying, All of you. Although our Lorde knowe his owne people, and separateth them from the rest: yet forbeareth he not, to say, You: as though hee spake generally without exception. Let vs marke then, that the lawe was laid vp for a Testimonie against the people: not because it doeth not containe a witnessse of the loue of God for mens welfare: but because of y peoples malice, who could not finde in their heartes to fare the better thereby, but turned the light into darknesse, and conuerted their breade and meate into poison, and altered life into death. Also we ought to thinke vpon this which Paul speaketh, namely that the lawe is a minister of death: but he speaketh there but of y commandements: whereas here Moses comprehendeth all the couenaunt that God had made, euen the couenaunt of the Gospell, concerning the which we haue seene herebefore how Saint

Paul saide, that the same pertaineth not to the law: namely: The word is in thy mouth and in thy heart. Also I haue tolde you, and wee haue had sufficient prooffe thereof, that Moses was not onely a minister of the law, but also did set forth the free promises of saluatiõ which were grounded in our Lord Iesus Christ. And now he doth briefly comprehend all that in a summe. Neuertheles he forbeareth not to say, that the lawe shall be a witnessse against the people. And why? As I saide afore, it commeth not of the nature of the lawe, that is to say of the doctrine; but of y malice of that people, which could not abide, that God should be their father and Saviour. Now then, the thing which is here protested of the lawe, pertaineth to the Gospell: to witte, that when the Gospell is preached; if wee accept the message which is offered vnto vs, wee haue G O D for our father, wee be assured of his free adoption, and we may freely cal vpon him in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ. Thus ye see howe wee ought to be rauished with ioy, when God sheweth himselfe so good and gracious towards vs. Neuerthe later, if we despise so great a benefite, or abuse it as the hypocrites do, or if we be skorners of God, or loofe liuers; or if we be so wedded to this present worlde, that the heavenly inheritance seemeth nothing vnto vs: God will holde skorne of vs also, and moreover there shal not one onely word be spoken, which shal not ask vengeance against vs at the last day: God wil haue infinite witnessses. Looke how manie sermons haue bene made, looke howe manie lectures haue bene reade, and looke howe manie bookes haue bene printed: and they shal al be witnessses to condemme vs as guiltie, and to make vs inexcusable before God. Although then y this ceremonie of hauing a booke laid vp as it were in the presence of God, be not now obserued: yet notwithstanding seeing we haue God with vs in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ, and that Iesus Christ hath receiued and auowed vs for his Church, and also authorized his Gospell according as we perceiue by this saying of his, He y heareth you, heareth me, and he y refuseth you refuseth me; Seeing (say I) y we be at this point; there needeth none other proces to be framed against vs. Let vs looke therefore that we withall reuerence and feare receiue the doctrine which is deliuered vnto vs in the name of our God, to the end wee be not iudged and condemned thereby at the last day. According whereunto our Lord Iesus Christ threateth the Iewes in an other place, saying: It is not I that will condemne you, but the word which you haue heard at my mouth shall be your iudge. So then, let vs take heed while our Lord allureth vs vnto him gently, and let vs goe to him: and let our whole seeking be to put our selues as sheepe vnder the guiding of our shepherd: and then shal not the worde be a witnessse against vs, nor serue to condemne vs: but much rather we shal haue in y lawe a certaine Pawne of our saluation: and we shall see in the ende, that it is not a wayne doctrine. Wee see yet better by that which followeth, that the malice and rebellion of the people was the cause why Moses vsed ſuch ſeueritie . For it is ſaide that he was verie mild and gentle: and yet howe ſpeaketh he ? What manner of ſpeech doeth he vs ? I haue knowne you of long time to be very hardhearted and ſtubborne , and at this day , I perceiue not that you bee any what amended ; nay ye bee rather waxen worſe and worſe: ye bee become wilde beaſtes , euer more rebelling againſt G O D , and howe much more then will ye do ſofter my death : As if he ſhould ſay , I knowe you to be ſuch as wil neuer be good . And nowe muſt I haue recourſe to heauen and earth: for I find no ſufficient wimes among you: I muſt call the ſenſeleſſe creatures , to ſhewe that the heauens and the earth , albeit they haue neither reaſon nor vnderſtanding , ſhal appeare before G O D to criſe for vengeance againſt you . In ſpeaking after this manner , Moſes might ſeem to bee the ſharpeſt , the rougheſt , and the cholerickeſt man y euer was: and that was againſt his nature . But what: Hereby wee doe ſo much the better perceiue , that the people were in manner vneformable and paſt hope of recouerie , and that there was none other way to deale with the but after ſuch a faſhion . And indeede , if wee compare Moſes with God , what is al the mildneſſe that may bee in a mortall man in reſpect of the fountaine of all goodnes ? For albeit that Moſes was of a meeke ſpirit , ſo as there was nothing in him but meekenes , and that he was as meeke as the ſcripture ſpeaketh : yet notwithstanding , all the goodneſſe which he could haue was but a little droppe of that which G O D had ſhed out vpon him by his holy ſpirit . In G O D we finde all perfection of goodnes : yet doe we ſee howe ſharpe and rough he is againſt men . And whence commeth that , but of our greewing of him ? In ſomuch that hee is ſaine (as ye woulde ſay , ) to transforme himſelfe , becauſe we cannot finde in our heartes to ſuffer him to behaue himſelfe towards vs , as hee woulde in following his goodnes , which is infinite and vmeaſurable in him . So then , we ſee that the frowardnes of the people of Iſrael was horrible , ſeeing that G O D and his ſeruant Moſes , (who bare the marke of the goodnes and meekeneſſe of his holy ſpirit) were driuen to behaue themſelues ſo roughlie . And hereof wee may gather , that when G O D choſe that people , it was not (as we haue already ſaide heretofore) either for deſert or worthineſſe that hee founde in them . And indeede Moſes caſteth it in their teeth [ ſaying ; ] Shoulde you thinke that G O D is bound to you ? If he haue aduanced you aboute al other nations , & giuen you any dignitie or excellencie: ſhould you therefore boaſt your ſelfe thereof ? Nay you be a ſiſte necked people , which cannot bowe , you be ( ſaith he ) rebellious and froward , and therefore it is to bee concluded , that God was not moued to chooſe you , but of his owne goodneſſe .

Nowe that we haue found ſuch frowardnes in the people of Iſrael ; let vs repaire to ourſelues: for the meaning of God is to teach vs at other ſolkes coſt . They which be deade ſo long while ſince , be at this day ſet as it were on a ſtage , God putteth them to reproch , that they might ſerue for an inſtruction to vs . We heare that the people of Iſrael were froward & ſtubborne , and we ſee how God condemneth them , & diſcouereth their ſhame . To what ende ? For our good & for our learning . Now then , ſeeing that the childre of Iſrael be put to ſhame here after ſuch a ſorte , let vs learne to examine well whether there bee the like faultes in vs : and ſurelie when we haue ſerched all things throughly , we ſhall find that we be no leſſe faultie than they . For where is the readineſſe to ſerue our God when hee calleth vs ? Wee be ſo ſlowe and ſo rethleſſe , as is pittie to ſee . Neither is there onely ſlownes and ſlackeneſſe in vs : but alſo wee ceaſe not to kicke againſt him . Howe manie wicked fanſies haue wee , which turne vs away from the ſimplicitie of faith ? Howe much are wee tempted of our wicked luſtes , which ſerue to make vs to kicke againſt our God ? How bee wee held down in this preſent worlde , whereas wee ſhoulde mount vp vnto heauen ? Howe doe wee breake all manner of order which our Lorde hath ſet amongſt vs for our welfare ? And albeit that for a time , wee pretende ſome good deſire and inclination : yet it laſteth not , wee bee changed from it with the turning of a hande , ſo as we be caried now this way , nowe that way , & euerie little ouerthwart is enough to make vs miſtake of Gods worde . And haue we once conceiued ſuch miſtaking , in the ende wee become like venomous Todes againſt God : and wee ſee ſo manie examples thereof as is horrible . Nowe therefore , when wee haue well looked into our ſtate , wee ſhall bee conſtrained to confeſſe that we be no better than this people . Wherefore let vs beware that the worde of God which is preached , be not a Teſtimonie againſt vs at this day . Yea and let vs not thinke it ſtraunge , though God reprove vs ſharpelie , and ſend vs ſuch rebukes as hee did to the Iewes : neither let vs ſay , with ſuch , as ſettle themſelues in their ſithineſſe , Howe nowe ? God pincheth vs too harde . Alas wee had neede to bee called vpon a hundred ſoode more than we bee . What muſt we then doe ? We muſt be more quiet towards our God than we haue beene ; ſpecially when hee vseth roughneſſe in his worde , and that our ſins bee laide open , ſo as our ſhame bee diſcouered : and that on the other ſide hee threatneth vs , & ſummon vs before him , and lay there before vs the condemnation that is prepared for vs , vnles wee retourne vnto him by repentance . Therefore when ſo euer hee vseth ſuch vehemencie , we muſt not kicke againſt him , but wee muſt acknowledge the ſame to be more than needefull for vs , becauſe that if hee helde vs not ſhort after that manner , hee could neuer weeld vs . Thus yee ſee what we haue to remember , in that we ſee Moſes to haue been ſo vehement , as to haue vsed the tearmes of rebellion and malice , and to haue tolde the people that if they had beene ſtubborne in his life time , they woulde much more bee ſo after his deceaſe . When we ſee all this , let vs vnderſtande that our Lorde teacheth vs , that we haue neede to bee ſubdued after that manner; for what were to bee wonne at our handes, by vsing gentleness towards vs? The matter is apparant. True it is that God allureth vs so gently, that hee may seeme to flatter vs as a father doeth his children: but if hee continue in so doing, wee fall to making head against him, and to setting vp of our bristles, and finally to dashing at him with our hornes, and to spurning and kicking at him, so as it would pitie ones hearte to see it. Forasmuch therefore as our Lorde knoweth that he could not holde vs in obedience, but by such threatenings, rebukings, and rigour: he fashio[n]eth himselfe to our nature, to the intent to subdue the stubbornesse that is in vs. Thus ye see still what wee haue to remember vpon that place.

Nowe it is saide herewithall, That Moses willed the People to bee assembled together, euen of purpose to call Heauen and earth to witness against them. Howbeit, forasmuch as this hath bene expounded once already; I will not stande vpon it any more. Onely this shall suffice, that to make the people the more ashamed, Moses calleth the heauens and the earth to witness, which are vnreasonable creatures. As if he should say, needes must these bee detestable peoples for it is an vtter perueruing of the order of nature, when men which are created after the image of God vs neither wit not reason, but become blockishe; insomuch that if God speake to them it is but lost labour, and hee is fayne to haue recourse to the creatures which are voide of vnderstanding, as to heauen and earth. Here therefore Moses meant to touch the children of Israell to the quicke, in saying that hee called heauen and earth agayne to witness, which are creatures euen without sense, to the ende they should the better know what a brutishenesse it was that they would not giue eare vnto GOD, who notwithstanding had not onely printed his image in them inasmuch as they were men; but also had chosen them for his people, and giuen them his lawe to leade them a right. Nowe, although this thing bee to bee counted as a monstrous and ouglie thing: yet is it to bee seene in manner euerie where. For God speaketh as well in these dayes, as hee did by Moses. Yea and hee hath shewed himselfe more familiarly to vs, in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ: and yet for all that, what manner of eares bring wee to the hearing of his worde? Wee be not onely deafe but also partlie madde, and partlie so blockishe that if we were timberlogges, wee could not in a manner bee so ignorant as wee bee. Not without cause therefore is it rehearsed here againe, that Moses had recourse to heauen and earth, to the intent to make vs ashamed, because wee bee so possessed aforehande with our wicked lustes, or with the vanities of this world, or with our owne blindness; that for all that euer GOD can say or speake vnto vs, hee cannot preuaile at all with vs. Yet notwithstanding, it might seeme that this people had more modestie in them, than Moses speaketh of: For in the ende it is added that Moses sung this song, and put the people in minde of the things which they had seene already, and moreouer threatened them that GOD would punish them, telling them that although God did at that time set them in possession of the lande which hee had promised them; yet should they not abide any long time in it, ere hee should bee faine to driue them out againe, and all for their wickednesse. Doeth Moses say so? They heare him well enough. And it is a woonder to see howe this people are painted out in that song: for there all their leawde dealings are discouered; and yet they repleie not to it any more. For if a man should speake to the people of Geneva nowe adayes, as Moses spake to the people of Israell; and reprove folkes finnes as they deserue, should hee bee receyued? If a man should lay forth the leawde dealings that reigne among vs, and tel vs of our contempt of GOD and his worde, of our stubbornesse and wicked praictises, of our whoredome and loosenesse, and of such other like things: and not onely speake of the deedes that are doone nowe adayes, but also shewe other things that haue bene committed; and not onely speake of actuall finnes, but also say after this manner, Ye bee of such a nature as this, namely ye bee thanklesse towards GOD, stubborn against him, full of crueltie, pride, malice, and al manner of iniquitie. If a man should speake at these things, I pray you howe should hee bee heard? O, what murmuring would there bee? Nay it would passe murmuring: for men would gnash their teeth at it, and there would be no such patience in vs, as was in this people: for they could well enough endure Moses to tell them the things afore sayde. It is saide expressly, that hee rehearsed all the saide song in the hearing of all the people. And there is yet this saying added more, Throughout to the ende. And why was that? Hee could haue saide well enough, that Moses had rehearsed the song with a loud and cleare voyce, in the hearing of the people: but hee sayth, that euerie whit of it was rehearsed in the eares of the people, euen from the beginning to the ending. So then, his meaning is, that the people stood as dumbe, and yielded themselves guiltie. And therefore sith wee see that notwithstanding such silence, and such apparancie of the feare of GOD and of godlinesse, yet GOD vttered so rough a sentence: wee must vnderstande, that it is not enough for vs to protest ecremoniously, that wee bee subiect to GOD: insomuch that although wee resort to sermons, and haue our eares beaten continuallie with them, and call vpon GOD, and make profession of our faith; yet notwithstanding all this is nothing. In deede all these things are good and holy: but if we vse them in way of hypocritie, cursed bee we, and we must not thinke to pay GOD with such kinde of Coyne. What is to bee doone then? When wee haue heard Gods worde, let euerie of vs examine himselfe, let vs search out our finnes, let vs be sorie to see that we be not so forward as were requisite: and being prouoked hereby, let vs pray God to change and reforme vs, and to bring vs home wholly to himselfe. After that manner must wee deale. And moreover, although wee haue had some order, and kinde of gouernment among vs for a time; yet let vs be afraid alwayes, least there haue beene some faynedesse lurking vnderneath it. For we see what befell to the people of Israel: and in verie deede the thing shewes it selfe. For wee see that by startes they submitted themselues, and there seemed to bee some feare of God in them. And yet as soone as any occasion was offered, as soone as anie wicked deceiuer stepped vp; by and by they were turned away againe. Examples hereof are to bee seene: and God graunt we see them no more. Yet ought they to warne vs, that if there bee anie forme of good gouernment or behaviour among vs, so as the Church seemeth to be in good state, and religion to flourish, and God to bee honoured: the sight of all this must not make vs to thinke that that is all which we haue to do, as though a great number of vices lay not lurking vnderneath it: but wee must pray God to vouchsafe to make this gouernment to bee of such force, as it may draw our heartes vnto him, and euerie of vs may haue an eye to himselfe; that when wee once knowe thoroughly the euill that is in vs, we may seeke to God to rid vs thereof: that whereas wee haue beene stubborne, and hardhearted aforesayes, we may no more followe that trade, but come and submitte our selues with all meekenesse and mildnes to our God, so as he may rule vs without any gainstiuing.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the Maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our finnes, praying him to vouchsafe to burie them quite and cleane, and therewithall to receiue vs so into his protection, as we may fight against all the lustes of our fleshe, and the temptations of the worlde, vntill wee haue finished our course: And that because wee be so frayle of our selues, wee may alwayes resort vnto him, euen vpon trust of the promises which hee hath made vs, specially in that hee hath promised to heare vs in all our petitions which wee make to him in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenlie father, &c.

The CLXXVIII. Sermon, which is the first vpon the two and thirtieth Chapter.

HEarken O yee heauens, and I will speake: and heare thou earth the word of my mouth.

2 My doctrine shall flowe as doth the rayne, and my wordes shal drop as the deawe, euen as the raine vpon the hearbes, and as the great raine vpon the greene grasse.

3 For I will call vpon the name of the Lorde God: yeeld yee honour to our God.

4 The workes of the mightie God are perfect, for all his wayes are iudgement: God is true, and without wickednesse: he is righteous and iust.

T shoulde seeme that for as much as Moses was ordeyned to bee the teacher of the Iewes, hee should chiefly haue exhorted the to heare the things that were spoken to them for their instruction and welfare. But hee seemeth not to vouchsafe to direct his speach to them, but rather to heauen and earth, as though hee condemned them aforchande for stubborne people, and not of capacitie to receiue anie good learning. Neuerthelesse his so doing is not for that hee woulde not haue the same to serue their turne, that they might benefite themselves thereby: but for that hee was faine to quicken them vp in such wise, as it might grieue them at the heart, to see that God taketh them for condemned persons aforehand; to the end that the same might touch and moue them the better. And so let vs make; that because Moses sawe that the people were all prepared, and he ment to reach them to bee reformed by that means; it behoued him to vse such manner of proceeding. And it is verie needfull towards those that are stubborne, and vnwilling to learne at Gods hande; for such are to be rebuked and threatened; their leawdnesse is to be discouered; and they must bee put to shame; y being dismayed, they may aduise themselves to returne vnto God. And this sheweth vs, that such as haue the charge of teaching in y church, ought to bee indued with wisdom and discretion. For if their hearers behaue themselves meeldly, and be willing to be guided by the hande of God: it were no reason to thunder at them or to vse roughnesse against them. But on the contrary part if there appere anie hardnes of heart and stubbornesse in them, or if it be founde by experience that it is but lost labour to speake gently to them, as when men make the felues deafe: then behoueth it the Preacher to step to them with greater vehemencie. And Moses beganne not his gouerning of the people at the making of this song, but he had felt the experience of it long time afore, whereby he perceiued that it was a verie harde thing to bring to passe. And moreover he regarded not onely the folke then present, but also the ages then to come. True it is that those which liued in the time of Moses, could not but haue their eares beaten with the thinges conteyned here: but yet was the same to serue for their children also. Moses therefore foreseeing that the Iewes might become worse and worse, as it is the common custome of the worlde, yea and being aduertised thereof by Gods spirit; yesth such a kinde of roughnesse as wee see here. And herewithal we haue to remember the thing which I haue expounded already: namely that Moses calleth heauen and earth to witnesse, to the intent the people shoulde bee the more ashamed, seeing that the senselesse creatures doe frame their inditement, and that there needeth none other condemnation before GOD. For had Moses called the heathen and vnbeleuers to witnesse, it had bin sufficient to put those to shame whome God had chosen and adopted to bee his children, but yet woulde not that haue moued them: for all men are of one common nature, all haue reason and vnderstanding: and although they bee not all trained familiarly in Gods word, yet haue they all some seede of religion in them. Therefore the alleading of the heathen and vnbeleuers (as he will alledge them afterward) had not bene of such force as the vsing of this preface that heauen and earth shall bee his witness in all ages. As if hee shoulde say; as long as there is either Sunne or Moone in the skie, as long as the earth doeth her duetie in yeelding sustenance and foode for man: so long shall I haue good and faithfull witness, that I haue spoken in the name of God: and yet for all that, this people continueth hardhearted stil.

Deut. 30. 19

Cap. 33. 8.

Ye see then that the worde shall continue still, and although men streine themselves neuer so much to abolishe this doctrine: yet notwithstanding all creatures shall beare me recorde before God, that I haue spoken, and that he authorised me to speake, and that he sent me to do it. Thus we see now the meaning of Moses.

And so wee haue to note, that they which referre this saying to men and Angels, restraine the wordes of Moses ouer coldlie. True it is that both men and Angels might well beare witness of the vnthankfulnessse of the Iewes: howbeit (as I haue shewed already) the holie Ghost proceedeth yet further, namely that although no man speake in the mayntenance and defence of Gods cause against the Iewes: yet notwithstanding the order of the worlde, and the onely beholding of the sunne and Moone, & of y thinges which wee see here beneath, will suffice to shewe that God discharged himselfe of the promise which he had made to that people, in pouring out his great treasures vpon them: and yet that they continued still in their malice & wilful stubbornesse: insomuch that whereas hee foresawe, that they were fully bent to all euil, and woulde fall away to all manner of wickednesse: he warned them of it aforehande, & yet that woulde not serue, but euen of a malicious and spiefull wilfulnessse they turned away from their God, and would not hearken to anie warning, notwithstanding the good order which God had taken for the procuring of their saluation. Now let vs applie the same to our felues also, and let vs vnderstand that whensoever Gods worde is preached vnto vs, if we receiue it not, our refusal must be grauen in heauen and earth, and all the worlde shall ring of it, and the same shall serue to confirme our inditement before God. Indeede it will seeme, that when wee haue despised the doctrine that is preached vnto vs, it was but lost labour, and as a sounde that vanisheth in the aire: but there shall not one of the words that God hath spoken fall to the grounde, whereof we shall not feele the power. For needs must they either turne to mens saluation, or vterly bereaue them of all excuse and make them double damnable. Therefore let vs thinke wel vpon it. For as oft as God graunteth vs the fauour to be taught in his name, & by his wil: there followeth this scale, that heauen and earth shall be witness against vs to our condnation, if we wil not yeeld reuerence to him which hath authority ouer vs, in shewing our felues obedient towards him by our willing imbracing of his word with a quiet minde.

Now Moses hauing vsed such a preface, wisheth, that his doctrine may be like a flowing rain, so as it may moisten like the drops that fall vpon the grasse, and spread abroad like the dew which watereth the meadow. And why? For (saith he) I will call vpon the name of the Lord, I wil exhort me to giue glorie vnto God. Here Moses sheweth, that when wee be about to set forth the praise of God, and to treat of his goodnes, wisdom, and power, to the intent hee may be honoured of men as hee deserueth, it is not for vs to vse a common and ordinary kind of speech, speeche, but wee must streine our wit and skill to the uttermost of our powers, that our wordes may be aunswearable to the infinite maiestie of God: or if they cannot attayne therunto, (as in deede we mult neede some farre thort of that,) they may at leastwise come as neere as is possible, and tend to that ende. When we speake of worldly matters, wee may well vse a common style, & yet if we treat of any matter of importance, we sharpen our wittes to speake after the best maner that we can for (to our seeming) the thing is worth it. But when we come to G O D: then must we vse a new and more exquisite maner of speaking: specially when we will maintain his maiestie against men, and shewe that hee is worthy to be honoured of al men, because hee hath created the worlde, and mainteineth it til at this day by his power, and also because hee feedeth and susteineth men: but most of all for his choosing and adopting of his people and Church, by the knowledge whereof, men see wel howe bountifull God is towards them. Now then, are wee sufficient of ourselues to treat of such things? Who is hee that can bee founde fit for that purpose? If all the Angels of heauen would magnifie God with one melodie & one accord, could they counteruail that infinite glorie? No surely, they should come farre thort of it. And what shall become of vs then, who be fraye creatures, and can but stammer, when we be to speake of God but so much as in a shadow? But there was yet one other reason why Moses desired that his doctrine might flowe like raine that moisteneth the grasse, and watereth the medowes. For hee considereth that if our Lorde giue vs not a grace which farre passeth the measure that wee haue receiued, all is to no purpose: For although God raise vp Prophets and good teachers, and gouerne their tongues by his holy spirit, and giue them wherewith to teach his Church faithfully: yet shal they not greatly edifie it. And why? Not for any default in them: but for that they speak sometimes to stones, men be so dulheaded, and malice doeth so reigne in vs, that God can haue no access nor entrie in vnto vs, By means whereof Gods worde becommeth drie and barren, notwithstanding that of it owne nature it be moist and haue power to wet thoroughly. For it falleth but vpon stones and Rocks, where it parcheth and is lost out of hand.

Nowe first of all we be taught heere, that the chiefe thing which wee haue to doe in all our life, is to magnifie Gods name and to set forth his praise, not onely with our mouthes, that all other men may be prouoked to praise him with one accord as wel as we; but also with our hearts that euerie man may giue himselfe to it, and exercise himselfe therein. That is the thing (say I) wherein men ought to occupie themselves, if they were not misaduised to turne themselves away from such indeuour. And about all others, they that haue the charge of preaching Gods worde, haue heere a good lesson: to wit, that of themselves they bee farre vnable to performe their duetie, they haue a charge that is ouer high and excellent for them, yea euen though there were farre greater ability in them without all comparision than there is. Chose me out the ablest in the world, and yet must they be faine to acknowledge such weakenesse in themselves, as that they cannot speake of God with such maiestie and reuerence as they ought to do, no nor once come neere it, vntil God gouerne them and giue them a new speech, altering and reforming their cogues, so as they may not speake after the maner of men, but may shew howe it is the holy Ghost that raigeth in them. Nowe if Moses wished this in respect that he might faile because hee was a man: if so great a Prophet did both know and acknowledge that hee could not magnifie God as became him: alas, much lesse can we discharge our selues thereof. Therefore let vs acknowledge our infirmitie and resort vnto God, praying vnto him that as he hath vouchsafed to admit vs into his seruice, so he will also giue vs power and abilitie to handle those high mysteries to the edifying of his Church, and to set forth his praises in such wise as he may be honored as he deserueth. And y two reasons which I haue spoken of, ought to moue vs thereunto. The one is by considering what odde there is betweene the infinite glorie of God, and the slendernes that is in vs. For what is it that causeth men to presume to worke wonders, and to stand so much in their own conceits, as to think themselves able to go through with all things, but that they thinke not of God as they ought. Now therefore, when we know that God doth vs the grace to vouchsafe vs to be his lieutenants, to beare abrode his name among men, and to bring folke to the knowing of him: truly it ought to induce vs to humilitie. And when wee once know our vnsufficiency, we must also bee prouoked thereby to pray God to supply our want. Besides this let vs also consider what y world is. For although God had giuen vs more grace than we haue: yet is the worlde so frowarde, that the doctrine of God can haue no entrance at all. For it belongeth alonely to God to alter mens hearts, that is to say, to soften them, that his doctrine may drop into them and become like a moistening shewe watering the medowes, whereas it dryeth away vpon stones and Rocks. Seeing it is so, let vs learne to call vpon God better than we haue done, forasmuch as our labor were vnauailable without him.

And herewithall we be all warned in general, after what sort we should receiue Gods doctrine, that is to wit, as a raine. Were a peece of lande neuer so well husbanded and neuer so well feeded, yet if it wanted moistening from heauen, to what purpose were it? Should not all the paine that is taken about it be vnauailable: Euen so is it with vs: god must water vs daily with his word, or else hee shall draw no nourishment out of vs, we wil bring forth no fruite. Sith wee know this, wee ought to bee more diligent in hearing Gods word than we be. The earth openeth her mouth in the drought of summer, so as it thinketh if it want raine: and (as we haue seene heretofore) y heauen must be faine to hearken to the earth, as though the earth made request and supplication when it wanteth moisture . And seeing it is so, why perceiue we not our owne neede, & why go we not like hungrie folkes to pray God to water vs with his worde? Nay, the floth that is in men doeth well shewe, that they neuer knewe either the power or the office of Gods worde; namely that it is a dewe and a raine. Finally forasmuch as the scripture telleth vs, and we our selues doe feele indeede that our hearts are hard, insomuch that although God do water vs and raine downe vpon vs neuer so much, yet doth not any drop enter into vs, vntill hee haue touched vs to the quicke, and taken away the sinne that is in vs; he must be faime to cleanse all our wicked affections, to the end that his worde may enter, so as there may be neither marowe, nor bone, nor thought, nor aff. ction, nor aught else in vs, wherunto this word of his may not extend, that we may feele the force thereof. Thus ye see in effect what wee haue to remember vpon this place.

Nowe whereas Moses saith that he will call vpon the name of the Lord, hee meaneth not simplicly that he will but onely pray, as indeede that manner of speech is so taken in many places [as for example] I will call vpon the name of God, that is to say, I will flee to him for refuge: but the scripture oftentimes takeeth the calling vpon Gods name, for the spreading thereof a-broade, that it may be known in all places. According herunto, Moses saith that he will call vpon the name of the Lord, that is to say, that in this place he will not treat of common things, such as belong to this transitorie life, nor such as concerne the corruptible matters of this world: but that he will mount aboue all the creatures, because hee will haue God to be known, worshipped, and honored of all men, and specially of the people whome hee chose to bee his flocke, whom he marked out to be of his owne household and Church, whom he would haue to honor him as he is worthe. And that doeth hee shewe immediatly in saying, Giue glorie to our God. Heere Moses sheweth to what end and intent he would call vpon God; his meaning was not that he himselfe alone would call vpon God, but to exhort all those whom hee had charge of, to submit themselves to God, and vpon the knowing of him, to ycelde him his due right. Wee see howe God is defrauded by men: they robbe him and bereaue him of his honour. And although we haue an infinite number of other vices in vs, and bee blameworthy innumerable wayes: yet the greatest euill that is in vs, is this trecherie of ours, that to the vttermost of our power, wee darken yea and vterly deface the glory of our God. And yet the verie cause why wee were created, is that we should giue him his owne, and ycelde him the honour that belongeth vnto him. In this respect therefore doeth Moses tell vs that Gods name must be published, that al men may indouour to glorifie him as hee deserueth. And heere we see also to what ende Gods worde is dayly preached vnto vs, and beaten into our eares. It is not to the ende wee shoulde but confesse the things to be true which are vttered, and in the meane while goe away so colde as though wee were no whit moued at the doctrine which wee haue heard: but that wee should be all of vs inflamed to glorifie our God, and not take his worde to an vncertaine vse, (for that were a defiling thereof:) but heere the holy Ghost sheweth vs to what ende God will haue his name known in this worlde; namely that his praise may be giuen vnto him, according as it is saide in the Psalme, Lord, after as thy name is in the worlde, so also be thy praises. See see then howe that when folke resort to Sermons, they ought to dispose themselves to the receiuing of the things which are tolde them concerning God; that knowing him to be such a one as hee is, they may giue themselves wholly to the glorifying of him, and that when we haue heard the doctrine whereby God sheweth himselfe decked with his most excellent vertues, we may be prouoked thereby to consider thus with our selues: I see it is my duetie to inforce my selfe to the glorifying of my God. That then is the thing in effect, which we haue to remember vpon this place, where Moses saith that he will call vpon the name of the Lord.

Afterwarde hee exhorteth those whose Prophet hee was, to ycelde glorie vnto God. And he sheweth therewithall, that God will not be praised and commended at our handes without cause why: but that wee haue matter to inforce vs thereunto, though no man exhorted vs to it. His saying is, The working of the mightie is perfect or whole. By this title which he giueth vnto God, hee meaneth to shewe, that God requireth not that we should knowe but onely his being, so as wee should stand gasing at him without the liuely knowledge of his power. True it is that the worde which Moses vseth doeth signifie properly a Rocke. But the very meaning thereof is, that when wee speake of God, or heare him spoken of; it must not be alonely to feede some fond and idle imaginations, but to make vs vnderstand that his power is present with vs, and that it is spread abroad euery where, so as wee may rest vpon him, and well perceiue that we be gouerned by his hand, and so knutte vnto him, that we liue in him, and that without him we should perish, and the worlde be brought to nought in the twinkling of an eye. Therefore as for them that treat of subtle deuices concerning Gods being, and in the meane while doe not edifie men in the faith and feare of him, ne cause them to vnderstande his power: they be but lightheaded and rousing teachers: they vse not the speech of the holy Ghost. Wherefore let vs mark wel, how Moses hath shewed vs here, not onely y there is a God, but also y wee ought to take hold of his power, as which is spread abroade euery where, filling the whole worlde, insomuch that euen wee our selues are partakers thereof.

Nowe it is saide, that Gods working is perfect or whole. And afterward he addeth, that God is faithfull, there is no fault to bee founde in him, there is no vnrighteousnesse in him, his wayes are straight, hee is iust and soothfast. And wheretoe serue all these things? For it might seeme that all these words were needlesse, because the wickedest folkes that are, will confesse God to be righteous, and that it were too horrible a blasphemie to accuse God of vnrightheadnesse. It should seeme, that in this place Moses treateth not of any great matter, when hee saith that Gods workes are perfect, that hee is righteous, that he is faithfull, and that there is no fault to be founde in him. But if wee looke vpon the vnthankfulness of men, wee shall easily perceiue that Moses doth not without cause in this place maintaine Gods trueth, rightheadnesse and wisdom, and all that hee deserueth to be glorified for. True it is that men will not bee so bolde as to belke our their blasphemies with full mouth, to accuse God: but yet they will goe about indirectly to deface the commendation of his goodnesse, power, and wisdom, and of all that euer is in him. First of all wee see howe men content themselves with Gods doings. They can welly enough say that his workes are perfect and faultlesse; but in the mean while, which are those workes? We must come to the ordering of the whole world. The holy scripture telleth vs that there is not that thing done here below, which is not disposed by the ordinance & hand of God. Nowe wee see a great number of strange things, in so much as wee be ashamed to see howe things fall out cleane contrarie to our expectation and desire, as we thinke. When wee thinke to take our ease, beholde, a storme cometh. When wee thinke to feede our selues fatte; beholde, God cutteth our pitance short. When we thinke to lue in peace and rest; beholde, by and by there cometh some warre or strife. To be short, both priuately and generally we be tossed vp and downe among a number of whirlwinds. Yet for al this, we must glorifie god, assuring our selues that his affliction, his exercising, his humbling, his remouing, and his tossing of vs to & fro after that fashion, is not without cause. Men therefore must suffer themselves to be gouerned after that manner by the hande of God, and they must glorie his prouidence, although they haue not their owne desires and likings, but what shall wee doe? Doe wee neuer finde fault with any of Gods doings? Whence come so many murmurings? Whence come so manie cries and lamentations, but of this, that men cannot finde in their hearts to frame themselves to Gods will? What meaneth this? Howe goes the world with vs? Men torment themselves. True it is that if we aske them, How now? Will ye goe to law with God? Thinke yee to get the vpper hande of him? They will say it is no part of their thought. But yet must wee needs grant, that Gods will is to trie vs after that fashion, by the disorder of things in this world, or else we must needs denie both his iustice, and his vprightnesse, and vtterly bereaue him of all power, and make him an ydol, as all these rascals do which denie Gods prouidence: For they will needs shur him vp in heauen, as though he had no regarde of the world, ne ordered not all the things that are here beneath. Nowe when men do to make an ydole of God, it is a double blaspheming of him, And although we attribute vnto him the gouernment and dominion of the world; yet must wee not looke to see a reason of all his doings, or to finde the cause why they should be righthead; and yet must we with all lowlines confesse them to be faultlesse. And so when we haue once learned this lesson y Gods workes are perfect, we shal haue profited greatly, not onely for one day, but also for all our life long.

But some fantastical persons misundersanding this text, haue troubled themselves greatly, without reason. For they fall to scanning; with howe can Moses say that Gods workes are perfect, considering the great number of defaultes which are to be seene in this worlde? For one is blinke eyed, another is lame, the thirde is croopleshouldred, another hath but one hand and another wants a legge. Also we see trees wherein there is much amisse; and to be short, we see diuerse creatures which want their perfection in many things. And how is it then said, that Gods workes are perfect? Such reasoning is too beastly. For the meaning of Moses is no more but this, that we must glorifie God in all his doings, confessing that all things are ordered by good reason, and by wonderfull rightheadnesse and wisdom; and that when we haue searched them thoroughly, wee shall finde that men shal be confounded euen in the things which they would needs incounter & set themselves against. To be short we must apply hercunto the doctrine of S. Paul (which he alleadgeth to another purpose, but yet it wil serue wel to this text) namely that Gods foolishnesse is wiser than all the wisdom of the world. S. Paul speaketh there indeede of the Gospel; but yet is that saying verie true in generall. For when things goe out of order and cleane arsuerte, and we perceiue not wherefore God dealeth after that fashion, but (to our seeming) hee dealeth vnadvisedly: we must vnderstand that in the things which to vs seeme folly, that is to say, when Gods wisdom appeareth not, there is wisdom ynough to confounde vs, and therefore wee must not urne againe with presumption and ouerweening, to replic; This seemes not good to me; but we must stoope, and imbrace Gods doings quietly. And herein we see y rage of these rascals, which babble nowadayes against all things that exceede their capacite. If a man speake of Gods eternall election, & say he hath chosn whom he thought good through his owne free bestowed goodnes, and also that he reiecteth whom hee listeth; and moreover, that he disposeth al things that are done in y worlde, and holdeth the reines of the bridle secretly, (so as although men ouerthoote themselves in their naughtinesse, and that the diuell also doe strein himself to make a hotchpote of all things as it were in spite of God: yet notwithstanding God ouerruleth al, causing euen the diuell himselfe in despite of his teeth, to execute the things that he hath decreed; and that men (hee they neuer so stubborn against him,) cannot but do that which he hath determined.) These rascals glorying in themselves do say; O, I conceiue not that, And thou beast, what art thou? If all the greatest doctors of y world shold lay their heads together, they coule not attaine to the vnderstanding thereof. And I make no reckening of some hypocrits which disguise themselves, and counterfeit themselves to be doctors in despite of nature; but if y Angels of heauen shold come, yet shold they be faine to reuerence the wonderful secrets of God, Wee see howe the Cherubins are described vnto vs in Elay, namely how they stretch out their winges to hide their faces, because they be not able to comprehend the infinite maiestie of God. And yet for al that, vnder pretence that our braine conceiuet not the full measure of the things which the scripture telleth vs concerning God; wee reiect it. Thus we see yet better, how it is not for nought that Moses saide that the workes of the mightie are perfect, but [that it serueth] to make vs to tremble before the maiestie of God, and by acknowledging that he is almightie, to refraine frō incountering him by saying, Why doth he so? Or why willet he this or that? Nay let vs simply confesse that his workes are perfect, namely in wisdome, in righteounes, and in goodnes, so as there is no fault to be founde in any of al his workes.

Now hee addeth, that all his wayes are righteousnesse, that God is true, without wickednesse, in iust, and vpright. Whereas he saith that all his wayes are righteounes, it is a more large expounding of that which he had said afore. For by a similitude this worde Way, is taken for all manner of doings. And heerein Moses sheweth vs, that it is not ynough to haue glorified God in some part or portion, but that wee must confesse without exception, that hee is the welspring of all wisdome, of all power, of all goodnesse, and of all iustice. We shall see some which will be contented to glorifie God, so long as things fall out to their liking; but if God deale with them to their mistaking, they alter their speech, and spit out their venom against him. See howe men would part stakes with God, reseruing to themselves the libertie (or rather the diuelish malapertnesse) to freate and fume at God when hee dooth not as they would wish, and as seemeth good to their opinion. For this cause Moses saith, that all Gods wayes are righteounes, that is to say, that although God as now remove things est at one side and est a tother, and wee see great backturnings and chaunges, and he seemeth to be minded to turn y worlde vpsidowne; yet notwithstanding he for his part knoweth why he doeth so. True it is that we shalbe abashed at it, and the rudenesse and frailty of our vnderstanding suffereth vs not to conceiue Gods wonderfull counsailes: they bee too deepe a gulfe for vs; but yet doth God alwayes keepe a meaurable and euen hande in all his doings. Then is it not any one or two deedes wherein GOD sheweth his righteounesse, but in the whole gouernement of the worlde. Lo to what point we must come.

Moreover Moses doth expressly call him true. And that is to bee referred to the doctrine, to the ende that men shold learne to receiue that which is saide and set downe vnto them in the name of God. And indeede, vntill such time as we knowe God to bee true, we can neuer tast of his righteounesse nor of his goodnesse: or if we haue any tast thereof, yet can we not be sure and fully reioled of it. For prooff hereof, we neuer vnderstande Gods iustice, wisdome, goodnesse, or any other of his vertues, but by his worde. True it is that wee haue experience of them: and God sheweth himselfe sufficiently both aboue and beneath, that hee might bee glorified at our handes, at leastwise if we had eyes and cares to see and heare. But what? Such is our slothfulnesse, that we wote not howe to benefite our selues by the great number of the recordes wherein God maketh his glorie to shine forth. His worde therefore must goe ioynly with it: for if wee bee not taught at his mouth, wee shall neuer attaine vnto him, no nor come any thing neere him. But if wee doubt of Gods worde, and haue but an opinion of it, as who would say the things that are contained in it haue some reason, but yet wee doe but coniecture so: what a thing were it? What certaintie shoulde wee haue of God or of any of all his vertues, for the which hee is to bee glorified? Wee shall bee alwayes in a mammering. And so wee see of what importance this saying is, where Moses termeth God True. For hee would haue vs to learne to yeelde such authoritie to his worde, as it may benefite vs, and that as soone as wee heare God speake, wee shoulde be fully resoled and persuaded, that wee shall not bee disappointed in following all that hee saith to vs, and in beleeuing the same. By this meane then wee may consider all Gods workes, so as wee shall haue a lampe to guide vs and to giue vs light, that wee may not runne reeling in continuall doubtfulnesse. But forasmuch as Gods worde is the infallible truth to vs, wee shall haue a stayed iudgement concerning the things that are saide vnto vs, and wee shall trust in God, not as the heathenish sort doe, who bee shaken from it out of hande, because there is no steadinesse of faith in them: but wee shall haue a good staffe to stande by, so as Gods trueth shall fence vs against all distrust, against all grudging and against all things that may turne vs from the glorifying of him. And therewithall wee shall also haue a good foundation of our saluation, when wee once knowe that God is True. For if wee embrace not the things that God doeth, what will become of vs? There is nothing but damnation in men, and the more they trust in themselves, the more must they needes bee confounded. Then can wee not conceiue any hope of saluation, vnlesse wee bee well assured that God soadeth vs not with wordes without effect: but that wee knowe him to bee faithfull and trustie, so as if wee haue but a worde of his mouth, it is as good as if our saluation were already shewed.

And therupon hee saith further, that there is no wickednesse in him, [but] that hee is iust and faithfull. It shold seeme y Moses speaketh too coldly coldly of God in this place, in saying, There is no wickednesse in him. For who doubts of that? Nay, it is to cut off all the wicked imaginations that men deuise, when they be not helde in awe so as they may yeelde to conclude that God is faithfull, good, and iust, yea and voide of vnfaithfulness. And who accuseth him thereof? But yet wee see howe that euen the holy Prophets were driuen to resist those temptations. Ier. 12. 1. Abac. 1. 13. Lorde I knowe that thou art iust, saith Ieremie, 10 As much doeth Abacucke, and they crie out so of purpose to shewe that they bee troubled with many incurrances, when they see things so out of order in the worlde. There then wee see howe they had easly bene caried away to blasphemie God, and to deeme sonie vnrighte-ousnesse to bee in him, if they had not bene re- strained. And so wee see; that it is not without cause, that Moses saeth heere: that God is true & without wickednesse. There is nothing in him (saith hee) but the same is praise worthe; insomuch that when wee speake of his truth and righteousnesse, we must exclude all wisdom & power of man. And to be short, he must be praised without exception and not after the com- mon manner of men. And that is the cause that when Gods word is spoken of in the Psalme, it is saide to be like sluer tried seuentimes in the fire after it hath bene molten and all the drosse of it taken quite and cleane from it. At the first 30 sight this similitude may seeme to vs to bee but colde. But let vs looke a little vpon our selues, and we shall finde that our wits doe tickle vs incessantly; inso much that when we haue confes- sed God (yea euen without dissimulation) to be true: yet when wee come to his promises, cuer-

more we will haue some reply, and we will neuer be contented in our minds, nor well at rest. For we haue a leawdnes which holderh vs back, and hindereth vs that wee cannot glorifie God as be- commeth vs. So then let vs marke, that Moses doth not heere without cause exclude all iniqui- tie: to the ende that when we speake of God and of any of all his vertues, wee shoulde doe it with such reuerence and admiration, as wee may not onely not accuse him of any vnfaithfulness, and confesse that wee perceiue not any vice in him; but also be thoroughly perswaded and resolued, that there is such perfection in him, as that there remaineth no more for vs to doe, but onely to worship him, yea euen though we conceiue not the highnesse that is hidden from vs.

Nowe let vs cast our selues downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to take from vs all hardnesse and stubbornnes, and to frame vs to the obeying of him, that the preaching of his worde vnto vs may not bee in vaine, but that it may profite vs, so as wee may become good ground, and serue in such wise to the glorie of our God, as that the labour and paine which he shall haue bestowed vpon vs, may not be in vaine, but that all may redounde to the full establishing of his kingdom. And moreouer that seeing it plea- seth him that our saluation should be matched with his glorie, he will also so further the same, as wee may bee encouraged by that meanes to giue our selues more and more vnto him. That it may please him to grant this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth &c.

5 They haue corrupted themselues before him by their sinne: euen they that are not his children, but a froward and wicked generation.

6 Doeſt thou reward the Lorde so, O thou foolish and vnwise generation? Is not he thy father, and thine owner, is it not hee that hath made thee and fashioned thee?

7 Remember the time past, consider the yeares of so many generations. Aske thy father, and hee will shewe thee: inquire of thine elders, and they will tell thee.

Yesterday wee sawe why Moses speaketh here expressly of Gods truth. For men had neede to be assured of Gods promises, that they may holde themselues to them and rest vpon them: and also to knowe that his worde is the rule of all perfection, that they may receiue it with all reuerence. And it is saide expressly, that there is no vnrighteousnesse in him, to the ende that men should learne, not to measure him by their owne scantling as they be wont to doe. For in asmuch as we comprehend not Gods iustice, wee drawe it downe to ours, by meanes whereof wee abace his maiesty too much. Therefore if we will yeelde God his due honor, we must separate him frō all his creatures: wee must not imagine aught of him after our owne fancie, nor compare him to mortal men: for in so doing wee shall diminish his glory too much. But now Moses addeth, that the children of Israel had corrupted themselves towards him. Nowe if we ioyne these two sayings together, to wit, That God is true, iust, and vpright, so as his workes are perfect, and also that the people of Israel were marde out of hande: thereby wee shall the better see howe detestable that people was for their vnthankfulness. For Gods trueth and righteousnesse shine forth the brighter, in that they could not holde themselves to him. Beholde, God chose the children of Abraham. But let vs see what he was. To be short, had the children of Israel sticked to him, and continued in the vnion which hee hadde appointed and called them vnto, it had bene to their highest welfare, yea and their whole happinesse and glorie. But they turned from God and fell away from him; and therefore must it not needs be that they were mad, and caryed away with a diuells rage, accordingly as he saith in Ieremy, They haue forsakē me, euen me who am the fountaine of liuing water? Nowe then wee see better the meaning of Moses, for hee shewed hertofores the goodnesse, iustice, and righteousnesse of God, to the ende that the people shoulde haue the lesse excuse, and their sin be knowne to be the more heynous, in that they coule not abide that God shoulde holde them still for his inheritance. But (as I haue said already) if we be separated from God, we bee as it were in the bottome of the dungeon of all mischiefes; whereas if we be knit vnto him, wee can want nothing. Seeing then that the case standeth so with men when they cut themselves off, yea & banish themselves out of Gods kingdome after he hath gathered them to him, and shewed himselfe willing to take them to be of his household: worthily bee they to be condemned for folk void of wit and reason, and their vnthankfulness is too too detestable.

And that is the cause why Moses speaketh so roughly, saying: They haue marred themselves towards him: yea but they were such as be no more his children. It is certaine that God had chosen Abrahams linage, with condition to bee father to them all. And therefore hee saith by his Prophet Ezechiel, that the children which came of them, were begotten vnto him. True it is that all men in generall are called Gods children: but yet that title belongeth alone by priuiledge to those that be of his church. Let vs marke well then, that in respect of adoption, the children of Israel ought to haue bene held and aouwed for the children of God. But it is faide here, that they were not so: for they were growen out of kinde, accordingly also as God complaineth by his Prophet that their fathers dealt vnfaithfully with him, for they had begotten strange children, y is to say, they had so corrupted themselves, y there was no more soundnesse in them, neither belonged they at all to the house of Abraham, but had so wrapped themselves in the wickednesse of their forefathers, that God sawe nor any thing in them belonging vnto him. Nowe then wee see, to what purpose Moses saide that they had marred themselves, meaning those that are not Gods children, whom he blameth for their depriuing and disappointing of themselves through their own malice, of the inestimable benefite and honour which God had bestowed vpon them. For what a thing is it that wee may bee so bolde as to call vpon God, as our Father, and resort vnto him familiarly, and to be receiued as his children? And euen so was it with the lynage of Abraham: but they continued not in the possession thereof. Who was to be blamed for that? It was because they yeelded not to God the honor due to their father, as he himselfe complaineth by his Prophet Malachie, saying: If I be your father, where is the honour which yee owe vnto me? But all their seeking was to hold themselves aloofe from God. Ye see then how they renouced that manner of kinred, which God had set among them; and therefore it is not without cause that Moses vpbraideth them, that they were become strangers. True it is that they vaunt themselves to be Gods children: but by what right? Only by stablishing y fleshy kinred. And we see also how the Prophet Ezechiel saith vnto them, What? Are you of the linage of Israel? Hence yee harlots birds. Was not your father a Chananite, and your mother a Iebusite? Nowe it is certaine that as touching the fleshe, they came not of y people of Chanaan, nor yet of the Iebusites: but the Prophet doeth then to vnderstande, that they had no more to doe with the holy linage, but had cut themselves off from it as rotten members.

Nowe let vs nowadayes bee well aduised, and seeing that God hauing called vs to him, hath giuen vs the marke of his free bestowed adoption, that is to say baptisme, whereby he doth vs to wit that wee bee reckened for members of Iesus Christ, and be as it were grafted into his bodie: let vs bee well aduised I say, that wee boast not thereof in vaine. For if wee despise God in liuing vndiscretely, and falsifie the faith that we haue plighted vnto him: let vs not thinke that he is so bounde vnto vs, but that hee may forsake vs, and that for al our boasting of our felues to be his children, he will tell vs plainly (as we heare in this place,) that wee belong not vnto him at all, but that wee bee vtter strangers vnto him. For (as saith Sainct Paul) all that come of Abrahams linage are not accounted his seede, that is to say, they be not spiritual children. To be short, will we haue God to aouwe vs for his children? Let vs beware that wee walke in his feare and loue. At a worde, let vs take him for our father, and shewe it by our deedes: and then shall wee be acknowledged to bee his children. But if hee see vs growe out of kinde, hee must needs tell vs that seeing wee haue not kept our faith and troath towards him, hee will haue no company with vs. For what a bondage were it, if God shoulde take vs for his children, and in the meane while be scorned & misused among vs, so as his grace shoulde bee touden vnder foote, and his holy name defiled? Should God then mingle himselfe with our filth and vncleanesse, when wee be so full of vnbelefe? No: For then should hee renounce his owne nature, which is vnpossible.

Now it is sayd here, They marred themselues towards him. The worde that Moses vseth, betokeneth to destroy, corrupt, or marre. And some expounde it, that the children of Israel did not any harme vnto God in their turning away vnto wickednesse: as in very deede hee should receiue no harme at all, though wee were all become straungers vnto him. Can wee aduantage him any white? What benefit shall hee receiue at our handes? When men turne away from God, hee is neither hindered nor furthered thereby; for hee continueth euermore at one stay, without increasing or diminishing. This then was a reproofe which Moses gaue to the whole people, as if he should say, Go to, you haue followed your owne lustes, you haue made no reckoning of your God, and what will be the ende of it? In deede hee will forsake you, but his doing is not for any harme that hee shall haue receiued by it: What passeth hee for that? Shall not all turne to your owne confusion? This lesson deserueth to bee wel marked: For it is good to humble men, by making them to vnderstand that God may euer forbear them well enough, and that his seeking of them is for their benefite and welfare, without regarde of himselfe. But wee may take this saying of Moses more playnely, that they had marred themselues towards him, because their true soundnes had bin to haue liued in obedience towards the Lawe. That is the meane wherby men may abide in their state, I meane them whom God hath called to him. And I speake not of the corrupted state as it is in Adam, and as wee bring it from our mothers wombe: but of our state when God hath repayed vs after his owne image. That is the meane for vs to persist, namely by holding our selues to the purenesse of his worde, without swatung to the right hand or to the left. But if we leaue the doctrine of God, by and by we be corrupted and marred. Therefore when men turne away from the pure and playne worde of God; it is an infecting and corrupting of themselues, such as alwayes leadeth them to death.

And hee expressly addeth: in their spottes. This saying importeth a reproch lyke wise; insomuch as it might bee sayd, that they had cast themselues wilfully into leawdnesse, of purpose to shame themselues. Now wee knowe how it is sayd in Exodus, that God was (as yee would say) the honor of his people. For when wee be vnder the protection of our God, there is as a royall Crowne vpon our head: and it is a greater honor, than if wee had all the dignities in the worlde. And for the same cause also dooth Moses say, that this people became shamelesse in giuing themselues to idolatrie and superstition, and discouered their owne filthynesse as a man that sheweth his owne shame. So then, it may well bee taken that the people ouerthrew themselues in their vncleanesse, because they did cast themselues into reproche and infamie, by forsaking their God, yea euen that God of theirs whome onely they were bound to glory. But by the way by this worde Spottes or vncleanes, Moses meant all the wicked lustes which caused the people to ouerhoote themselues. As if he should say, Beholde, your God had shewed you the fashon and mean to make your selues cleane, that you might haue bin a holy people. For the Lawe serued to haue withdrawn you from all the defilementes of the world; so as by keeping of that rule, yee should haue continued vnder his obedience. And what haue yee done now? Yee haue vnhalloved the Law of God, yea euen lyke as a Swine should wallowe himselfe in the myre and dyrr. The thing then which you haue gayed by forsaking your God, is that your lustes haue so caryed you away, y you haue gone and plunged your selues in doung, yea euen with the vtter renouncing of the honor which God had bestowed vpon you.

Hee addeth That they were a frowarde and cursed generation. And it serueth to expresse yet better, that although God had presented them with his grace, & giuen them occasion to continue still with him: yet they coulde not haue that steadfastnesse. And what should a man say, seeing them so vnconstant, but that they were a frowarde generation? For if other men to whome God shewed not the lyke grace, were to be condemned iustly, if they should haue dealt so wickedly: are not those dubble gultie which being adopted by God, and being ayded and succoured so many wayes by him, had neuertheless so farre ouershot themselues, as to forsake him and disclaime him vterly? And therefore let vs marke that Moses beholding the ouergreat vnthankfulnesse of that people, did so aggrauate their offence in respect thereof, that hee vterly disgradeth them in this place. Nowe must we apply this to ourselues. For according as God hath vtered the treasures of his goodnesse towards vs, so much the more be wee bound and beholden vnto him. And if we falsify our faith, cursed are we: for our enormitie is the more accursed, and our iniquitie is the greuouser both before the Angels, and before all mortal creatures. And therefore let vs so wilke in the feare of our Lorde, sith it hath pleased him to take vs for his inheritance, that wee take not vpon vs that title in vaine, least wee become lyke vnto them which are false away from him.

Heere vpon Moses maketh an other complaint more sharpe and bitter. Thou foolish people, (sayth he) wilt thou needes requite the Lorde so? Here Moses toucheth the vnthankfulness of the people as it were with his finger, vnder the word Requite. For he falleth to vporaiding them with the benefites which God had bestowed vpon the children of Abraham. But as God is no nigard, so dooth hee neuer cast vs in the teeth with the benefites which we haue receiued at his hand, vnlesse hee be enforced thereto by our abusing of them, for that hee seeth them vnhalloved and defiled by our leawdnesse, accordingly also as Saint Iames speaketh thereof, saying that God giueth all things bountifullly, and that he is of such liberalitie, that he neuer ceaseth to giue, yea euen without vpbraiding. Hee is not lyke mortall men which haue a certaine repining in their giuing, or which grudge when a man cometh to them the second time, saying, What? Ought not that which I haue done for you already to suffice you? God (saith hee) is none such. For the more that wee be bound vnto him, the more is he willing to increace his gracious giftes daily. Yea, but when hee seeth them misbetroved, & that we turne them cleane contrarie to his intent & purpose: then holdeth he his hand, the restraineth he the good that he had done vnto vs, then blameth he vs, and putteth vs in minde of them to make vs ashamed. And therefore let vs looke well vpon this text [where it is said,] Thou foolish & wiselesse people, dost thou requite thy God thus? Accordingly also as hee sayth by his Prophet Ieremie, My people what haue I done to you, saith hee? If thou hast any thing to say against me, alledge it, and thou shalt 20 finde that I haue not failed at any time, to giue thee cause to followe me and to cleaue vnto me. For I haue powred all good things vpon thee, and yet notwithstanding thou hast bin so beastly as to forsake me. Let vs mark I say that here Moses speaketh not of Gods common giftes, which hee bestoweth vpon all men indifferently: but of the speciall giftes, which the people of Israell had receiued aboue all other nations. If GOD list to vpbraid all mankind 30 in generall, he may wel doe it if he say no more but, Who is he that created and shaped you? Who is he that hath giuen you wit and reason? Who is hee that maketh the Sunne to shine vpon you, and the earth to yeelde you fruit? God therefore hath largely wherewith to vpbraide all men for the good which he hath done them, to shewe that they be too roo blame worthy, if they doe not honor and serue him. For euen the very knowledge and light which God giueth vnto vs, dooth vs to vnderstand, that we 40 liue at his cost, that wee be guided by his power, and that it is hee which dooth both clothe and feede vs: to the intent that his loe dooing should make vs to put our trust in him, and to commit the whole state of our lyfe vnto him, thereby to shewe that hee is our soueraine, and that wee vnder his government; and therefore that wee be to be condemned whē we rebel against him. So then, God might well vpbraid all men in common: but here hee speaketh to those whome he had adopted. And y is the cause why he treateth peculiarly of the benefites which he had done to them as to his Church and peculiar children.

But before wee come to that point, let vs marke how Moses in this place dooth iustly call them foolish and wiselesse people. True it is that all men may well be condemned of folly lykewise, when they serue not God. For if wee haue any vnderstanding, ought wee not of right to imply it to the knowing of him who hath created and formed vs? Can men boast themselves to bee wise, if they knowe not who hath set them in the worlde, or who mainteinet and preferueth them? If on the other side they haue any reason, is it not a raging madnesse, when they knowe not the principall point of their whole lyfe? Now forasmuch as God came neere to the people of Israell, it must needs bee that they were bewiched, seeing they were not touched with so many and so euident recordes of Gods goodnesse: I say it was more than beastly blockishnesse. For as for the heathen and infidels, in deede they be vnexcusable in that they knew not God, who sheweth himselfe to them in the whole creation of the world. But as for the

Iewes, who had the Lawe, and had seene so many miracles, and finally had bin conuersant with the Lorde, who came downe to them, (I speake after the manner of the holy scripture, for wee know that God shifeth not from place to place, but is infinite and filleth all places,) and applyed himselfe to their rudenesse, in somuch as he verified the thing which he so often protesteth, namely, I will dwell among you and abide with 20 you: [they were much more, vnexcusable.] And therefore, when notwithstanding all this, they turned away from him and forgot him, yea and spited him as though they had conspired together to prouoke his vengeance by doing against him all the outrages that they coule: must it not needes bee an horrible ignorance, yea and a very brutishnesse, vtterly voyd of all witte and reason? Wherefore let vs marke, that our true 30 wisedome is to honor God. And in that respect it is sayd, The foolish man dwelleth in his owne heart, and hath no lyfe in him. True it is that the heathen folke thought themselves fine witted and of abilitie, when they despised God and thought to beguile him by their subtleties, as wee see these courtiers & all the braue 40 laddes of the worlde doe nowadays, and as wee see these finheaded fellows doe, which skoffe at all religion. To their owne seeming they bee men of great wisedome, at leastwise when they haue digged so deepe, that (in their owne opinion) God cannot spy them out. Yet notwithstanding, we may wel call them fooles, and not without cause dooth the holy Ghost reime them so. For why? Our very wisedome 50 and the chiefe point thereof, is to feare GOD, saith the holy scripture. And in deede, euen nature ought to teach vs that. For what is a man, when hee knowes not whether hee was shaped by haphazard, whether there bee a God that created him, or if he be as a blinde wretch, not knowing who is his God, that hee may worship him and make an oblation and sacrifice of his lyfe vnto him? Must it not needes bee that a man is worse than all the brute beastes in the worlde, when hee is become so brutishe, or rather false into such blockishnesse? Yes verily. Then let vs beare in minde the wordes that 60 Moses vseth here, and let vs wey them as they be worthy, that wee may apply our indeuour to the seruing of our God, knowing that the hauing of that poynt is our true wisedome, and that all other things are but appendantes, and that by and by wee runne astray as soone as wee haue left the pure doctrine: In somuch that although the whole worlde commend vs, and clap their handes at vs, and wee seeme to bee excellent in all respectes: yet in very deede wee be wise, and it were better for vs a thousand times to be frantike, yea and starke mad, than to haue wit and reason (to all lykelihood) after that sort, and to be without any knowledge of our God.
ccl

But now let vs come to the contentes of the accusation and proces that Moses maketh here. Is not he thy father (saith he) which possesseth thee? Hath not hee made thee? Is it not he that hath shaped thee? Whereas he calleth God the father of the children of Abraham; I haue tolde you already that his calling of the so, is but in respect of adoption, because they had bin chosen to be Gods flocke & his Church. True it is that forasmuch as we beare the image of God, wee see his children euen by nature. But forasmuch as wee be confounded in Adam, and Gods image was defaced in vs: we deserue not that title, wee be vnto the benefit thereof. Therefore we must be faine to begin againe at this point, namely at his calling of vs back againe vnto him, so that although we were cut off from his household, yet hee reacheth vs to be of his household againe. This did hee to the linage of Abraham. For of his own free goodnes he made him this promise, I will be thy God and the God of thy seede after thee. Thus ye see by what title the Iewes might claime God for their father. It was not for that they were better worthy of it than other men, it was not for that they had attained such nobilitie by their deserts, or for that they had purchased it by their owne policie, or for that they had gotten it by any other way or mean [of their own:] but for y<sup>e</sup> God had called them to it, as we haue seene heretofore. And so much the lesse excuse had they, wh<sup>er</sup> they turned away from him, and lited vp their hornes against him. For it is an inestimable benefite for vs to haue God to our father. Because that therein we be made fellows with the Angels, who are lykewise called the childrē of God, in respect that they be members of our Lord Iesus Christ. Seeing that God hath called vs to the fellowship of the Angels, to be their brethren & companions; what a leawdnesse were it to make our selues vnderlinges to the diuels, & to submit our selues vnto their bondes and tyranny: What a dealing were it that I being made a companio<sup>n</sup> to the Angels of heauen, I should take the diuel for my Lord & king? What a choyce were that? Were I not worse than mad? So then, let vs mark well, that when as Moses dooth here call God the father of the Istaeltres, it is to inhaunce their vnthankfulnesse the more, and to shewe their leawdnesse the pl<sup>u</sup>nyler. [As if he should say,] Consider your former state. For God had aduanced you wonderfully high, and you haue wilfully cast your selues downe to the bottom of hell. After which manner he vpbraideth the king of Babilon, that he had bin as the morning starre: and now behold (saith he) thou art in the bottom of hell. True it is also that God calleth kinges his children, & lykewise all Princes and Magistrats. But if we compare them with the childrē of the Church, and with the flocke of our Lorde Iesus Christ: surely Gods calling of vs to the knowing of him, and his marking of vs out to aly himselfe vnto vs, dooth farre surmount all the kingdoms and Empyres of the world. And therefore it is certaine that when men turne away from their alliance with God; it is all one as if they forsooke heauen to goe to the bottome of hell. For (as I haue sayd afore) they cannot away with the company of the Angels, but will needes goe to submit themselues in bondage to the diuels.

And according hereunto Moses addeth, that God had possessed that people, as he termeth them his heritage. Whereby he doth vs to vnderstand (as he will declare afterward) that God meane to haue held that people as his owne household; suffering the rest of the world to wander away & to become straungers vnto him, whereas his will was to haue the people of Irael as people familiar and well acquainted with himselfe. According whereunto he addeth, It is he that hath created thee, it is he that hath shaped thee. And this creation is not the same that belongeth to all men and to all the childrē of Adam: but it is the same that is spoken of in the hundreth Psalm. It is he that made vs, and not we our selues. And it is a very common speech in the holy scripture, to say that God hath created and fashioned his Church. This is a people whom I my selfe haue created, and they shall set forth my prayfe saith he, in the three and fourth of Elsay. But it were needlesse to alledge many places, for all the scripture is full of them. And it is a notable point of doctrine, that God declareth vs to be new creatures, at such time as he chooseth vs to himselfe. True it is that wee be greatly bound vnto him, for vouchsafing to set vs in this world. For although he had made vs burbrute beastes, yet were it a great thing that we might be counted the worke of his handes. But it was not his will that wee should be Asses or Horses: it was his will that wee should be reasonable creatures. This is so high a preheminance, that wee cannot commend it sufficiently. Yet is that nothing, in comparison of his calling of vs to the faith. In somuch that when hee telleth vs that hee will take vs to be of his Church, hee dooth after a sorte forget his former creating and sayth: that he giueth vs a farre other thing than to haue bin mortal men, which is nothing in comparison to be of his Church. And this serueth to humble vs, to the intent we should not thinke our selues to be come to the faith by our owne power, but acknowledge the same to be the gift of God, least we shold vsurpe the title of the creator, by imagining our selues to haue gotten faith by our owne abilitie, as the Papistes doe, who say that although they cannot doe any thing bur through the grace of God, yet doe they prepare and dispose themselues thereto aforehand. Againe, they haue a kinde of concurrence, or running together, where-through they be as companions with GOD, so as they worke together with his grace, or else doe so aunswere thereunto, that Gods grace dooth nothing but by halues. Loe at what poynt the Papistes are: and by that reason they should be halfe their owne creators. For I haue declared already, (and the very truth is so), that it is a farrre greater thing for vs to be counted of the Church, than of the common kinde of men: for it is a farrre nobler creation to bee the children of God, than to be the children of Adam. Yet notwithstanding, the Papistes doe challenge the one halfe thereof to themselues, saying that they dispose themselues to it by their owne free-will, and that they deserue grace at Gods hand, and also that they worke together therewithall. By which reason, the one halfe of this creation, which is the excellentest, shall belong to men. And what a treacherie were that? Therefore when wee heare that it is God that made vs, and not wee our selues; let vs not make account of our selues nor be puffed vp with the winde of presumption, which serueth to no purpose but to make vs to swell. Let vs vnderstand then that we haue nothing of our owne, but that all is Gods, in that it hath pleased him to call vs to his word, it is not we. A man might thinke it straunge why it should be sayd, it is not wee that haue created our selues: for there is none of vs al but he knoweth it and confelleth it. But if we haue an eye to the fond and diuulsi ouerweening wherewith men are besotted: we shall see that this kinde of speech is not superfluous, but that the holy ghost meant to exclude all such foolish imaginations, to the intent that men should not referue aught to themselues, but yeeld fully vnto God, that which is belouing vnto him. And that is the cause also why S. Paul saith in the second Chapter to the Ephesians; We be his workmanship, for he hath created vs to good workes, namely which he hath prepared for vs before wee were borne. If men thinke themselves to be y founders of their owne good workes, yea or euen of their good thoughtes, they deceiue themselues sore. God had prepared all those things aforesaid in his treasures saith S. Paul, and now hee hath put them into vs. And why? For we be his workmanship, it hath pleased him to fashion vs to another vse. Thus yee see how men are beaten downe, and how God sheweth that hee himselfe alone is to haue the honor of the disposing and preparing of them. And so in this text wheras it is sayd, It is hee that hath created thee and fashioned thee: it is because it is a more excellent gift, that is to wit, that God printeth his marke vpon vs, as who shoulde say that wee shoulde bee reckoned for his children, so as hee gathereth vs vnto him, and maketh vs in effect new creatures; by reason whereof sinne becometh the more heynous, if wee deface the same againe, and fall to wallowing of our selues againe in the filth and vncleanesse of this worlde, as who would say it greued vs that God had not made vs brute beastes at such time as heooke vs to be his children. And therefore we haue to marke, what the words import which Moses vseth here: For his meaning is to shewe, that this people was the leawdest and most detestible that could be imagined, because they had forgotten such gracious benefices as could not be sufficiently commended. And looke what is sayd of the Iewes, agreeth fitly vs lykewise, namely that we must not forget Gods graces. We in these dayes haue receiued no lesse than the fathers that were vnder the Lawe. For wee haue the very pledge it selfe, which the Iewes had not: that is to wit, our Lorde Iesus Christ. He is the onely sonne of God, and is come down to vs from the bosome of the father. Hee hath yeelded vs record of our adoption: the gate of paradise is now opened vnto vs: wee may now not onely call vpon God as our father, but also call vnto him with full mouth, so as wee may cry Abba father, for that is the word which Saint Paul vseth expressly. Seeing then that God hath discouered himselfe more fully to vs than to the fathers that liued vnder the Lawe: Surely our fault will be the more grieuous and lesse excusable, if we yeelde so poore a recompence as is spoken of here. Againe, hath he not purchased vs to himselfe? If he possessed the people of olde time because he brought them out of the land of Egypt: let vs see how much more he hath done now for vs than for them. True it is that Gods redeeming of the Iewes was by the power of the death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ: but that thing was not yet declared vnto them, they had but the figures and shadowes thereof. But as now wee see that the blood of our Lorde Iesus Christ hath bin shed for our redemption, and for the purchase of our saluation. And shall we now go trample vnder our feet the holy blood, whereby the couenant of the spirituall kinred which God hath entered into with vs, is ratified and confirmed: And as touching the Law, how doth the Apostle speake of it in the Epistle to the Hebrewes? As many (saith he) as violated the tabernacle that was made by Moses, were not spared, their fault was vnardonable: and what shall become of vs nowadayes? Is not our leawdnesse much more shamefull? Therefore let vs beare now in minde that we be Gods precious possession, to the intent we giue not our selues ouer to Satan. Moreouer let vs vnderstand, after what manner he hath created and fashioned vs, and let vs not refuse that grace: but sith he hath vout-safed to reforme vs, let vs not steine our selues with reproche, by going about to deface the image & workmanship which he hath put into vs. Howbeit forasmuch as men doe by al meanes possible pleade ignorance, to the intent they might not come to account before God, nor be convicted or touched for their euill doings: Moses addeth; Aske of thy fathers, and they will teach thee what thou hast bin: Inquire of all thine Elders, and call to minde the time that is past. Here Moses meant to spurre forward the stoutheadnesse of the Iewes, because they did wilfully buye the grace of God, and rooke pleasure in the not minding of them. Now although he spake this to the Iewes: yet notwithstanding, forasmuch as the lame vice is common & ordinarie through the whole world, and that we be too much attempted therewith: it stādeth vs in hand to thinke, that the holy ghost directeth the lyke accusation to vs nowadayes. For after what sorte doe we call Gods benefices

Hebr. 3. 12.

to our mind? Doe we bethink vs of them euening & morning? Nay there is none of vs all which shutteth not his eyes against them, as much as he can. To be short, nothing grieueth vs worse, nothing troubleth vs more, thā to be bound vnto God. And yet is that the thing wherein all our happineffe consisteth. For it is not with him as with mortall men. If we be ouermuch bound to a creature, we will be as it were ashamed of it. I am so much in such a mans debt say wee, y<sup>e</sup> I wot not how to requite it. But if we consider how liberal God hath bin to vs, it is a meane to confirme vs still the more in faith, & to make vs the bolder to repayre shilvnto him: for he is the fountain that neuer dryeth. Thinke we that God can euer bee diminished in his grace, or in any goodnes? Nay. And yet notwithstanding, our naughtinesse is such, y<sup>e</sup> when God hath bestowed neuer so great graces and benefites vpon vs, inso much that we be as good as ouerwhelmed with thē; al our seeking is to put them out of remembrance: let vs marke wel therefore, that Moses hath not without cause blamed the Iewes, and that we nowadayes haue need to bee blamed the same manner, and to be pricked forward lyke Oxen and Asses.

As concerning the Iewes, he sayd, Bethinke thee of the olde time, call to minde the dayes that are past. As if he should say, How now ye wretches? Must God giue you wit and memorie, and yet you not consider what he hath done heretofore? The wit of an Ox or of an Ass extendeth no further than to the things y<sup>e</sup> are present: but men haue reason to consider of things past and of things to come. For wee haue a certaine foresight of things to come: we make comparison of things past, experience sheweth vs how to dispose things in our selues. Now if we apply not all this to consider how God hath euer governed vs, and how he hath shewed himselfe a father towards vs, shall we not be guilty of peruerting the whole order of nature? So then, not without cause doth Moses say: Bethinke thee of the old time. And afterward he sayth: Thou hast witnessen enowe: Inquire of thy Fathers, inquire of al those that haue liued afore thee, & they wil tel thee newes; they wil shew thee, that at such time as thy God diuided the nations of the world, and made y<sup>e</sup> partitions betweene people & people, hee had a special regard of thee, & shewed playnly y<sup>e</sup> his adopting & choosing of thee was not in vaine. For the mark y<sup>e</sup> he aimed at, was to dedicate thee to his seruice, & to reueme thee for his owne inheritance. Now thē, is it not a peruerting & confounding of y<sup>e</sup> order which he had set down to be intiuolable, when thou turnest so away from him? Yes: for hee had shouled thee out from al y<sup>e</sup> heathē, & chosen thee as it were for his own portion. That is the thing in effect which Moses meant to say vnto y<sup>e</sup> Iewes.

And this text ought to teach vs, first to bee mindefull of the benefites which he hath done to our fathers, although we haue not seene them in our owne time. For that is a thing whereon we must set our mindes. Hath God giuen vs wit and reason but onely to conceiue things present & which we see with our eyes? Nay, our vnderstanding must procede furdier, yea and all must be referred to the honor & glory of him which hath giuen vs that vnderstanding. And it standeth vs so much y<sup>e</sup> more in hand to marke well this doctrine, because we see men fickleheaded & giuen to all vanitie & sond speculations. True it is that we would be loth to be as brute beastes, and we would faine be as men of vnderstanding: there is none of vs all, but he laboureth for it. And yet for all y<sup>e</sup>, what is our vnderstanding, but an inquiring of the things that passe our capacite? Men neuer cease to be inquisitive of the things that are farre about their vnderstanding, yea euen of things needlesse & vnprofitable: inso much as they will needs knowe what God did afore hee made the world, & such other things. Again, as touching stories, if a man occupy himselfe in thē, it is but to range abroad here and there, without consideration of Gods doings: inso much that God is quite forgotten, & things are not referred to their right and due vse. Wee see then how men runne rousing, so as they can babble well enough of things past, that ye would take them to haue good knowledge of them. But it is but in things vnprofitable, & in the meane while God is let alone, & they haue no regard at all of themselves. But contrariwise it is shewed here, that when we talke of matters of olde time, and enquire of things that haue bin done long agoe, we must keepe this order of proceeding, that we haue an eye vnto God, how he hath governed y<sup>e</sup> world, and alwayes shewed himselfe righteous, faithfull, vpright, good, and pitifull. First therefore let vs consider that. And afterwarde let vs come vnto our selues: and sith we see that hee hath separated vs from the rest of the worlde, & taken vs for his children without any worthines of ours, preferring vs before those which were no thing intercur to vs: (for in decde we be no better than the rest of Adams children:) seeing (say I) such goodnesse of God towards vs, we ought to apply our indeuour to knowe the same wel: and by inquiring of former yeres: we ought to behold Gods working, to the end he may be glorified by our handes, for that we haue found by experience, that we be so many wayes bound vnto him; and that the infinite goodnesse which he hath shewed towards vs, may prouoke and inflame vs to yeelde ous selues wholly to the seruing of him. If wee so doe, wee shall not be blamed for the vnthankfulnesse, for which the people of Israell are blamed here by Moses. For consequently all those whome God hath called vnto him, shall be comprised vnder the same condemnation, vnlesse they can skill to benefite themselves the better by his gracious dealings.

But nowe let vs cast our selues downe before the maiestie of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs to feele them more and more, so as wee may not onely condemne our selues with our mouthes, but also vtterly mislike of them, and turne againe vnto him with a true meaning minde, to obey him and to submit our selues to his good wil: & that therewithal he may so worke in vs by his holy spirit, that sith he hath vouchsafed to begin to make vs newe creatures, hee do also reforme vs to the full, vntill wee be

throughly clothed with his righteoufnesse, and that all our imperfections and vanities be mortified: That it may please him to grant this grace, not only to vs but also to all people, &c.

The CLXXX. Sermon which is the third vpon the two and thirtieth Chapter.

8 When the highest diuided to the Nations their inheritances: and when hee separated the Sonnes of men: then did he set the boundes of Nations according to the number of the children of Israel.

9 For the Lordes portion is his owne people, and Iacob is the meteline of his inheritance.

10 He founde him in a desert Lande, and in a horrible wilder nesse where nothing was to bee heard but roaring. He led him vp and downe, and gaue him vnderstanding, and kept him as the apple of his eye.

11 As the Eagle stirreth vp her nest, howering ouer her young ones, and spreading out her wings, taketh them vp, and caryeth them vpon her wings:

WE haue seene already heretofore, howe the intent of Moses in this text is, to shewe the children of Israell how greatly they bee bound vnto God, in that he loued them, and chose them out from among all the nations of the earth, and adopted them to bee his children without any desert of theirs, or without hauing any respect of their worthinesse, only of his own meere mercie. Now here vpon hee sayth, That when God distributed the world into partes, assigning all Nations their Countries: hee helde still this Lande for the heritage of his people. True it is that notwithstanding this, he did as it were lend the land of Chanaan for a time to the olde inhabitants thereof, that is, to the Hethites, the Heuites, the Pherefitites, the Chananites, and such like. His assigning of that Countrie to them was not for euer, for hee referued it till the time that hee should fetch his owne people out of Egypt. And wee must marke, that at that time Abraham was not yet borne, neither was there then any people of Israel. Howe can it then bee, that God should bee prouoked by any desert, seeing hee tooke the thing which as then had not any being? Yea and let vs marke alwaies, that the people which was to issue out of the stocke of Abraham, had bene no better than other nations, if God had not wrought in them. Therefore it is to bee concluded that God vttered an infinite goodnesse towards that people, and that his will was that they should bee a looking-glasse of his grace, to the whole worlde. And where as Moses saith, that God diuided landes to Nations, according to the number of the children of Israel: he maketh here a comparison betweene the offspring of Abraham, and the seuen nations that dwelled in the Countrie, which they entred into and possessed afterwarde. Surely they were a great multitude of people, and seuen sundry nations were of them: and yet our Lord preferred one lynage before them all. True it is that hee encreased the same lynage beyond the opinion of men, according to this promise which hee had made to his seruaut Abraham, Number the starres of the Skie and sand of the Sea if thou canst: for so shall thy feede be in multitude. But who would haue thought that for one households sake, there needed so great a lande as that seuen nations should haue bin driuen out of their Countrie, to gae place to them that were descended of one barren man, as the prophet Esay telleth them, saying: Go seeke your originall, get ye to the stone that ye were heauen out of; for Abraham was alone, and Sara was a barren woman to her vttermost olde age: and yet hath God made you to issue out of these two stones as it were by miracle, and not by the common order of nature: knowe ye therefore that he hath wrought so mightily toward you, that of ductie you ought to be the more prouoked to serue and honour him, that his glorie may shine forth in you. Yee see then that the meaning of Moses in saying, according to the number of the children of Israel, is that forasmuch as God had foreseene that hee would adopt the offspring of Abraham; hee gaue the Lande of Chanaan, not to one people alone, but to seuen Nations in number.

And here we haue to note in the first place, that inasmuch as the office of distributing the worlde into portions is attributed vnto God: wee so iourne as it were by his appointment, so long as wee dwell here below. True it is that the children of Israel had a peculiar state: but here Moses speaketh of the whole worlde, accordingly also as the same is treated of in the hundreth psalme and in other places. And that ought to make vs to liue in the feare of God, whereloeuer wee bee. For why? We be found at his cost, & our dwelling vpon earth is not by haphazard, but where it pleaseth him to maintaine vs. Yee see then how it is a profitable les-son to teach men to liue as in the presence of God, because it is hee that hath appointed them to dwell there. But by the way we be warned also, not to trouble the boundes of places or the common order, but to holde our selues every man to his owne, without encroching vpon other men. For why? God hath ordayned boundes in the world from the beginning. This being so; let every man now abide in his owne possession; and let not men trouble nor molest one another. Yet notwithstanding we see how malicious men are. For ambition and couerousnesse haue caused all the boundes to be broken which GOD had set in the worlde. Nembrod began first with setting vp the kingdome of Babylon: and afterward other men became desirous to win one frō another. Yee see then how men haue peruered the order that God had set in the world lyke vn-Gen. 10. 10. faticable gulfes. But howfewer men haue delt, yet hath God alwayes so bridled them, that for all their greedinesse they could neuer fet such confusion, but that some certaine order hath remained still. Howfewer the case stand, let vs marke well, that Gods creating of men was not to cast them here at aladuenture: but that his ordcyning and setting of the earth was to the ende we shoulde dwell therein. And truely wee knowe that the earth was couered with water, & naturally the sea ought to be aboute the earth, so as al of it shoulde be ouerflown. It is of speciall vertue that wee haue any dry place whereon to set our foote. And who is the doer of that?

Gen. 1. 20. As soone as God commaunded the waters to be withdrawn, by and by there was place for men to dwell on. Seeing then that we liue here, and that the earth dooth feed & susteine vs, let vs assure our selues that therein God sheweth his pitie towards vs. And therefore let vs serue him with the earnestest minde, & eury of vs be contented with that which he hath, without intermedling within other mens boundes. Let vs not through couerousnesse take to vs the things y belong not to vs: but let every man hold himselfe as it were locked vp, because we offend God and not men when we seeke to inroch vpon that which he hath not giuen vs.

Now then, seeing that Moses telleth the people of Israell that they be bound vnto God for his allotting of their inheritance vnto them in the land of Chanaan, yea euen before Abraham was borne: there is much more reason that we should magnify the inestimable goodnesse of our God, in consideration of the heavenly heritage which he hath promised and prepared for vs. For his preparing of a place for vs in heauen, was not at that time when he parted the worlde into portions: but euen before the world was created, as Ephes. 1. 4. sayth S. Paul. For before there was either heauē or earth, God hauing adopted vs to be his children, prepared a dwelling place for vs about. Sith it is so, we conclude that he had no respect of any worthines in our persons, he looked that wee should merit or deserue aught at his hand: but onely vted his owne free goodnesse. Yee see then how we must be carryed vp about the world as oie as we thinke vpon our saluation.

And the reason hereof is added forthwith by Moses, namely, Because they were the people of God, and his portion, and Iacob is the meteline of his inheri- heritance. The if it be demanded, why God in making partition of the world, preferred the children of Israell before all the residue, & why that one house was so deere vnto him, that he vouchsafed to appoint them a cōtrie certaine: If it be demanded what moued God thereto: Moses answereth, it was because Iacob was his portion and the meteline of his heritage. As if he should say, Ye poore soules, your God hath vsed such gracious goodnesse towards you, as yee cannot say there was any thing on your owne behalf, or that ye had any vertue in you, or (at a word) that ye can dim Gods glory any whit by your owne deserts. There was no such thing; for all proceeded of his owne free adoption. What was the cause that the linage of Abraham became Gods inheritance, & as it were his portion? For by the worde Meteline here is betokened a part or portion. For in those dayes men measured Landes by Metelines, & that is the cause why the word Cord, or Meteline is so often spoken of in the holy scripture, when mention is made of distributing or diuiding into portions. Now then if it be demanded why y people of Israell belonged more to God than all y rest of the worlde; or what affinity or acquaintance there was more betwene him and them: It cannot be sayd that they had purchased or procured more to themselves; or that they were nobler than all other men, as we haue seene heretofore. What canst thou say (sayth Moses in the seuenth chapter?) Hath God chosen thee, because thou wast a nobler, a worthier, or a more renowned Nation than any other? No: but for the loue which he bare to thee. Therefore lyke as in that place Moses vsed the word Loue, to shewe that Gods owne fre goodnesse moued him to take Abraham & his offspring: so in this place he saith, Know ye that your God hath chosen you, & that it is his will to take you for his heritage. And so ye see in effect, y to take away all pride and presumption from the children of Israell, & to shew them that they could challenge nothing to themselves, Moses bringeth them backe to the welspring which the whole scripture sheweth vs, to wit, that all the benefites and gracious giftes which God bestoweth vpon vs, and which wee receiue at his hand, proceede of his owne meere goodnesse, without being bounde thereto, or without inclnyng thereto in respect of any deserte of ours, but onely because hee loueth vs, yea euen without any cause why that wee can alledge: for we bring nothing at all vnto him. That is the thing which we haue to beare in minde.

And if this doctrine was true as in respect of y Land of Chanaan: what shal it be in respect of our comming to the immortalitie of the heavenly glory? The people of Israell could not obtaine the land of Chanaan by their owne deservings, but GOD was faine to loue them euen of his owne meere mercie, wherethrough hee did the all the good that they receiued at his hand. Yet notwithstanding, that land was nothing in comparison of the immortal life. Whereas it is sayd that wee be reformed after the image of God, to bee partakers of his glory, and that

wee bee his heires, and companions to the Angels, yea and to our Lord Iesus Christ: it is a far other thing than y<sup>e</sup> land of Canaan and the sustentance that is giue vs for this transitorie life. And therefore let vs vnderstand that men are worse than blinde, yea and more than mad, whē they thinke to attaine to so greata good thing by their owne desertes. Yet notwithstanding, we see how this diuclish opinion hath reigned and had full scope in the world, and how the Papistes are still at the same poynt at this day, that when y<sup>e</sup> inheriting of paradice is talked of, [they say] that men must purchase it by their own merites. And in the meane while they consider not how the immortal lyfe is named an inheritance, because it dependeth vpon Gods free adoption. And whereon is Gods free adoption grounded, but vpon his choosing of vs before y<sup>e</sup> world was made; I say vpon his choosing of vs, euen of vs which were forlorne as well as y<sup>e</sup> rest of the whole world? For we know we be all cursed in Adam. Again, what is y<sup>e</sup> cause y<sup>e</sup> he chooseth vs, who were lyke to those whō hee reiecteth? What is y<sup>e</sup> cause y<sup>e</sup> he proceedeth yet stil in drawing vs vnto him? Shall wee finde the cause thereof in our selues? Alas no: but wee must discharge our selues of all our weening, and repaire to the foresayd fountaine of his free goodnesse. And therefore let vs beare well in minde, that here wee bee warned, that we must not seeke the cause of our saluation in our selues nor of any of all the benefites which God bestoweth vpon vs, no not euen in respect of this present lyfe: and therefore that wee can much lesse seeke the cause or ground of the promised immortalitie, in our selues or in our owne desertes, but y<sup>e</sup> we must magnify his meere goodnesse in that behalfe. And seeing that God hath chosen vs to be his heritage, we must suffer him to possesse vs. But there is a greater reason in respect of vs than of the Israelites; because he hath not onely referred vs in creating the world, but also purchased vs by our Lord Iesus Christ. Doth not this price which God hath bestowed for our saluation to y<sup>e</sup> intent we should bee his heritage, deserue to haue vs wholly at his deuotion, and y<sup>e</sup> euery man should fo indenour to dedicate himselfe to his seruice, as that he might haue the dominion ouer vs? So then, let vs not play the traitors in bereauing God of the thing which he retained to himself when he vouchsafed to haue vs to be of his Church. Also let this moue vs that he will not possesse vs, but vpon condition that as we inioy him, so hee may inioy vs: and what an exchange is that? Consider what we be. We be dung, filth, and vtter cursednesse, and yet ye see how God accepteth vs for his heritage, and for his part would that we should possesse him. Sith it is so, what an vnthankfulness is it, if we continue not in obeying him, that he may possesse vs?

And let vs mark further, that there is not any thing which ought to moue vs more to the seruing of God, than to come to the knowledge of our free election, so as we know that his beginning to doe vs good is not now presently, but before we were borne, before the creating of the world, in so much that he rooke vs to him and adopted vs aforehand euen before that time. So much the more ought we to abhorre these rascals which would haue the doctrine of Election abolished: for by that meane they ouerthrowe y<sup>e</sup> whole groundwork of our saluation, as though they should stop the spring from whence the water floweth, so as we may no more drink thereof. For how shall we know that God hath called vs to saluation, but for that he hath loued vs without any desert of ours, and taken vs aforehand to himself, euen before y<sup>e</sup> world was created? Also how shall we know our selues to be beholden to him for all things, and that he is nor bound vnto vs; vnlesse we come to this poynt, that we were lyke to those which perish, so as there was no difference at all betwene them and vs, sauing y<sup>e</sup> hee hath marked vs out to be his, without finding any cause in vs why, that we were dearer to him than other men, and that he made more account of our welfare, all which things are grounded vpon his euertlasting vnchangeable purpose and will, the reason whereof is vncomprehensible to the worlde? They therefore which go about to abolish this doctrine, are deadly enemies to God his glory, and to our saluation, and would (as much as in them lyeth) deface all religion. That (say I) is the thing which we haue to remember vpon this Text.

Here vpon Moses sheweth yet better, how God hath vttered his goodnesse towards the people of Israel. He found him (saith he) in a desolate land, in a desolate place, in a dreddful wildernes where was nothing but roving of wild beasts. There he led him up & down, there he nurrued him, there he kept him as the apple of his eye. If the people of Israel had not serued as slaues in Egypt, and trauelled through the wildernes: Gods goodnesse had not bin so well known and so glorious as it is at this day. For why? Whereas God rooke Abraham out of his countrie, and brought him into a strange Land, and afterward gaue him a sonne when hee was vpon the point of a hundred yeres old, & that of the one child there issued such an infinit multitude: it might well haue bin sayd that God had shewed fauor to that lineage: but yet so blinde are men in considering Gods goodnesse towards the, that it would neuer haue bin perceived how God vttered his bountifullnesse towards y<sup>e</sup> stock, vnlesse Iacob had gone downe into Egypt, and that the people of Israel had bin kept in cruell bondage, as Moses reporteth in Exodus. But when they had bin held in such slavery that the king of Egypt had commaunded all their men-children to be slayen: then were they come to y<sup>e</sup> vttermost pinch. And then did God fetch them away, and make the to passe the red sea, hauing wrought a great number of miracles before. By meanes whereof they were after a fort wakened, that they might the better bethinke them how dearely God loued them & how much he set by them, seeing he vouchsafed to yeeld so great & so stately recordes of the goodnesse and fauour which he bare towards them. Moses therefore following the same reason, saith here, Looke backe to your first originall from whence you be issued. Did God find you in a far and fertile countrie, as though he should say, I wil maintaine you in the state wherein yee be: for it is not enough for men to haue a conuenient and easie dwelling place, vnlesse I preferue them and hold the vnder my protectiō. You therefore shal be mine, and I will bee your safegarde. Did God finde his people in such state? No. And therefore Moses sayeth to the children of Israel, Consider from whence ye came, & from whence your God hath fetched you. Were ye not in a wilderness sayeth hee? Yes; that then is the place from whence hee hath fetched you: and so much the more ought you to consider the fauour which he hath shewed you, that yee may perceiue howe much you be bounde vnto him. Now then, ye were in a wilderness: and after what sorte? There was not one graine of Corne to feede you withall, there was not one drop of water for you to drinke, he was faine to make water to issue out of a dry rocke miraculously for you, hee made Manna to fall from heauen. Ye were in a place where yee coule not build you one house, ye were there among the wild beasts, so as ye must needes haue perished, and therefore a man needes not to vse long discourses to shew how God was bountifull vnto you. For ye were as good as in a graue by the space of forty yeeres, and yet God kept you aliue after a straunge fashion & vnknown to men. Ye were destitute of foode and drinke, & God furnished your turne. Your shoes, your hose, & your garments did not rotte all that while. Now then, seeing that God maintained you after that manner against the commō order of nature, did he not shew thereby what care he had of you, and what loue he bare vnto you? So then, looke that ye neuer forget so great benefites, specially being so many and so huge in number as he hath done for you.

Eph. 1. 4.

in

Nowe we see the meaning of Moses in that hee sayeth that God founde his people in a wilderness, a dry and bairaine ground, a desolate place. And the selfesame thing meaneth Ezechiel in his sixteenth chapter, where he vbrateth the people of Israell with the vnthankfullnesse which they had shewed. What are yee, sayeth hee? For I tooke you coming out of the land of Egypt, as a Child borne out of time. The Child y so commieth out of his mothers wombe, is al to berayed, and he should perith in his own filth, if he were not rid of his spots and blemishes, and washed from the vnclennes which he bringeth with him. To be short, he rehearseth all the things that are wont to be doone to a child that is newly borne. Againe he vieth another similitude which is, as if a man should finde a wretched harlot that were starke rotten and readie to fall in peeces by reason of her infections: And I haue washed you & made you cleane, yea and I haue taken you in mariage: and doe ye not knowe that to be a benefite? Thus we see that Ezechiel hath followed the same order which Moses did in abasing the Children of Israell, by bringing them backe to their first state, to the intent they shoulde learne that Gods aduancing of them after that fashion beyond al expectation of man, was to the end his grace might be the better known in them.

And now to apply this doctrine to our owne instruction, let vs consider what wee be before God chooseth vs. It is sayd that hee found his people in a wilderness. True it is that he had adopted them before that time, insomuch that the promises were made vnto them before they went downe into Egypt. But it is enough that the people were there in so miserable state, to the end they shoulde perceiue that God had at that time giuen them as it were a second birth, and so dooth the scripture customably terme it. But now let vs come to our felues. In what case dooth God finde vs? In what state dooth hee take vs? We see the children of Adam, that is to say, cursed, and heires of euerlasting death. There is nothing in vs but sin, there is nothing in vs but corruption, God must needes reiect vs and hate vs, he must needes become our deadly enemy, and vter his vengeance vpon vs. To be short, wee be in the dungeons of hell, vntill God haue reached vs his hand, and had pitie vpon vs. It is not for any man to exempt him selfe from this confusion: for from the greatest to the least of vs, we be all plunged in it. Now let vs boast of the things which we haue of nature. For God hindeth vs voyd of all goodnesse, we haue not one droppe of vertue, wisdom, or righteousness: but contrariwise wee be full of corruption; wee be ready to burst for filth and vnclennesse, wee be bondslaves to Satan, vnder the tyranny and bondage of death, and at a worde wee be plunged in hell. At that poynt are wee when God chooseth vs, that is the poynt whereat hee beginneth our saluation. Now sith it is so, let vs learne first of all to rid our felues of all pride. And although Satan beguile most men, making them to beleue that they can deserue at Gods hand: yet let vs assure our felues that wee be beholden to Gods free goodnesse for all things. Marke that for one point. To the intent that all mouthes may be stopp'd before GOD (as saith Sainr Paul) let vs so humble our felues, as that wee make not any mo allegations, as who would say, we haue done this or that: but let vs preach the mercie of our God, and let vs declare that he is the beginning, the ende and the increase of our welfare, so as wee drawe out of that fountaine wherewith to satisfy vs, without seeking of any peece of our saluation either in our felues: or in any creature. Otherwise wee make our felues to beleue wonders, and they shall serue to feed vs withall: but in deed it will be but deadly poyson to make vs hurt it.

And now let vs marke well, that Moses hauing sayd that God found his people in a wilderness, addeth that he led them up and downe there, that hee nurtured them there, and that hee kept them there as the apple of his eye. By this terme of leading up & down, Moses dooth the people to vnderstand, that it was not for a day or twaine, nor for some short time that God made them to taste his goodnesse, but that he had continued it by the space of forty yeeres together. Lykwise, his heaping vp of these words together, A desert land, a desolat & vbarren, a place full of vringes, a bairaine ground, is not for nought, but serueth to touch the people the better to the quick, that they might call to mind what plight they had bin in before their coming into the land of promise, where Gods blessing was powred out vpon them most abundantly. And therefore the word Lead betokened as much at y<sup>e</sup> time as if Moses should haue said, Ye wretched people, had God vttered his loue & goodnesse towardes you but for one moneth, y<sup>e</sup> same ought to haue bin remembred of you for euer, so as you should neuer haue forgotten it. But now, it is not one moneth no nor one yere, but whole fortie yeres together, that God hath held on & continued his goodnesse towardes you: of all which time your fathers hauing not a crum of bread to eate, were miraculously fed with Manna from heauen; nor hauing any wine or other liquor to drink, had water giuen them out of the rocke. And as they shifted from place to place, GOD gaue a continuall course to the water, 20 wherewith to refresh themselves and their cattell. Seeing then that God hath so imprinted his grace y<sup>e</sup> it may be wel known of you in the great number of good turnes which he hath done for you: you be the lesse to be helde excused, if yee make not account of the glorifying of your God, who hath shewed himselfe so liberal towardes you.

But we must alwayes marke, that the speaking of these things by Moses to y<sup>e</sup> Iewes is after such a sort, that his doctrine is behouefull to vs at this day. And therefore we must vnderstand, y<sup>e</sup> God leadeth vs vp and downe in this world, to y<sup>e</sup> end we may haue the more leisure to feele his fauor, if we perceiue it not sufficiently in one day. True it is y<sup>e</sup> if we should haue experiēce of Gods goodnes but once in all our life, y<sup>e</sup> same ought to suffice vs, at leastwise if we had not our eyes blindfolded, or that we were not shortwitted to forget Gods doings out of hand. If he had once giuen vs any recorde of his fatherly loue, we ought to acknow edge the same and to minde well y<sup>e</sup> lesson, and to exercise our selues therein dayly both euen and moone. But what? Because all is marred by our vanitie, and all the good y<sup>e</sup> God dooth for vs is by and by forgotten: therefore doth he traine vs in this flightful lyfe, and leade vs vp & downe after such a fashion, that wee be put in minde of our wretchednes many wayes. The happening of so many necessities & Gods deliuering of vs from them, is to the intent y<sup>e</sup> we should beare it the better in minde; how he not onely succoreth vs once or twice at our need, but also holdeth on with his fauor throughout, yeelding vs record by infinite wayes y<sup>e</sup> he is our father & taketh vs for his children. After this manner ought we to wey this word Lead, when God tosseth & turmoyleth vs to & from this world, making vs to feele many things, so as we haue not one continuall state of quietnes, but are faine to walk one while one way, and another while another, & anon to go clean backe again, enduring now cold and now heate, & another time hunger, & being vexed sometimes with noyse of warres, sometime with sicknesses, & sometime with other things. Now when we be so led vp & downe, let vs assure our selues that our Lordes meaning is to make vs to come to the knowledge of his goodnesse.

And hereunto Moses addeth farther, that the people were nursured. Truly y<sup>e</sup> chiefe learning and instruction which they receiued was by the law. Yet notwithstanding, all the warnings that God gaue them in the wilderness, serued to nurture them. Moses therefore speaketh not here alone-ly of the Lawe which was vttered to the people to giue them knowledge of Gods wil: but also generally of all the instructions & warnings which God gaue them by the space of forty yeeres, as when he punished the idolaters, when he punished y<sup>e</sup> whoremongers, and such as were giuen to their lustes, and when hee punished the rebels. For at those times it behoued them to receiue newe instruction. Yea and all of vs must vnderstand, that generally al y<sup>e</sup> benefites, al y<sup>e</sup> threats, & all the punishmentes which God at any time vsed towardes the childre of Israell, were as many instructions to them. But we must marke here that it is Gods will that we should learn by them so long as we liue in this world. For like as he executeth y<sup>e</sup> office of a schoolemaister towardes vs, so wil he haue vs to play the good scholers vnder him, & to profit in the doctrine which he deliuereth vs. And it is a very notable point, that God will not haue vs to liue here lyke brute beastes without reason & vnderstanding. Whereto then ought our lyfe to serue here, & whereto ought ic to be applyed? Wherein ought men to busie themselves during y<sup>e</sup> time that they be here beneath? To profit in Gods schoole. That is y<sup>e</sup> end whereunto we be susteyned and mainteined here. But we abuse the life wickedly which hee giueth vs, applying it cleane contrary to his will, if we become not euery day better than other. Therefore let vs not lose our time, but let vs employ it according to y<sup>e</sup> meaning of our God. And when we rise a mornings let vs thinke with our selues, God hath preferred me hitherto to the intent I should profit in his schoole, and therefore I must not forget the benefites which God bestoweth vpon me this day, but make them meanes wherby to confesse my faith, that y<sup>e</sup> praise of all goodnes may be yeilded to him, & I employ my selfe with so much y<sup>e</sup> better courage to the seruing and honouring of him, knowing y<sup>e</sup> he furthereth my saluation continually more and more, seeing he draweth me to him by so many meanes: & therewithall I must also learne to stand in awe of him, y<sup>e</sup> I may yeeld him his due reuerence. Lykewise when euening commeth, let vs consider thus with our selues, seeing that God hath youtafed to employ me hitherto in his seruice, it is good reason that I should holde on still, and y<sup>e</sup> I should not turne away from him. Therefore when wee haue reckoned all things well, we shall finde y<sup>e</sup> there hath not passed one day no nor one howre or minute wherein our God hath not giuen vs some instruction. And if we fare neuer the better by it, who is too blame for it? Then haue we here a very profitable lesson, namely that as long as we liue in this world, we be in Gods schoole, & that he for his part ceaseth not to giue vs good instructions and furtherances to our saluation. iWhether he bestow his benefites vpon vs, or chastice chaffice vs for our sinnes, or shewe vs examples of his goodnes, or of his wrath and of his rigour in punishing such as haue done amisse: all of the are euer instructions for vs to fare the better by.

Now in the end Moses addeth, that God kept that people as the apple of his eye. Here is a similitude which ought well to rauish vs to wonder at it. For Moses could not haue vsed a fiter speech to shewe vs what care God hath of vs & of our saluation. He saith here that if God were a mortall man, he could not more charily keepe the apple of his eye, than he kept his people. Wee knowe it is the tendrest part of all a mans body. If a man be striken on the head, or on the hands, or on the armes, it may be borne with: but if he be but touched on the apple of his eye, all his bodie starkles at it: we be as greatly grieued at it as if a man had stabbed vs in with a dagger. It wold not greeue vs so much to haue one of our armes cut off, as to haue but a phillup with ones finger vpon the eye. And it is expressly sayd, that God keepeth vs not onely as his arme or as his legge. True it is y God hath neither armes nor legges, we must not imagin any such thing in him: but he borroweth a figure from men, to make vs vnderstand the thing y else were too high for vs to reach vnto. For if hee should speake according to his own maictie, we could not conceiue him: but he stoopeth to vs & vseth a manner of speech that is agreeable to our tendresse & infirmitie. His saying then is, that he will defend and preserue vs, not as a mortall man dooth his armes or his feete, but as he wold doe the apple of his eye. Wherby we learne that God vttered such a charinesse in preseruing the people of Israel, that if all the gentleness and louingkindenes in the world were put together, it were nothing in comparison of the infinite gracious goodnesse which hee shewed in that behaife.

And this is sayd for vs also. God must be faine to keepe vs as the apple of his eye, as he himselfe speaketh thereof by the Prophet Zacharie. For Moses maketh here a recitall: but there is a promise which ferueth for all ages. And lykewise also it is sayde in the Psalmes according to that which Moses had set downe afore, Lord keepe vs as y apple of ones eye. This prayer was penned by the holy Ghost for all the faithfull: and it is needefull for them, as I haue sayd. For let vs see what our state were without it. We be in danger of a thousand deaths, not without cause: Satan named the prince of this world, and what power haue we to withstand him? He hath fiery darts against vs, there is not that stroke which he striketh but it were deadly, if we were not defended and preserued by the wonderful gracious goodnes of our God. Seeing it is so, it standeth vs in hand to be maintayned by him, yea & to be so maintayned, as he ouercome all dangers y may befall vs in this worlde, & also all y assaults which we may haue within our selues. God I say must be faine to ouercome the all, or else we shall liue in continual doubt & anguish, & not know where to become euery minute of an hour. We should be shaken with dispayre of our saluation, were it not that we were thus shielded by God, yea euen in such sort, that if we were to indure all that e-uer coule light vpon vs in this present world, yet we might conclude with our selues, that God wil get the vpper hand howeouer the world go.

And here is added another similitude, that is to wit, that God played the parte of an Eagle or of a Hen in speaking after that manner. Now we knowe that in the holy Scripture there is often mentiō made of Eagles. And why? Because they be much commoner in that countrie than they be hereaways: and the Prophets after Moses time did apply themselues to y common maner of speeche of that country. Therefore let vs mark wel that whereas here is speaking of an Eagle, it is as much as if God should say, Go to, I haue bin as a Hen is towards her Chickens. Here we see how God stoopeth to vs. When the case concerneth Gods maictie, we see how y Angels doe couer their eyes, & are not able to looke vpon it, accordingly as the Cherubims are described vnto vs by the Prophet, namely y they haue wings to couer their faces withall, because they could not abide to beholde y glory of God, without dazeling of their eyes. Now if the Angels of heauen cannot stand before the glory & maictie of God, but that they must be faine to cast down their eyes: what shal we be able to doe? And yet notwithstanding God lykeneth himselfe here to a Hen. And why? to the end to vpbraid vs with our vnthankfulnesse. For he should neuer need to vse such similitudes, if we were not too too blockishe, not considering his gracious goodnes when he vttereth it vnto vs, insomuch that although we haue the fruition of it, yet notwithstanding we perceiue it not. Therefore to rid vs of this brutish blockishnes, God is faine to say, Ye wretched people, knowe ye not that I am towards you as a Hen that broodeth her Chickens vnder her wings? So then, let vs marke first of all that here we be reprov'd of the ouergreat blockishnes which is in vs, in that we consider not Gods benefites. That is the cause why God vseth such comparisons: And yet is not that any derogation at all to his glory or highnes. For his goodnes & his power are thinges y agree wel together; they be no such thinges as cannot abide to match one with another. God is mightie, God is dreadfull in his maictie, all y is true: but yet is his goodnes as infinite as his power. And what importeth his goodnes? That hee should be as a Hen. And therefore let vs marke, that this dealing of God must not diminishe his glory, so as we should not worship him with all humilitie & reuerence: but rather touch vs to the quick, that when God (hauing bestowed so many benefites vpon vs, & we thinke not vpon them but doe bury his goodnes in forgetfulness) vpbraideth vs y he hath played y Clocken towards vs and we could not abide it: we may learn to apply all our wittes to consider how good & gracious God is towards vs, & that knowing him to be so, we may also assure ourselues that hee ought to be worshipped in his glory & maictie, to the ende we may be subiect to him and come shrowd our selues vnder his wings, to be defended by him. But this shal be layd forth more at large to morrowe if God will.

Now let vs fall downe before the maieftie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feeble them better, yea in such sort, as wee may returne to him with true repentance, acknowledging the transgressions and iniquities which we haue committed, not only to obtaine forgiuenesse of them, but also to be maintained by him all the time of our lyfe: and that in the meane while it would please him to keepe vs to himself and correct all things that are contrary to his righteoulines, and doe hinder vs from giuing our selues wholly to him as we ought to doe. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The CLXXXI. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the two and thirtieth Chapter.

11 As the Eagle stirreth vp, &c.

12 So the Lord alone did leade him, and there was no straunge god with him, 13 He caryed him vpto the high places of the earth, and made him to eate of the fruits of the fieldes: and he made him to sucke Honnie out of the Rocke, and Oyle out of the hard stone.

14 He fed him with butter of kyne and milke of sheepe, with fatte of Lambes and of sheepe fed in Balhan, and Heegoates, and with the fatte of wheate: and made thee to drinke the iuice of the most excellent grape.

15 But he which ought to haue bene vpright, became fatte and fell to kicking. Thou art become fatte, iustic, and thicke. And io hee forsooke God his maker, and regarded not the strong God of his welfare.

Yesterday we sawe the similitude which Moses brought in to expresse what goodnes and gentlenes God vsed towards the children of Israell: for he dealt with them as when a hen gathereth her chickens vnder her wings. We see the howe God dooth in such wise vtter and make known his infinite power to his children in the preseruing of them, that hee stoopeth to them, beareth with them in respect of their frailerie, and (at a word) maketh himselfe lyke a Clockhen. Now it remaineth on our side, y we knowing our owne feebleness, should flee vnto God, and hide our selues vnder his wings, that we may there be defended and kept safe. And we must not bee afraid to preace vnto him, for his maiestic ought not to be terrible to vs any more such we see he hath made himselfe familiar with vs, & draweth vs to him by gentlenes. And surely it must needs bee that we be destitute of wit and reason, if we goe not to seeke him: for howe shall the little chicken doe, if he be not vnder his danimes wing? Much lesse can wee continue without the protection of our God, than little chickens can doe, if they run not vnder y wings of their dam which leadeeth them. But in the meane while we fare little the better by this lesson. For although we bee warned sufficiently of our infirmities, yet doe we not cease for all that to be blinded with presumption, in somuch as euey of vs thinketh to maintaine himself well enough. And by y meanes we hold skorn of y help of our God. Or else we be so full of distrust, y although he call vs to him with all the gentlenes that can be deuised; yet we cannot finde in our heates to come to him, but doe alwayes stand in doubt of him. And that is the cause why our Lord Iesus Christ findeth fault with the citie of Ierusalem, that when as hee would haue gathered her chickens together, she would not. Hee maketh euen a complaint of it in way of lamentation, saying: O Ierusalem Ierusalem, how often would I haue gathered thy childre together, as y Hen stretcheth out her wings to gather her yong chickens to her, & thou hast despised that great benefite, thou hast not voutfased to shroud thy selfe vnder me. I haue bin desirous to make thee to feele my power to y maintaining of thee in thine estate. But what? Thou hast bin faine to feele heeretofore many chastisements because of thine vnthankfulness: but the time will come y thou shalt bee vtterly destroyed. Let vs beware that God haue not lyke cause to finde fault with vs nowadayes, and to powre out his vengeance vpon vs after hee shall haue borne with vs a long time. For the foresaid threatening which our Lord Iesus Christ made, besel not out of had. God had many ways assayed to gather the citie of Ierusalem vnto his obedience: and when he saw them so stubborn y they were past amendment, he punished them according to their desert. Therefore let vs not tempt y patience of our God, but when we see him spread out his wings to gather vs to him, let vs runne to him, & let necessitie driue vs thereto: For what shall wee doe if our Lord keepe vs not? Again, Let not fearefulness or douting keepe vs back from him. For what can he do more, than abace himselfe after the maner of a clockhen, to the intent that his maiestic shoulde not bee terrible to vs and scarce vs away?

Let vs marke further, y God playeth the part of a Clockhen in all pointes, to gather vs vnder his wings. For on the one side he calleth vs vnto his ruition by y preaching of the Gospell, promising vs y the power of his holy spirit shall not faile vs, but y it shall defend vs against all the faultes of Satan, according as it is sayd that all the fortresses of hell shall bee able to doe nothing to vs, if we bee grounded vpon the faith of the Gospell. Besides this, wee knowe that God watcheth ouer his seruants, and that he giueth them. Therefore let vs sticke to those promises, and suffer our Lorde to vse his kinde- nesse, as he setteth it forth by this similitude; and sith we see he is willing that we should come familiarly vnto him; let vs not play y<sup>e</sup> wild beasts.

Nowe, it is saide immediately after that God alone ledde his people, and that there was no strange god with him. This serueth to condemne the wickednesse of the children of Israel, which could not rest wholly vpon God; whereas hee was so sufficient for them: for they had founde by experience, that they needed not to seeke any other. And not without cause is this set downe. For although men doe not vterly refuse Gods help, yet can they not content themselues with it, but they fall to raunging and rousing and make by-leapes, bearing themselues in hand, that it will be good for them to match some other helpe with God. Lo at what point we be. For we woulde bee ashamed to say that God can doe vs no good, & that we can well forebare him. Therefore wee can finde in our hearts that he shal haue the first place and chief preheminence: but we cannot finde in our hearts to rest wholly vpon him, but we fall to conceiuing of sonde imaginations, O, God is farre from vs, wee deserue not that hee should haue care of our saluation, and therefore it were good for vs to get vs this or that. To bee short, in all ages men haue sought occasion to turne away from God, not by falling quite and cleane away from him, (as I said) but by making a minglemangle, and by seeking still the things which haue seemed best to their owne lyking, as though God were not ynough of himselfe alone.

In respect of such naughtinesse it is said here, that there was no strange god with him when hee led the people through the wilderness, and conuied the into the Lande of promise. The God which had adoped Abraham, the same which made both heauen and earth, the same which afterwards did set forth his lawe, euen the same was hee alone, and hee called not any others to his helpe. True it is that God continually vsed the seruice of his Angels for the welfare of his people, and for the maintenance of his Church; but yet doth it not followe that hee borrowd aught of them. Whereas it is said that the Angels are appointed to haue care of vs, it is not to stoppe vs from repairing right soorth vnto God, nor to darken his brightnesse thereby, that men should honour him the lesse: for the Angels are nothing as in respect of themselues: And therefore the holy scripture termeth them the vertues or powers of God, for he vseth them as his owne hands. Not without cause therefore doth Moses say, that God was alone in the leading of his people, and had not any strange god with him. For we see how those wretched folk forbare not to forge ydols to themselues. Inso much y<sup>e</sup> although God 400. yeres before had promised to redeme them, although he had performed that promise in very deepe, although he had shewed himselfe to them so many sundry wayes, so y<sup>e</sup> they had every day some newe visible token, and y<sup>e</sup> the cloude by day and the fire by night were a warrant of Gods presence; yet notwithstanding they forbare not to inuēt new superstitions. And why? Because that (as I saide afore) such is our cursed inclination, that we cannot repose our selues vpon God alone, but we fall to rāging here & there, and our wits are rouing abroad to inuent ydols to our selues. For this cause doth Moses here re- prooue the leawdnesse of the children of Israel, which could not hold themselues contented with God, though he gaue them sufficient cause.

But now let vs applie this lesson to our selues also. For we see what y<sup>e</sup> Prophet Esay saith when he speaketh of the redemption that was to bee wrought in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ. It is said in the 59. Chapter, that God sought and looked about him if he could finde any helpe to redeme the worlde. Not that God was cumbe- red with the matter, or that he wist not what hee had to do: but by that figure the Prophet expre- sseth the better, that it was onely God that re- deemed vs, and that he was not helped by any other. Therefore when he had sought, he found that he should be faine to vse his owne onely power. Then armed hee himselfe with his iustice, hee fenced himselfe with his owne power, and so finished and performed the thing which hee had determined, that is to wit, the re- demption of his people. Seeing then that God hath so purchased vs to himselfe in the person of his sonne, as that he had not any companion in the doing thereof, but hath vttered forth the infinite treasures of his goodnesse, iustice, and power: let vs learne to hold our selues wholly to him, and not to be so fickleheaded as to set vp ydols, and to runne gadding here and there, and to let our selues loose to no benefite. Let vs rather consider howe God himselfe alone hath re- deemed vs once for all, and that henceforth hee will haue the guiding of all his himselfe alone, and that hee will haue vs to sticke to him alone. True it is that our Lord Iesus Christ also was a leader of the people of Israel in the wil- dernes, as sheweth S. Paule in the tenth chapter of the first epistle to the Corinthians, where he saith that they tempted Iesus Christ. And how was that? Euen because he was alwaies the medi- ator: howbeit, that was after a darke maner. But nowadaies hee sheweth himselfe to vs face to face: inso much that if we looke there, we haue there y<sup>e</sup> whole fulnes of Gods maiestic. Seeing it is so, that God in these daies discouereth himselfe more fully vnto vs, than hee did to the Iewes in the time of the law: there will be so much the lesse excuse for vs, if wee abyde not fast settled in him, so as hee alone do suffice vs, and we doe take our whole contentation in him. Yet not- withstanding, wee see howe froward the worlde hath bene. For what a number of ydolles haue men forged euen since Christes coming into the worlde? And howe haue we behaued our selues since the time of our ignorance? For looke howe manie Patrons and Aduocates the Papistes haue imagined, so many fellowes haue they added to our Lorde Iesus Christ, and so doing they set their minds vpon the creatures, and let the liuing God goe. Indeede they will protect that their intent is nothing fo: but a man may see by their doings that God is not known there from his faintes, as they themselves haue saide in their common prouerbe. After that manner haue we erred: and we haue alienated our selues (to our power) so farre from God, that we haue wel deserued to be shaken off at his hand. But forasmuch as he hath shewed vs that it is onely hee to whom we must sticke, and forasmuch as he offereth himselfe so familiarly vnto vs, to the intent we shoulde submit our selues to him: we ought now to be so much the more steadfast: and seeing we haue such assurance, let vs not be drawn too and fro by our vconstancie and lightnes, but let vs conclude that God cannot away to haue any strange gods with him, and that it behoueth vs to doe him the honour of resting in such wise vpon his power and goodnesse, as it may suffice vs to call vpon him, and to flee to him for all our reliefe.

And Moses addeth immediatly, that God carried vp his people, (or made them to ride vp) vpon the high places of the earth, and gave them the fruites thereof to feede them, namely the butter of Kyme, the milke of Sheepe, the fat of Muttons, of Lambes, and of Goates, the fat of Corne and the bloud of Grapes, (for so he termeth them): and that hee made them to ease Oyle out of the harde stones, and honny out of the Rocks. Hereby Moses ment to vtter howe liberall (yea euen beyonde all opinion of man) God shewed himselfe towards his people. His speaking of the high places of the earth, is in respect of the situation of the lande of Chanaan: for it is high in comparison of Egypt and of the countries thereabouts. To say (as some haue imagined) that it is the middest and (as ye would say) the Nauill of the earth, is to no purpose. Because mention is made of the mids of the earth among the Prophets, some haue surmised that God meant to bound it out, as if he had bene some Geometrician that should haue butteled and bounded the whole world. But whereas it is saide, in the mids of the earth, it is meant, in the mids of the lande that is to say, of Iewry. Yet notwithstanding, as I saide afore, the Lande of Chanaan is high, if a man haue an eye to any of all the Countries round about it. Againe, it hath many mountains and high Rockes in it, insomuch that at the first sight a man would take it to be barren. And therefore Moses declareth that the people shold eate honnie out of the Rockes, and Oyle out of the harde stones: that is to say, that where men would think there were nothing but wildernes, there would God make Olfetrees to growe: and where men would thinke to be nothing but barrenesse, there they shoulde gather honnie, and (to be short) that euerywhere there shoulde bee nothing but sweetenesse and abundance.

Afterwarde hee speaketh of fat Sheepe, Goates and Lambes. Truth it is that in this place is vsed the worde Bafan, which had that name, of fatnesse: for the hill of Bafan was a goodly countrie of pasture. And this is the cause, why hee expressly speaketh thereof. And let vs marke that Moses neuer came within the land of Chanaan, hee had neuer so yewed it that hee could describ it, as he doth here. Needs therefore must hee speake, not as a man, but as one whose tongue is governed by the spirite of God. And heere he treateth of the things which the people were to finde after the decease; and yet hee speaketh of them as if he had seene them, and as though the things had bene done already. So then we haue a plain prooffe that Moses wrote not any thing on his owne heade, but was an instrument of the holy Ghost. For he left this song to the children of Israel, and made it common among them before his death, as wee haue seene afore. Whereby it was apparant, that hee was taught at Gods hand all the things which were vknownen vnto him as in respect of the flesh: & surely not euen the children of Israel themselves coulde vnderstande the contentes of that song, vntill they had had the experience of it. But the effect shewed that his so speaking was not in vaine. The thing then which Moses (or rather the holy Ghost by his mouth) intended; is to put the Iewes in minde, howe liberall God had shewed himselfe to them, namely by bringing them into the Lande of promise, and by giuing them fruitfulnessse, that it might suffice to maintaine them. And no doubt but hee meant here to magnifie Gods goodnes, by declaring that hee passed the common order of nature when he had such a care to sustaine his people so welthily in that lande which a man would neuer haue thought able to do it. So much the more therefore ought we to abhorre these diuinish heades, which haue gone about to deface Gods grace in this behalfe, seeing that the holy scripture standeth therevpon, namely that men must not deeme according to the common order of nature, concerning Gods mainteining of his people after that manner. As for example, that cursed heretike which was executed here among vs; was not ashamed to write in one of his books that the land of Chanaan is indeede spoken of, howebeit our sauourable, and that they which haue so spokn thereof, haue made vs to beleue many things vnaduisedly. And what caused him so to do, but that he was a worldly man and a despiser of God, seeking by all meanes to skorne God, and to abolish his grace, and that men might no more knowe how to worship him? So then ye see howe Gods grace was had in contempt. But contrariwise, we must alway be resolved, that God hauing once made his promise to his seruant Abraham, did therupon intend to vtter his wonderfull power, as one that had a care of his people. Yea and we must call to mind what was saide yesterday, namely that GOD had made his partition to the former inhabitants of that countrie, (to wit of the lande of promise) according to the number of the children of Israel, for he knewe wellyough what a multitude of people hee was to maintaine there. That is a cause why Moses declareth here againe, that the Rockes yeldd honny, and y stones brought forth Olfetes: that there was pastureground to yeldd fat muttons, lambes & goates, & to yeldd butter, & all manner of white meate, so as nothing might be wanting: also y the land yeldd y fat of corne

(for he vseth that terme,) as who shold say there were lumps in the meale, and nothing but pure and fine flower of wheate, so as our Lorde gaue his people abundance of all things, y he knewe to be meete for them: and that hee gaue them the bloud of y grape, that is to say, the grapes were so full, that a man might haue pressed as it were bloude out of them. To be short, he declareth that God failed not his people in any thing, but provided them store of all things, necessarie, yea and shewed himselfe so liberal, that hee gaue them euē more than needed. Now after as God dealeth largely vnto vs, so must wee enlarge our hearts to serue him, that we may be fully fraught with loue towards him. For all the benefites which we receiue of him, must kindle our hearts to goe vnto him. We haue in them a tast of his goodnesse to draw vs vnto him. Now then if wee make not Gods gracious gifts available to vs, so as we loue him for them, and bee rauished with desire to come vnto him: it is certaine that wee must yeelde a sorrowfull account for it. For wee vnhallowe them, and abuse them too shamefully, and thereby God looeth the things which hee had bestowed vpon vs: as his children, because it is not his meaning that they should haue bene cast away as vpon dogges.

For this cause Moses aggravateth heere the malice of the people, in that he saiech, that after God had shewed himselfe so liberal, foorthwith they became fatte, and being become thicke, fat, and as it were so branned that they were ready to burst with greace: they fell immediately to desife the God which had made them, and to mocke at the strength of their welfare. Here wee be taught to call our selues daily to account for the benefites which God hath bestowed vpon vs. Wherefore lets beware that we deuour not the benefites which wee haue of God, forgetting them and the giuer of them; Nay, lets make them all as notes of remembrance to put vs in mind how much we be bound and indebted vnto him. True it is that wee can neuer bring that to passe, according where-to it is saide in the Psalme, that if men employ themselues neuer so much to the considering of Gods gracious gifts, they shall finde themselues gauced, for they be mo than the hayres of our heads. Yet notwithstanding, it behoueth vs to doe our indeuour to magnifie our God, considering how greatly wee be bounde vnto him, and howe many wayes hee maketh vs to feele his goodnes. That is our true studie; that is y thing wherein we must exercise our selues all the time of our life. And the chiefe sacrifice that God requirereth of vs, is thanksgiving, which is when we honour him with the things that we haue receiued of him, according to this saying of the hundred and sixteenth Psalme. What shall I yeeld vnto the Lorde for all the good which hee hath done vnto mee: I will take the cup of saluation, and call vpon his name. So then let this text bea warning and encouragement to vs, to consider better of our Gods benefites that we may fare the better by them. That is one point.

And moreouer, when wee once knowe that God hath bounde vs vnto him, and dayly bindeth vs in hauing a care to sustaine these our mortall bodies which are but carions & dung, the which neuerthelesse he feedeth with bread: let the consideration thereof make vs to mount vp higher, and to bethinke vs howe we be daylie fedde with the grace of his spirite, and refreshed with the liuing waters which wee haue of him; yea and that we be fedde with our Lord Iesus Christ himselfe who is the heavenly bread that feedeth our soules. Lets vs consider these things, and learne thereby to giue ourselues wholly to our God who sheweth himselfe so bountifull and liberal a father towards vs. If we do not so, we haue here a horrible condemnation. For (as I haue said) to the intent to set out the mischief so much the more to the full in that men discharge: not their due tie to Godwarde, being prevented by his drawing of them vnto him: Moses putteth here as it were into a paire of scales, on the one side Gods benefites, and on the other side the peoples forgetfulness, negligence & vnthankfulness. And this is the thing that in effect wee haue to remember out of this place.

Now it behoueth vs to marke well the thing that is rehearsed here by Moses, namely that the Rightfull was growen faire. His attributing of that title to the people of Israel, is to signifie whereto they were called of God: for this comprehendeth the principall end of our calling. Gods adoping of vs to be his children, is to the ende wee shoulde liue rightcouly. The Jewes are called a froward and crooked generation. Such then are the vnbeleeuers vntill our Lorde Iesus Christ haue brought them home to himselfe. On the contrarie part, when God calleth vs to be of his stocke or household: then he reformeth vs, and he will haue vs to holde the way of saluation as he sheweth it vnto vs. And such ought the children of Israel to haue bene, seeing that God had chosen them. But what? It is said that after the rightfull or righteous was waxen fatte, he fell to kicking against his master. Now if this bee saide nowadays, it will be double to our shame: for if our Lorde speaking of rightcoulesse or vprightnesse be to shewe y those whom he had sanctified, desied themselves, and that those whom he had brought into the right way, were gone astray: it is to condemne them the more gricuouly. Therefore it ought to make vs the more ashamed, whē God shall say, What are yee? For I haue adopted you to be my children, and what a looking glasse and patterne haue you in me? Ye ought to resemble your father: ye knowe my goodnes and my iustice, and yet are you as crooked as serpents. Must we not needs be confounded with double shame, when God vpbraideth vs after that sort? So then, lets vs learne to what purpose God hath ordained vs in vouchsafing vs the grace to gather vs vnto him. Let vs follow the vprightnes which he comandeth vs, & let vs not swaue aside from him. Moreouer lets vs beware y fatnesse blind vs not, and so mar vs least when we haue bene full fedde for a time, we growe stowarde through Gods vsing of his liberalitie towards vs. And y is a very needefull point.

point. For when God sheweth himselfe so liberal, and feedeth vs with abundance of all things: his so doing is to make vs to perceiue his goodnesse the better. Therefore it ought to inflame vs the more, seeing that our Lorde handleth vs gently as though wee were his tender babes, as he himselfe termeth vs. But wee see on the contrarye patt, that if God deale bountifully with vs, wee play the stubborne and vnruely horses. As a horse that is ouerpampered in the stable wil not be ruled, but falls to kicking, and becomes so lustie as if he were wilde: euen so is it with vs also: such is our nature. And are wee to bee excused, when we shall haue abused Gods gifts after that fashion? If it be demanded what maketh men proude, what maketh men become wilde beasts, so as they cannot away with any yoke, but are fierce and hardharted, and cannot afterward away with good instruction and warning, but are made against God, puffed vp with pride and presumption, starke blinde, destitute of reason, and vtterly void of modestie and humanitie: what is the cause of all this, but the good things which God hath bestowed vpon them? And how may that bee? For it is a monstrous thing, and a thing vtterly against nature. God cometh to vs, he vttereth his treasures, hee would haue vs to knowe him to be as gentle and gracious a father as can be, hee maketh vs as it were cockeneyes; he could do no more to shewe what affection he beareth vs, except he should poure out his bowels vpon vs; he interteincth vs as if it were in a Paradise, accordingly as it is saide of all those whom God hath taught, namely that he keepeth them as much at their ease, as if they had all the commodities that could be wished. Seeing then y God hath shewed himselfe such a one; what a thing is it that men shoulde take occasion thereby, to kicke against him, and to bee proude and full of presumption & ouerweening, so as they shoulde despise all admonitions, yea and be as it were stark mad against all doctrine? And what a horrible sin is this? Yet do wee make a trade and custome of it. Whereby we see howe froward our nature is, and what a bottomlesse pit of all vices and infections is in it.

And therefore let vs beare this doctrine so much the better in minde, where it is said that the righteous fell to kicking when he once became fat. How that although wee had earst some good plaine meaning in vs, & there appeared in vs some willingness to serue God: yet alsoone as we be waxen fatte, by and by we become wilde beasts, as appeareth euen by experience. Howe many be there, which are treatable & liue after some vpright manner, so long as God holdeth them in meane state? True it is that we shall see a number of hypocrites also, who as long as they haue not wherewith to set out themselves, will pretend to be as lowly as is possible, and yet all is but hypocrisie. Again there are others which wil beare the countenance of good behaviour, and be well ruled, and liue in the feare of God: but as soone as they be growen fatte, by and by they play the wilde beasts, they be starke mad, they shew their teeth, they put out their horns, they fall to kicking, & they sling out against God. This is seene too much. And therefore it was not for the children of Israel onely that Moses spake so: but the holy Ghost hath shewed vs heere as it were the ludy picture or image of the naughtines which is in vs, and wherunto we be inclined and giuen: that is to wit, that when God hath once made vs fatte, by and by in steede of liuing righteously which is the very condition whereupon he hath chosen vs to be his children, we fall to kicking against him.

And to amplify the leawdnesse yet more, of such as doe so abuse Gods gracious gifts; Moses saith further, Thou art become thicke and fatte, thou art as it were cumbered with shine owne fatte, thou art euen ouergrown with fatte. And so he forgate (or forsooke) the God that made him, and scorned the strong God of his welfare. Whereas Moses saith here that the people became lusty, fatte & thicke, as though they had bin choked with their own gr eace: it is in two respects: the one to blame them y forer, for that in iteed of noting & marking well Gods benefites, y thereby they might haue bin the more prouoked to serue and honour him: they deuoured then vp without measure or temperance: and also that the quantitie of Gods benefites was so great, that it beighted them the greater condemnation. Let vs marke well then, that if wee forget Gods benefites, they be registred vp before him to put vs to reproch. Therefore we shall gaine nothing by the shortnes of our remembrance, nor by our forgetting of the great number of Gods benefites, no nor yet by our defacing of them as much as in vs lieth: for God forgetteth not any thing, all things must needs come to account before him. Wherefore let vs prouide for it aforehand. And as (I haue said) let euery of vs looke neerly to himselfe, & the Lord commodities we haue, let vs consider y our Lord bindeth vs the more to magnifie him, & wil haue vs to receiue the cup of saluation at his hand, & to call vpon his name, that our mouthes may be open to sing songs of praise vnto him. Mark that for one point. And therefore let vs assure ourselves y this vnthankfulness wil make vs the more vnexcusable, seeing y God setteth here before vs y benefites which he had bestowed vpo his people, & vseth such a number of words to shew that nothing was forgotten which he had done for y people when they had once estranged theselues from him, and y his intent in shewing himselfe so liberal, was not y the people shoulde make none account of it, but y they shold haue born all things wel in minde. Let y therefore serue for one point.

Again, when our God giueth vs such abundance; let vs beware that we vse his benefites wel. For surely to learne to be rich, and to haue abundance, and also to be contented with pouertie & want (as saith S. Paul) is a poynt very hard to bee attained vnto: and yet it ought to be common to all the children of God. S. Paul, in saying that he could skil to be poore, meaneth that hee was patient, so as he neither troubled nor tormeted himselfe when God sent him scarcitie and want of ease: for he knew that God would not fail him in the end. Ye see then y the knowledge of Gods children children, is on the one side to be poore . Againe on the other side he saith , that he can skill to abound : meaning , that when God gaue him abundance and more than he needed : hee overshoot not himselfe by abusing it in superfluous expenses or in playing the loose colt as men term it, but that he vsed it moderately and measurably. Then if God giue vs more than wee neede, let vs assure our selues that in so doing he approacheth the nearer to vs, at leastwise if we can skill to vse well the benefites which he hath bestowed vpon vs, that is to say without vainglory, without pride, without disorder , so as wee be not too much giuen to our delights, but vse Gods benefites with measure and staynednes, and therewithall be readie to indure hunger and thirst when it pleaseth God, that it he giue vs abundance wee be not so drunken with it but that we stil acknowledge him to be our fosterfather. But we see on the contrary part howe the worlde behaueth it selfe in this behalfe . For what a sort of drunkardes , what a sort of gluttons shall a man see, which are like swine in a stie without any vnderstanding or reason? They can fill their paunches welly enough, but they can no skill to lift vp their heades to heauen to honor him that findeth and maintaineth them so wealthy: their groynes & muffles are euer grubbing downward to their feeding. Therefore let vs not resemble them. If God giue vs wealth, let vs not pamper or pranke vp our selues , but rather let it bee as a spur to quicken vs vp to come vnto him; the nearer that hee approacheth vnto vs, and the more that hee maketh vs to feele his goodnes; the more wholly let vs yeelde our selues thereto. That is the thing which we be taught in this text.

Now whereas Moses saith, Hee forsooke the God which made him, and skorned the strong God of his welfare: thereby hee sheweth vs after what manner we abuse Gods benefites, namely by thinking away from him, whereas he would haue vs to bee brought nearer to him. For (as I saide afore) all the commodities which God giueth vs in this world ought to be as ladders whereby to climbe vp to him . And if we be wedded to the earth, it is the way to make vs turne the benefites of our God to the cleane contrarie . Therefore let vs take good heede that we prouoke him not to displeasure. And whereas Moses saith, that it was God that created his people: hee meaneth it not alonely as in respect that he is the maker of the world, but as in respect that hee had chosen that people , and had made as it were a newe worlde of them . For Gods fetching of the children of Israel out of the lande of Egypt , his feeding of them in the wildernes , and his putting of them in possession of the land which he had promised vnto them, were as a newe creating of them: He had not onely made them men , but also newe men. So then the making that Moses speakes of here, is not of the first making whereby the children of Israel were brought into the world : but of Gods reforming of them to bee his children. And it is the very same thing that is ment in the forescore and fifteneenth Psalm, Now then (saith Moses) will ye spite him which hath twice made you after that fashion? What an vnthankfulness were that? The like condemnation lyeth vpon vs nowadayes, if we walke not in the obedience of our God, seeing he hath not onely placed vs in the worlde, but also called vs to the hope of the endlesse life, reforming vs by his holy spirit, and calling vs to the knowledge of the Gospell of our Lord Iesus Christ. Sith it is so, let vs beware we forget it not, or that we shrink not away from him in any wise. Yea and let vs marke well the word that Moses vseth in saying that they mocked or skorned the strong God of their welfare. The terme that hee vseth commeth of a foole or thing of nothing, [as if a man would say, they befooled him, or they louted him.] Whereby he aggrauateth the ouergreat skornefulness of that people in not honoring God as they ought to haue done. Then if wee yeelde not God his due glorie and praise, it is all one as if wee made no account of him, or as if wee bleared out our tongues at him in way of mockage. And that were too excessive vnthankfulness or rather vtolerable trecherie. Therefore let vs beware that we be not guiltie of such a crime as is the despising of him which is the strong holde of our welfare , that is to say, him vpon whom we stay , without whom we can by no meanes continue, which keepeth vs vnder his protection, and to be short, of whom we hold our life and all that belongeth thereunto. Must we not needes be worse than brute beastes, when we forget him? Let vs vnderstand then that besides the other benefites which God bestoweth vpon vs , we be also settled vpon his power, so as he hath y governing of vs, and we be after such a sort in his tuition, that we finde him alwayes the protectore of our welfare , to the intent that wee holding our selues to him , may knowe also that hee is euer readie and forwarde to increase his gracious giftes and to multiplye them , vntill hee haue brought vs to the full perfection of our saluation.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good GOD with acknowledgment of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them more and more, and therewithall that hauing stued himselfe so gracious towards vs, hee suffer vs not to forget his benefites, nor to abuse the sustenance which hee giueth vs in this worlde; but that wee may be drawn further by it, namely to seeke the heauenly foode of our soules least they shoulde starue, and that our whole stay and contentation may be in the doctrine which is daily deliuered vs by the Gospell , and in the grace of our Lorde Iesus Christ ; so as all his spirituall giftes may be applied by vs to the glorifying of our good god: that when his glorie shineth forth in this world, we may perfectly be partakers thereof, after wee bee rid of this mortall flesh, and dispatched from the transitorie state of this earthly life . That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs but also to al people and Nations of the earth &c.

On Wednesday the iij. of Iune, 1556.

The CLXXXII. Sermon which is the fifth vpon the two and thirtieth Chapter.

16 They haue prouoked him with their strange gods, & stirred him to displeasure with their abominations.

17 They haue offered sacrifice to Deuils, and not vnto God: to gods whom they haue not knowen, to newe gods lately come vp, whom your fathers feared not.

18 Thou hast forgotten the strong God that begate thee: and benee vnmindfull of the God that shaped thee.

19 The Lorde sawe it and was fore grieued at it by reason of the prouocation of his sonnes and daughters.

Here Moses declareth the vnthankfulnesse of the people, in that they peruerced the seruice of God, hauing the lawe whereby they were taught after what manner God woulde bee honored, and being instructed at his hande that they ought to giue themselves wholly to him, and not go seeke vnto ydols, nor borrowe any thing of the heathen and Infidels. But notwithstanding all this, the people ceased not to take the bridle in their teeth, and to mingle a sort of superstitions with the seruice of God. In somuch as it sufficed them not to haue God to their father, but they woulde needes haue a number of other patrons, as men terme them. And this befell not onely when Moses wrote this song: but also the holy ghost informed him of the things that were then to come vpon that people, and this record was of necessitie to bee giuen thereof. And so this song serued to shewe the transgressours of Gods lawe, that they coulde not scape the hande of the heavenly Iudge, seeing their finnes were knowne so long aforehande. For howe is it possible that God should forget the fautes that wee haue committed, or howe is it possible for vs to blindfolde his eyes that he should not see them, seeing he foresawe our euill doings euen long afore we were borne, and is the Iudge of them?

But heere Moses vpbraideth the people, That they had prouoked God by strange Gods, that they had stirred him vp to elsse, and that they set his wrath on fire with their abominations. First wee must call to remembrance what hath bene faide as well in the fifth Chapter as in other places: namely that this worde relouise is attributed to God, because hee will haue vs to worshippe none but himselfe alone: and also because hee admitteth vs with this condition, that wee shoulde walke before him in all manner of purenesse. When a man misbehaueth himselfe, it is all one as if a woman forsaking her husbande, shoulde play the harlot and giue ouer her self to all lewdnes. That then is the cause why God terneth himselfe ielous. Not that he is subiect to any passions; but to shewe that his honour is deare to him, and that he cannot away with any companion, but that it we will acquite our selues of the faith that we haue plighted vnto him, wee must yeeld ourselues wholly vnto him, we must behaue ourselues soundly & vncorruptly without doublenes, we must not stand debating what God we shoulde sicke vnto, but we must let him haue the possession of vs, & not make any minglemangle or corruption. And that is the cause why Moses expressly addeth the worde strange, as though a woman forgetting her selfe to bee vnder couert baron, or that she is bounde vnto her husbande by reason of the faith which she hath plighted vnto him: shoulde goe make herselfe common to such as had no interest in her. In the same taking are wee, when we inuent newe gods to worship them at our owne pleasure.

Moses addeth their abominations: meaning that as soone as wee steppe aside from the liuing God, and from the doctrine whereby he woulde haue vs to bee ruled; all our life is detestable before him, what colour of good intent so euer wee set vpon it, as the vnbeleeuers beare themselves cuer in hande that they doe well when they corrupt the true religion with their owne fancies. They beare themselves in hand that all shoulde be well: but God cleane contrarie wise auoweth that in those doings of theirs there is nothing but cursednesse. And so let vs marke well, that God alloweth not any Religion which is not ruled by his worde, and that it shall be in vaine for vs to alledge that wee thought we did for the best, when we sought patrons and aduocates and inuented newe gods of our owne heade. All these thinges may perchance goe for good on mens behalfe, who deceiue themselves with their owne dotages and dreames: but yet hath GOD giuen his definitiue sentence vpon them, which hee will not repeale.

And to aggravate the euill, Moses addeth that they were newe gods, gods that were start up but a while agoe, gods whom their fathers knewe not: and so in effect, that they had done sacrifice; not vnto God, but vnto the diuel. When hee speaketh here of newe gods, whome the fathers feared not, and which came vp but tother day: thereby God doth the children of Israel to vnderstande, that they ought to haue stuck vnto him, because hee is the maker of the world, and there was none but hee onely from all euerlastingnesse, and that without him there is nothing firme and stable. Here therefore hee reprooueth the peoples foolishnesse in forging newe gods to themselues, euen such gods as had neuer bene known of afore. And heere wee must note, that Moses termeth al things by the name of Novelties, which are inuented by men, though the error haue continued neuer so long time. For it is a fondnesse to alledge that men haue done so heretofore a hundred yeares ago, and that things haue bene helde and obserued so beyonde all remembrance of man. For God passeth not for that. And why? Wee must goe to the euerlastingnesse which hath bene before the creation of the worlde. Men then can not preiudice Gods truth by their long possessing of their abuses. For God will still vse such style as wee see heere, namely, that it is all but newe stuffe. For in dede the ydols of whome mention is made heere, had bene worshipped long time afore. As for example, the Egyptians boasted themselves to haue bene often thousande yeares continuance before the creating of the worlde: they bare themselves in hande that they had their kingdome long afore the Moone was created in the skye. But what coulde all this boote them as in respect of their superstitions? Let vs marke well then, that the children of Israell, intermedling themselves with the abuses and corruptions of such as boasted themselves to haue lued after that fashion by the space of five hundred, a thousande, three thousande, yea and (as I sayde) ten thousande yeares before the creation of the worlde, are (notwithstanding all this) condemned of deuying of newe gods. Coule not they haue replied thus? This is not newe: for let it bee inquired, and it will bee founde that the Egyptians haue euer lued so: and Gods lawe may bee called newe in comparison, at leastwise to outwarde seeming. But (as I sayde afore) Moses had an eye to Gods euerlastingnesse. For if yee seeke there for the things that men haue deuised; yee shall finde them to bee nothing. And why so? For (as it is sayde in the Psalme) a thousande yeares are but as one day in Gods sight. In dede wee make great account of a thousande yeares: but that is because wee passe away in post through the worlde. For after a two or three turnes, wee bee sayne to returne from whence wee came. By reason of the shortnesse and brittlenesse of our life, wee make a greate matter of it if a thing haue continued fourtie or threescore yeares, and much more if it continue a hundred yeares. And if it holde out to a thousande: then wee thinke wee shoulde neuer make any more sticking at it, nor any more gayncsay it: but in dede all this is but mockerie, as I haue declared before.

1. Pet. 3. 8.

And truly GOD created the worlde to the ende that his maiestie shoulde bee seene both aboue and beneath, as in a looking glasse, and hee hath taught men that it is hee, to whom they ought to come. Adam knewe that. Neuerthelesse, most men haue falne away to superstition, insomuch that wee see that the seruice of GOD was imbedd euen in the life of Adam, and that it was sayne to bee reformed againe as it were by miracle. When the floude came, God cleansed the earth newe againe. And whereas hee referred but one onely housholde wherein there were but eight persons: it was a meane to bring home the worlde againe vnto him: that whereas they had all bene backeslyders afore, and had turned away from him, they ought as then to haue come to reason, and to haue reformed themselves by the things which they had seene with their eyes. But behold, there followed a newe falling away euen in the life of Noy. His owne children forsooke the seruice of GOD, and forged ydols to them selues. Nowe this ought of reason to bee taken for newe. But the mischief continueth still, and wee see that ydolatrie reigned euen in the time of Abraham. Four hundred yeares mo had passed at such time as the lawe was giuen, yea, there were passed about a five hundred yeares since the time that Abraham had bene an ydolater at home with his father. Superstition therefore had bene auncient, and was become as it were rotten. Men had wetered in it so long time, that they might well say, We in these dayes are not the first beginners thereof. No: but though an errorr bee once waxen olde, yet must not men make a custome of it, neither must they of a wicked custome make a continuall lawe or rule. Loec howe men beguyle themselves by sticking too stiffely to things that are grown into euill custome. For why? They beare them selues in hande, that if a thing haue bene vsed of long time, then it is lawfull for men to doe it. But an euill custome is nothing else than an errorr forgrowen. And it is so much the woorse and the more to bee misliked, because God hath bene the grieuoulyer offended by it. Wherefore let vs beware that wee drawe not things to a consequence, because they haue bene abused of long time: but let vs still returne backe to the originall.

And this is a verie necessarie poynt for vs in these dayes. For the Papistes affirme that the things which wee doe, are newe, and that they were inuented but a while agoe. Yea, but if wee aske them a prooffe of their antiquitie, what say they? That such things haue bene done nowe these five hundred yeares. Truly they lye most commonly with full mouth. For the thing which they holde as chiefe and most resolute, is not of so long continuance. If yee seek for their confession, or shrift, about a foure hundred yeares agoe, there was no lawe at all thereof. If yee looke for their transubstantiation, it is in like case. They make men believe that the breade is no more a materiall thing, but that it is God whome wee ought to worship. And that is spycke and spawne newe, I meane euen in accounting after the manner of men. In like case is it with all the residue. If wee looke vpon all the fashions which they holde at this day, surely they bee but a renuing of the things that were in olde tyme, and yet there is little or no resemblance in them. But let vs put the case it were to bee graunted them, that the forme of religion which they holde hath bene obserued by the space of a thousand yeates or mo. What will a thousand yeares helpe when wee come before GOD? They will not bee reckened for a day, nor for a minute, as I sayde afore. And where is then our true antiquitie? In Iesus Christ who is the beginning of all things, and to whome all things are to bee brought backe againe: In the liuing God, by whom our Lorde Iesus Christ is sent vnto vs, to make his will knowne vnto vs. There must wee bee grounded, if wee will haue the ancient faith. For in holding our selues to men, wee shall haue nothing but noueltie. Score wee vp neuer so many yeares, they will stande vs in no steede, for all passeth and glydeth away. But wee must haue him, which hath neither beginning nor ending, and his vchangeable truth must bee our rule.

When wee rest vpon that, then haue wee the ancient faith. And therefore wee at this day may well protest against the Papistes, Turkes, and Iewes themselves, that they bee backesliders, and haue withdrawn themselves from the true and pure religion, and that wee continue in the doctrine which hath bene followed in all ages, worshipping the God which created vs, which gaue forth his lawe by the hand of Moses, and which hath vttered himself most perfectly by the Gospel. Bring wee here any newe thing? Say wee that men must haue newe rules and newe fashions inuented by men as the Papistes doe? For all their Religion is grounded vpon these poyntes, namely, that they must keepe the traditions of their elders, that they must obserue the lawes of their mother holy Church, that the same must be taken in equall authoritie with the holy Scripture, and that the holy Ghost was not giuen fully enough to the Apostles, but that the perfection of things was reuealed afterwarde to a sort of hypocrites and I wote not to whome else. Those are things whereon the Papistes rest. The Turkes are altogether Renegates. The Iewes haue peruerted the lawe, and haue no more of it but the dead letter, because they haue refused Iesus Christ who is the soule thereof as Saint Paul termeth him. So then, wee may well protest, that our faith is auncient, for as much as it is grounded vpon Gods truth, who neuer chaunged ne varyeth, and that men haue not taught vs any thing on their owne head, but that wee haue the same God which hath vttered himselfe in all ages, and that wee followe the doctrine whereunto hee woulde haue men to holde themselves, which likewise is euerlasting. Thus much concerning the first poynt.

And as touching the mention that is made of the fathers, let vs marke that in this behalfe wee must in any wise vse discretion, that wee take not those indifferently for our fathers, which could not beget vs by the worde of God. For the Egyptians and all the Infidels of the worlde coulde wel ynough say, Our fathers liued so, so haue they taught vs, wee holde our religion of them: and such sayings might wel bee set as a sheelde to defende them. But because God disclaime their fathers, therefore coulde that excuse stande them in no steede. For God presupposeth heere that hee had called to him both Abraham and the Patriarkes, and also that they had helde the true religion, which thing did put a difference betwene them and the rest of the whole worlde.

Againe, whereas hee sayeth, that they had worshipped gods whome their fathers feared: nor: it is all one as if hee shoulde vprayd them, saying; What? I adopted and choose your fathers to bee my children, and they worshipped mee as their God, and will you nowe forsake mee? To bee short, wee must holde this for a generall rule, our fathers are those whome God hath reputed, and aduowed to bee his children.

Therefore whosoever seeketh any other fathers than the children of God, shall finde nothing but bastardie. And at that poynt are the Papistes. For in speaking of the fathers, they consider not that the Apostles and such other as haue bene begotten by the pure doctrine of the Gospel, are our true fathers: but they call hypocrites, and dreamers, yea and scornors of GOD which haue turned all things vpside downe, their fathers. They alledge the great Asses which neuer tasted any whit of the holy Scripture; so that if a man marke what manner of fathers they auouche, surely it is so fonde a thing, that they bee woorthie to bee laughed to scorne for it euen of little babes. True it is that for honours sake they will say that Saint Austine, S. Ambrose, and Saint Bernarde are their fathers: but if any good thing be alledged that is founde in them, they abhorre that: in so much that if they had them aliae at this day, they woulde burne them as well as they doe the Martyrs, whom wee see them handle most cruelly. Therefore (as I sayde afore) it behoueth vs to walke discretely in that behalfe, and to consider who bee our true fathers that wee may followe them: namely those whome God auoweth for his children, and haue begotten vs by his worde, which haue helde vs to it, and which haue taught vs it. But as soone as this incorruptible seede of saluation is marred; by and by there is no more fatherhood. And herein wee must practise Saint Pauls saying, which is, that all kindred proceedeth of God. Let vs then referre all kindred vnto God, and so shall wee not bee astamed. But if euery man will needes followe his owne fathers without difference; hee shall finde that when the blynde followeth the blynde, both of them fall into the pit and breake their neckes together. At that poynt poynre are all they which stande stiffely in their owne opinion against God, & leane to y things which haue bene deuised by men. Therefore let vs bee well aduised, and seeing GOD hath graunted vs the grace to haue his gospel planted once among vs, let vs continue in all purenesse, holding our selues wholly vnto him, that there may bee a conformitie and agreement betwene vs and those that haue shewed vs the right way. Thus yee see in effect what wee haue to remember vpon this text, where Moses blameth the Iewes for starting backe, & for deuising of new gods which had not bene feared among their fathers.

Yea and wee must bethinke vs of that which is sayd in the seconde Chapter of Ieremy. Go your wayes (sayth hee) into all the countreys a farre off, get ye ouer the sea, seeke throughout all the yles, and see if there be any people that forsaketh their gods: yet are they no gods, they bee but ydoles and dead thinges: but you haue forsaken mee, euen mee who am the fountaine of liuing water. God sheweth there that ydolaters are wilful in their leasings; insomuch that although the diuell haue so bewitched them that they bee voyde of discretion and reason, & cannot iudge of any thing: yet notwithstanding they be wedded still to their follies. And because they thinke they do well, they holde them to it, and they can by no meanes bee turned from it. Yee shall see them as greatly bent to their willes, as may bee, and yet they haue no foundation nor prooff thereof. Now then, that we which haue knowne Gods truth; which are sure that it is hee which created and shaped vs, and which hath vttered himselfe to vs by his lawe, by his Prophets, and by his Gospel; that wee which haue such warrant and certeinie, that wee which haue the fathers & the greatesse crowde of witnesses to guyde vs (as the Apostle termeth them in the Epistle to the Hebrewes): that wee which after the Apostles haue also had the Martyrs & those which haue receiued the Gospel with pure obedience, & followed the simplicitie thereof: that we (I say) should yet notwithstanding loue better the corruption, dung, & filthines brought in by men, & that we should find in our hearts to haue Gods word falsified among vs; what a thing were that? Must it not needes be that wee be as it were mad, when we be o vnstedfast & light mynded, as to start away from that which is certaine and infallible? After that maner then must wee put this text in vres, to y intent we be not accused before God, as flectors of new gods which were not knowen to our fathers, & which came vp but a while agoe.

The word that Moses vseth here betokeneth properly to stand in awe, to feare, or to tremble before God. Wherby he sheweth that Gods maiestie ought to bee so dreaded of vs, y we should stoope vnto it, & be cast down & humbled at it. Not that God would haue vs to be afrayd of it, for we can neuer serue him with our good will, & with a pure & free heart, if wee conceiue such a feare of him as shal make vs to flee from him. But there are two things in the seruice of God, as is shewed vs in the Psalme which shal be song anon, namely that in coming vnto God, wee must bee touched with a certeine feare, to yeeld him his due reuerence. That is one point. And therewithall wee must also consider his goodnes, that wee may take courage to come vnto him, & be bold to cal vpon him, nor douting but that he heareth vs, & that we shalbe wel accepted at his hand. Marke wel therefore what this word Feare, importeth, that wee may learne to hold our selues vnder the obedience of our God with such awe as none of vs may take leaue to runne astray, as we see men do, whose boldnes is such that they sing abroad euery where, because they make but a sporte & a dalyance of God. Therefore let vs beware that wee be not so rude as to daly with so great a Lorde; but rather let vs be seasoned with such a feare aforehand, as may alwayes hold vs in awe: and yet notwithstanding not cause vs to cease fro worshiping of our God, in such sort as hee may be amyable to vs, and we may praise boldly to him knowing well that he will receiue vs with pittie, as a father doth his children, seeing hee calleth vs to him before we come.

Nowe in the ende Moses sayeth, that they offered sacrifice to diuels & not vnto God. This saying may seeme rough and hard at the first sight. For if a man had asked the heathen concerning their intent, they would haue sayd by & by, We knowe there is one chiefe God: but wee haue many gods because the maiestie of God is spred out euery where. And therefore forasmuch as we cannot attaine to so high a thing, it behooueth vs to haue meanes. That is the cause why they forged such a multitude of gods. As for the diuels, they abhorred them. The Heathen could as will skill as the Papistes to say, Wee intende not to haue ought to doe with the diuels, fauoring the forcerers, ( for there haue euer bene some such ) but I speake as touching their common religion: and it is certaine that all of them woulde haue protested, Our will is to serue God. But what is answered them here by the mouth of Moses, who is appoynted Iudge with full authoritie, and is as the instrument of the holy Ghost? Ye serue the diuel. Wee see then that all their excuses shall stande them in no steede, and that this must holde to the condemnation of the whole worlde, namely, that as soone as men swaue neuer so litle from y pure truth, it is a seruing of the diuel, and the diuel hath a parte in all their doings: for God refuseth euery whit of it. And it is a text well worthy to bee noted, to the intent that the ignorant wretches may bee wakened, and vnderstande that in grounding themselves vpon their owne good intences, they doe nothing else but increase Gods vengeance vpon their heads, without amending their case thereby. Wherefore let vs on our syde vtterly abhorre all that euer is contrarie to the seruice of God, & make much of the fauour that hath bene shewed vs in his deliuering of vs from such a bottomlesse pit. We haue thought our selues to haue done maruellously well in seruing of ydols; we haue esteemed it an Angels life to trot vp and down from altar to altar, and from chappel to chappel, to babble before puppets, to heare Masses, and to set our mindes vpon such other gewgawes. But in the meane while, beholde, God telleth vs that wee ferued the diuel. It is a horrible thing for vs to heare him say so. Therefore let vs looke that wee condemne our ydolatries, and bee fery that wee haue so prouoked Gods wrath against vs. And therewithall let vs consider the inestimable good which he hath done vs, in reaching vs his hande to lift vs out of the gulfe wherein wee were plunged. That is the thing which wee haue to remember vpon this Text. And therefore let vs be thoroughly fetled in the pure doctrine, and in the simplicitie of the holy Scripture. For why? As long as wee holde that rule, wee bee sure that GOD will allowe of the seruice which wee doe vnto him. But if wee mingle any thing with it of our owne fancies, or if we borrowe any thing of men; all is marde and corrupted, and the diuel is forthwith put in possession of all that euer wee doe, and God renoueth vs, according to this saying of his by the Prophet Ezechiel. Hence (sayeth he) I giue ouer my part, I will haue neither litle nor much to doe in this case, I require no more of you: yee thinke to serue mee and your ydoles together, but I renounce you and giue you ouer quite and cleane to the diuell: for I intende not that you shall mingle mee with your dung and filthinesse. Thus you see in effect what Moses meant to declare heere.

Nowe hee addeth, that the people forgate the God which had begotten them, and the mightie one which had created and shaped them. Hee vlteth still the same worde which I haue translated before, and which signifieth properly a Rocke. And God is so termed, because we be preferred, and mayntained by his power, as if a house were grounded and buylded vpon a rocke. Whereas hee sayeth that the people had forgotten the God which had begotten them, it is to bereaue them of all excuse of ignorance. For the Heathen might well haue sayde that they had neuer tasted a whit of the true religion, and that their weltring after that manner in their owne dorages, was for want of teaching, and that it is no woonder though a blynd man stumble or goe astray in the darke. The Heathen might haue allegede after that sort for themselves. But as for those to whome the lawe had bin giuen, there was no such starting hole for them. For God had drawn their father Abraham from the ydolatrie wherein he liued, as is declared in the last Chapter of Iosua. Hereupon, about a foure hundred yeres after, he put them the better in mynde againe that he was the liuing God. And afterward he did set down his wil euen in writing. It was his minde that it should bee a president of authoritie whereby to knit a mutuall agreement betwene him and them, as if hee should say, I wil bee your father, and bee you my children. Seeing then that the people of Israel were taught after that fashion, and God vttered himselfe so familiarly vnto them; what can they say, or what excuse can they alledge, for their turning away to the superstitious of the Heathen, and for their peruerting of the trueth, which was so throughly known vnto them, and yet they turned it into lyes, insomuch as they fell to the quenching of the light of saluation, and woulde needes goe wilfully and wittingly astray, seeking their owne destruction euen after that God had reached them his hande, and shewed them the way of saluation? According whereunto wee haue seene the protestation that Moses made in the thirtieth Chapter, saying: This is the way, walke therein. Is it not too shamefull a rebelliousnesse, when folke will so despise God and not sticke vnto him? Sothen, it is not causelesse that they bee accused in this text to haue forgotten the GOD which shaped them. And therefore let vs marke well, that when wee haue once known God, the same ought to suffice to holde vs in continuall obedience towards him, if wee were not too too vnthankfull. Nothing ought to holde vs so sure as the knowing of GOD. For then may wee say, This is our GOD, wee haue no dout nor misweening of him, as they haue which deceiue themselves by following their owne imaginations, but wee haue the certaine trueth which cannot beguile vs. Had we therefore well profited in the knowledge of GOD, surely it woulde suffice to holde vs in awe. And although wee were neuer so fere turmyled on all sydes, so as the diuell did cast neuer so many stumbling blockes in our wayes, and wee had neuer so many occasions giuen to turne vs asyde, and wee see neuer so greate diuersitie of opinions and whatsoever else is possible: surely if wee haue profited in Gods schoole, and knowe him as wee ought to doe, we shall neuer bee turned away from him. And that is Saint Pauls meaning where hee sayeth, that such as are well grounded in the Gospell, shall no more bee like little babes that wilbee allured at the shewing of an apple, and turne their heads this way and that way after it, and that if a man put a roye in their head, by and by they bee carryed away with it, and forget the thing which they were in loue withall a litle afore. S. Paul sayth that if wee bee well fetled in the Gospell, wee shall not bee any more so led by the billes, neither shall the diuell bee able to woork vs such illusions, but that wee shall abyde vnanquishable, and hee shall gayne nothing at our hands. For our faith shall bee stedfast.

Also on the contrarie parte, if wee doe estrange ourselves from GOD, after wee haue once known him, it betokeneth a desperate malice in vs, it is not for vs to cloke the matter as then, for all that wee can alleage wilbee to no purpose. Then is it a thrusting of GOD vnder our foote, if after his shewing of him selfe vnto vs, wee corrupt the purenesse of his woorde in chaunging the Religion which hee hath giuen vnto vs, and in leauing the rule which it behooued vs to followe. Nowe wee see the meaning of Moses. And therefore seeing that God hath bene so gracious to vs as to reueale his will vnto vs, and sheweth vs that hee is the liuing God: let vs take heed that wee wauer not any more, ne bee any more as reedies that yeeld to euery wynde, but that wee continue stedfast in the fayth wee haue receiued by his worde, least it bee cast in our teeth that wee haue forgotten him with all the benefites which wee haue receiued at his hande.

And heere Moses setteth not downe singly the worde God, but sayeth, The God which begate thee, she mightie one which shapeth thee. Here Moses telleth the people of Israell, that they had good cause to holde him for their God, if they had not quyte and cleane forgotten the gracious goodnesse which they had earst founde in him by experience. And that is a thing well woorthie to bee weyed. For it is Gods will not onely to bee known in his beeing or in his name, but also to shewe himselfe to vs by his deedes, so as wee haue true recordes of his power, goodnesse, mercie, and iustice. Seeing then that God hath so shewed himselfe to vs, what is our vnthankfulnesse if wee knowe him not? Is it not too shamefull? Therefore wee must alwayes consider, that God hath caused it to be declared vnto vs, not onely that it is hee whome wee ought to feare, and to whome wee ought to be subiect without any further prooffe, but also that therewithall it is hee that hath begotten vs. And this is to be marked yet better of vs, than it was of the men of olde time vnder the lawe. For wee haue our Lorde Iesus Christ the onely sonne, into whose bodie wee be grafted that we may become the sonnes of God. Therefore the body of the tree and roote of our adoption, is that wee be made the brethren of our Lorde Iesus Christ. For beeing begotten of God, wee be nourished and sustayned by the doctrine of his Gospel. Nowe if wee consider what wee were before, namely, the children of Adam and heires of euerlasting cursednesse: and also if wee haue an eye to those whome God suffereth to runne into destruction, it will yeelde the greater glory to the fauour which hee sheweth vs. Seeing then that God doeth nowe draw vs to him to bee his owne, and to bee of his housholde, shall wee sling away from him? Shall wee rather followe ydoles which wee are not acquainted with? Wee see then as nowe, that whereas Moses doeth so grieuously blame the children of Israell, hee doeth it not without cause, considering the experience which they had had of Gods goodnesse, power and iustice, and yet that they had made no reckoning of it.

In respect wherof hee sayeth that God saue it and was angrie at it, euen because of the misbehaviour of his sonnes and daughters. This sentence is a confirmation of my former saying. For whereas the Iewes are termed the children of God, it is not in way of honour, but rather to shewe that they were guilic of such vnfaith-fulnesse as to forsake their God, and to rebell against him, and to worke him such spyte, as that they had leuer choofe the deuil than him. Thus yee see howe wee ought to ioyne these two things together, namely, that God is the mightie one which begate vs, and of whom wee holde all things: and therewithall that hee hath receiued vs and adopted vs to be his children. But wee shall pay full deare for it, if wee continue not in his obedience. The thing then wherunto wee must come backe, is that if God cannot beare with the wickednes of the world, ne doeth forgiue the vnbeleeuers which haue sinned without the knowledge of his wil: needes must wee bee dubble punished, and needes must more horrible vengeance light vpon our heads, who haue bene faithfully instructed to drawe nigh vnto him, and taught that hee hath nourished vs in his lappe as his owne children, and yet notwithstanding wee haue forsaken him. And that is Saint Pauls meaning where hee sayeth, that they which haue sinned without the lawe, shall perishe neuerthelesse for all that: and that they which haue offended after warning giuen by knowledge of the lawe, shall haue the forer damnation, accordingly also as our Lorde Iesus sayeth, that the seruant which hath done amisse though it were through vnskilfulnesse, shall not sayle to be punished for it: because hee ought to haue inquired his masters will. If a seruant say; I wist it not: And knowest thou not that I am thy master? Oughtest thou not to inquire my will? But much more ought God to haue such prebeminence ouer his creatures. And if they that haue offended so through ignorance are not excused, what shall become of vs which knowe the will of our GOD? If wee fall to stryuing against him, to spyte him as it were of set purpose and of prepensed malice and frowardnesse; if wee fall to dashing at him with our hornes, so as wee set our selues against his righteoufnesse and transgresse his whole doctrine: must not so greate and so diuelish headdinesse bee punished much more grieuously? In that respect is it sayde heere that God was prouoked to anger with the transgression of his sonnes and daughters: as who shoulde say; True it is that God is greatly offended throughout the whole worlde: but hee had reserued a people to himselfe, whome hee had gathered together for his owne inheritance, and euen they are growen out of kynde: and is not that a thing to moue Gods vengeance the more?

Nowe let vs apply this doctrine to our owne vse. And sith wee see howe the wretched worlde is blynded nowe adayes, let vs consider thus with our selues; Well, the Papistes shall not sayle to be condemned. And if wee condemne them, can they scape the handle of GOD? That is vnpossible. But let vs first of all play the Iudges towards ourselues, and considert that GOD hauing called vs to bee his children, will be knowne to be our father, and wil be serued & worshipped at our hands. And therefore when fouer we happen to ouer-shoote our selues, and to giue ouer  $\bar{y}$  doctrine wherein we haue bin once trayned. Gods wrath must needs be kindled against vs, & without cōpariſō much more grieuouſly than againſt the ſilly ignorant and vnbeleeuing ſort. Seeing then that we be Gods children, & he hath ſet his markes vpon vs, & neuer ceaſeth to allure vs by gentlenes: let vs not turne away from him, but let his ſo doing prouoke vs to honor him, and to ſerue him in ſuch wiſe, as he may rake pleaſure in vs, and delight to doe vs good, and continue the increaſe of his grace and benefites more & more towardes vs.

But nowe let vs fall downe before the maiſtic of our good God with acknowledgement of our ſinnes, praying him not to lay them to our charge, but to drawe vs to him continually as long as wee bee in this worlde, correcting our vyces and infirmities, and ridding vs from all the corruptnes of our fleſh, and ſtil bearing with vs till hee haue fully reformed vs according to his righteousnes, and raken vs quyte & cleane our of this corruptible life. And ſo let vs all ſay, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

On Thursday the iiii. of Iune, 1556.

The CLXXXIII. Sermon which is the ſixt vpon the two & thirtiſh Chaper.

20 So he ſayd, I will hyde my face from them, and ſee what ſhall befall them. For they bee a fickel generation, children in whome there is no ſtedfaſtnes.

21 They haue moued mee to ielouizie by the thing that is not god, and they haue prouoked mee to diſpleaſure with their vanities. And I [likewiſe] will moue them to ielouizie by them which are no people, and by a fooliſh nation will I prouoke them to indignation.

22 For the fire is kindled in my wrath, and ſhal burne to the verie bottome of the pitte, and deuowre the lande with the fruite thereof, and burne vp the foundations of the mountaines.

VE ſawe yeſterday how God is more grieuouſly diſpleaſed, when ſuch as ought to honour and ſerue him, do forſake him, than when it is done by ſilly ignorant vnbeleeuers. And not without cauſe. For God adoprēth vs with this condition; that his glorie ſhould thynē forth in vs: and therefore muſt it not needes be a dubbling of the offence, when wee be a reproche to him? If a father bee deſpyed in his owne houſe, euen by thoſe whome he hath begotten, will it not grieue him much woorſe, than if ſome one of his neighbours ſhoulde miſuſe him? Seeing then that God hath vouchſafed to chooſe vs to be his children, and hath done vs the honour whereof wee were not worthe: let vs beware that our conuerſation bee ſuch, as our faultes and miſdeedes may not prouoke him, nor the thing befall vs which Moſes addeth here, namely, that he will hyde away his face. Nowe by this ſaying the Scripture meaneth that when GOD hath vſed patience in bearing long with men, winking at their vyces, and ceaſing not to doe them good, and yet ſeeth that they bee altogether ſet vpon ſtubborneſſe and vnreformable: hee giueth them ouer for ſuch as they bee. Nowe all our welfare and happineſſe lyeth in Gods defending of vs, and in his caring for vs. For if hee forget vs and vouchſafe not to ſuccour vs, and to bee our defence, in what talking are wee? It were better for vs to bee deſtroyed our of hande, than to linger beeing out of the proteſtion of our God. Therefore heere is a horrible threat, and ſuch a one as ought to make vs to quake, when as it is ſayd that when GOD hath tarryed a long tyme, hee will withdrawe himſelfe for our vter alienating of him away from vs.

Wee haue ſcene heere afore, howe GOD vſed long ſufferance and gaue not ouer his people at the firſt daſh: but yet that at length hee was fayne to ſhewe that hee will not that his goodneſſe ſhoulde bee abuſed after that faſhion, nor that men ſhoulde harden their heartes by flattering themſelues, when hee puniſheth them not our of hande.

Therefore let vs looke to our ſelues. For if wee haue haue offended God, although hee list not vpe his hande to punish vs for it at the first instant, yet must not that make vs to fall asleepe . Let vs ( I say ) preuent the vengeance of our God: for if hee be patient and beare with vs, it is to winne vs by his gracious goodnesse and gentleness, as S. Paul declareth in the second to the Romanes . The more then that God spareth vs, the more let vs take warning to turne againe vnto him, and let it make vs ashamed that we hauing so good a father, haue bene so stubborn against him. And if we will needes still welter in our owne filthinesse, and heape naughtinesse vpon naughtinesse, so as there is no ende nor measure of our transgressions: then must G O D be faine to execute the thing which he speaketh heere by Moses, namely, Hyde a way his face; that is to say, that after hee hath hadde a care of our welfare, and continued in dooing vs good; he will at length giue vs ouer, and shew that he is no longer bounde vnto vs, and that although hee spare vs for a time, it is not his intent to bolster vs continually in our euill dooings . Wherefore let vs bee afrayde of this threate: and so long as G O D maketh vs to perceiue that he beholdeth vs with pitie, let vs walke as before his eyes, as though he were euer present with vs, and in all our thoughtes, wordes, and deedes, let vs haue our eyes still vpon him.

But by the way we haue to marke, that God hydeth not his eyes in such sort, but that hee seeth and marketh all mens dooings, and dealings . But it is so sayde, because God seemeth to shrinke away and to haue no more care of vs, when he succoureth vs not at our neede . For if aduerfities and afflictions oppress vs, and wee flee vnto God; and yet finde no ease, but pine away still continually: it can not be but that according to our vnderstanding, we must needs imagine that G O D hath quite forgotten vs, and that he regardeth vs not any more . After this maner doeth Moses tell vs heere, that God hydeth away his face . Furthermore we must vnderstande, that when G O D hath once forsaken vs, there neuer happeneth any euill vnto vs, but it cometh from him: that is to say, all the afflictions which wee feele are punishmentes from his hande . We must not then thinke that G O D letereth men alone at all aduerture when he punisheth them for their offences, but rather that hee is then neere them, to make them feele his power, shewing himselfe a Iudge of their wicked deedes. But as for to holde them in hysticion, or to defende them; in that behalfe he threatneth himselfe to be absent, that is to say, that they shall not perceiue any more that he broodeth them vnder his winges, according to the similitude which he had vsed afore.

And it is sayde expressly, That hee will see what their ende will be . Heere G O D speakes after the manner of men: for hee knewe all things aforehande euen before the creating of the worlde, and he needeth not to be taught by time as mortall wights doe . But forasmuch as we can not attayne to the heighth of Gods maiestie, hee is faine to make himselfe like vnto vs, and all for our instruction and edification. It is all one therefore as if he should say to such as despised him, Goe too, yee make no account for me, I behaue myselfe familiarly towards you, and you haue abused that grace of mine; I haue required to be serued and honored of you, and you haue done mee all the shame ye coulde deuise: you haue borne your felues in hande that I was tyed vnto you, and that I was of necessity to continue a father towards you without ceasing, notwithstanding that you played the rebellious children against mee . But nowe will I giue you ouer for such as you be: doe the worst yee can, and at length yee shall finde what it is to haue forsaken mee . I will hide myselfe from you, that is to say, I will giue you ouer . In steede of maintaining and defending you as I haue done heere tofore, I vtterly renounce all acquaintance with you . See nowe what your state shall be, and I also will see what your ende will bee, that is to say, it shall bee percieued in what plyght men are, when I haue no longer care of them . G O D then speaketh heere not so much of his owne knowledge, as of that which shall be scene and percieued in the ende by experience . For (as I sayde afore) G O D is not to be taught by the change of things, (for all things were present with him before the making of the worlde) but heere he declareth, that when folke are so forsaken, it will appeare by them that all the happinesse of man consisteth in beeing preferred by G O D: and that on the contrary part, they bee most wretched and vnhappy, when God hath giuen them ouer .

And hee addeth the reason. It is a sickle and frowarde generation, Children in whose there is no earnest . The first worde that Moses vseth heere, commeth of a verbe which signifieth to turne and returne . And so it is as much as if he should say, It is a generation of wickednesse; for he vseth the plural number: and it importeth as much as if he should say, It is a frowarde and cursed generation, or else a mutable and changing generation, and whereof there is no holde; nowe heere; nowe there: whereby is vnterred not onely the vnconstancie, but also the disloyaltie of that people. He addeth that there was no stedfastnesse in them . The worde be-tokeneth vprightnesse, whereby is meant both loyaltie and faithfulness . To be short, G O D declareth heere, that he hadde tryed his people too much, and that in the ende it appeared that there was no vprightnesse in them, but all manner of treason and trecherie . Forasmuch therefore as hee founde such leaudenesse in them, hee sayeth hee will hyde himselfe from them . But we must call to minde againe what I haue sayde afore; to witte, that for a time G O D may fauour vs and beare with vs, and spare vs though we deserue to haue rigour towards vs: but when hee is so patient, it is to make vs diligent in examining our owne faulces, and to call our felues dayly to account, and to looke neerely to the thinges which are to be found fault with, in vs. Also let vs marke well the saying that hath bene alleaged out of Saint Paul, howe that God allureth vs to amendment by penitencie, when hee punisheth vs not at the first, according to our deservings. Sith the case standeth so, whensoever God sheweth himselfe fauourable and gracious towardes vs, let euery of vs consider howe hee hath liued; and if we haue abused the benefites which he hath bestowed vpon vs, let vs condemne ourselues for it, and be lorry for our finnes, and returne to him with such sorro we as may appeare to be vnfaigned. That is the thing which we haue to remember in the first place. But if we will needes discharge ourselues by flatterie, to take leaue to doe euill: then must hee needes execute his vnreuoicable sentence of hyding away his face from vs after he hath borne long ynough with vs, and of seeing what will become of vs, and he must needes let vs rotte in our wretchednesse, forasmuch as we could not abide that hee should reach our his hande to helpe vs. And in any wise let vs marke that GOD can not away with hypocritise in men: for among other thinges he requireth foundenesse and trueth in vs, that our conuersation should be vtterly voide of all dubble meaning, and that we should not be dissemblers before him. True it is that our nature is full of fainednesse, as we see howe Jeremy reporteth of mans heart, that it is forwarde and besnarled with all naughtinesse, and that it is euen as a bottomlesse pit. And therefore we must change, if we will haue God to admit and allowe vs for his children: and whereas we be inclined to euill, so as there is nothing but bitternesse and hardnesse of heart in vs, we must pray vnto God to indewe vs with his holy spirite, who is the spirite of constancie, and to ridde vs in such sort from all our naughtinesse and vnfaithfulnessse, as we may walke before him in pure and vndefiled foundnesse. Thus yee see what we haue to remember vpon this place.

Nowe it is saide further, That forasmuch as the Children of Israell had prouoked GOD so ielozie by the thing that was not god, and prouoked him by their leaxings through the superstitions which they hadde devised: he also would prouoke them by a people which was no people, and moue them to ielozie by a Nation that was no Nation. Heere GOD speake againe after the maner of men, like as if a man seeing his wife so wicked and leaudely giuen that he could not restraîne her, should say, Well, I must needes diuorce her, and to doe her the more disgrace I will take some chamber-mayde in her steede, to occupie her place. Now then if a wife haue lued in honorable state with her husbände, and afterwarde behaue her selfe so naughlily and stubbornly, that hee casteth her off, and thereupon taketh some poore wench that was of no estimation, and vsiect her as his married wife, his former wife will take the more spyte and grieue at it, as who would say, What? Shall such a one now occupie my place? Must I be thrust out for her? Must I be pointed at with euery mannes finger and be shamed and ill spoken of euery where? After that manner is this text to be vnderstoode. For thus doeth GOD vtter his minde. What? They haue prouoked mee to Ielozie by the thing that is no god: I am the liuing GOD, and besides that, they ought in reason to take mee for their father, because I haue shewed my selfe so towardes them, declaring howe deerely I loued them, in that I haue preferred them before all other Nations of the worlde: and yet hereupon haue they forged Idolles. But there is but one GOD: and therefore when men turne away from him, they must needes forge ydolles after their owne imaginations. Thus haue they prouoked me to ielozie by the thing which was not god.

And a fterwarde he addeth, their vanities. As if he should say, If a man marke what their superstitions are, and whereon they be grounded: he shall finde them to be nothing else but lyes and deceites. Yet haue they prouoked mee with them sayeth he: and nowe will I also haue my reuenge, for I will prouoke them by a people which is not a people, and by a nation which is not a nation, that is to say, which are not esteemed to be of any reputation. I will then take to me such folke as are nowe of no estimation, and set them in the same degree of honour wherein these thankelesse folke were before, which haue so abused the fatherly loue that I bare towardes them. This thing came not to passe out of hande, but was then accomplished when the Gospell was spredde throughout the whole worlde. True it is that in part God gaue some tokens of these thinges aforehande, in exalting the Assyrians and Chaldees about those which boasted themselues to be the holy offspring and kingly priesthoode: but yet was not this definitiue sentence performed to the full, vntill the coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ. God (I say) shewed partly some signe heereof aforehande, at such time as the people of Israell were scattered, brought to desolation, carried away into strange countryes, and there kept as banished wretches without order vnder the flauerie of cruell tyrannie. For euen then did GOD beginne aforehande to make them perceiue, that his threatening of them to prouoke them by a people which was no people, was not in vaine. For first the Assyrians and afterwarde the Chaldees hadde the honour to reigne ouer the children of Abraham, which vaunted themselues to be at libertie, but they were bondeslaues of sinne. And forasmuch as they had withdrawn themselues from the obedience of GOD, it was good reason that they should be vnder the bondage of Tyrans. GOD then gaue a certaine signe of fauour to those that hadde bene vnbeleeuers, when hee magnified the heathen so much, euen as though hee had bene minded to disanull the promise which he had made to those which had cast boasted themselues to be his people, and had purposed to put them to vtter shame. Yet notwithstanding the Chaldees and Assyrians

Exod. 19. 6.

Ioh. 8. 33. 34

did not so reigne ouer the children of GOD, that they could preiudice their saluation. Neither could the Syrians doe it, nor any of all the other nations that troubled them (as wee see in the time of the Iudges) & which invaded the Lande of Chanaan and brought the children of Israell vnder tribute and subiection. For euen then although the children of Israell were oppressed, and cast downe, as it were, and thrust vnder foote, and their neighbours which were heathen and Infidelles had their full scope: yet notwithstanding, Gods adoption abode still in the lineage of Abraham, and the case of those that reigned ouer them was neuer a whit the better for it, because they ceased not to serue their ydolles still. But when the Gospell was preached openly to the worlde, then did we succede in the place of those which hadde bene heires of the promise afore, accordingly as Saint Paule likeneth vs to wilde flipp which are grafed into a good stocke, euen so is it with vs. For we be but things borne out of time, if wee be compared with the Iewes who were after a sorte the naturall children of God. Howbeit forasmuch as GOD had promised Abraham that he would be the sauour of his offspring, the same belonged to all such as were descended of him, accordingly also as Saint Peter telleth them, You be the children of the prophetes, and heires of the promise: as who shoulde say that saluation belonged to them, euen by true and lawefull succession: but when as they did rute off themselves from it by their owne vnthankfulness, then did GOD call vs vnto him. True it is that if the Iewes had receiued our Lorde Iesus Christ, yet had the doctrine of the Gospell bin sprede abroade neuer thelesse, throughout the worlde, and so shoulde wee haue bene ioyned and knit together in one. But forasmuch as the Iewes conueyed themselves out of the householde and Church of God, and imbraced not the grace which was offered vnto them: their roome became emptie, and so wee entred thereinto, inasmuch as GOD hath nowe banished them, to the intent to make as it were a new house. And therefore S. Paul applyeth this text to his owne time. For hee sayeth that as then the Iewes had too greatly prouoked Gods iualozie by their ydolatries, and that God was faine to raise vp a people which was no people, or a nation which was not reputed as a Nation, which thing was done to make them the more ashamed of their despising of the benefit which had bene profered vnto them. Truly, the Iewes had not at that time any outwarde ydolatri. When Iesus Christ came into the world, the Temple of Ierusalem was not defiled with any ydolles, sacrifices were made there according to the Lawe of Moses: and yet for all that there was nothing but contempt of God & wickednesse, it was a piteous case to see the great number of grosse superstitions, and all the purenesse of the Lawe was corrupted.

Let vs marke well therefore y men are counted ydolaters, not only when they haue puppets of stone, of wood, or of painters worke, but also when they sticke not to the pure simplicitie of Gods word, but mingle their owne superstitions with the doctrine of saluation, ouershooting themselves and turning away to al euil. After that manner was GOD prouoked to iualozie by the Iewes, but specially by their refusing of Iesus Christ, who is the image of the father. For whosoever hath not the sonne (sayth Saint Iohn) hath not the father. And why? Because the whole fulnesse of the Godheade dwelleth in our Lorde Iesus Christ. Seeing then that the Iewes despised the onely sonne, who was the image of the father, seeing they would not accept him which was ordained to be souereigne king, and of whom also it is sayde in the Psalme, Kisse the sonne; whereby men are commanded to doe him homage and to kneele downe vnto him as it is sayde in other textes: seeing that the Iewes haue so refused Iesus Christ, seeing they haue so giuen ouer the true Religion; they haue made themselves vter strangers to the liuing GOD which had chosen and adopted them. To bee short, if we take not Iesus Christ for our GOD, surely wee haue nothing else but an ydoll. As for example, the Turkes at this day doe make greate bragges that they worshippe the GOD which created heauen and earth. What is their God? He is but an ydoll. The Iewes can well ynough say; our meaning is to serue the God which gaue vs his Lawe by the hande of Moses, and spake by the prophetes. Their God is but an ydoll. And why? For the Godheade which is in Iesus Christ is vnknown vnto them. But it is sayde that the whole fulnesse of the Godheade dwelleth in him, yea euen perfectly and in verie substance, without any manner of shadowes or figures. Seeing then that GOD hath fully reueiled himselfe to vs in our Lorde Iesus Christ, and will haue his face to bee seene there: surely we can not boast that we haue the true God, vnlesse our Lorde Iesus Christ reigne among vs, and be so honoured of vs that wee sticke thoroughly to him and rest wholly vpon him. Nowe the Iewes denied him and vterly disclaymed him: by meane whereof they prouoked GOD to iualozie, and there remayneth nothing with them but folly and false imagination whereby they haue deceiued and beguiled themselves. And therefore not without cause doeth Saint Paule alleadge this Text, saying: Seeing that the Iewes haue prouoked Gods wrath by refusing to imbrace his onely sonne: therefore hath he raysed vpe a people which was nothing afore.

And heere we see yet much better the thing which I tolde you afore, namely that GOD vsed long sufferance towards such as were worthy to haue bene thundered vpon out of hande: for betwene the Lawe and our Lorde Iesus Christ there were about two thousande yeeres. And if wee reckon the yeeres, the Iewes began to meddle with the infections & filthinesse of the heathen by setting vp of ydols by and by after y death of Iosua. Ye see then how God suffered aboue eighteene hundred yeeres to passe, wayting still for some amendment.

Not that he difsembled with them, for he chaſtiſed them to put them in minde of their faults. And they returned vnto him . But yet by and by after they fell away newe againe . Inſomuch that when they had acknowledged that thoſe harmes befell them for their finnes ſakes , and had giuen ſome token of repentance : by and by, or within a while after they fell to their olde byaſſe againe : and God likewiſe fell to puniſhing them newe againe . At the laſt came the captiuitie of Babylon which is deſcribed to haue bene ſo horrible and vnhappie , that it baniſhed them out of the Lande which hee had promiſed them for their inheritance, and they were driuen out of their owne houſes . Neuertheleſſe, in the ende G O D pitied them and brought them home againe . Notwithſtanding, they were no ſooner come home into their natie country, and reſtored to libertie , but by and by they became againe worſe than before . Therefore was G O D alſo faine to puniſh them with puniſhment vpon puniſhment euen to the vttermoſt . Then came our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt to remedie all their diſeaſes, in reſpect whereof he is juſtly called euen the reſurrection of the dead . For although the Iewes had then bene all ſcattered abroad, yet would God haue gathered them home againe to him by the hande of his ſonne, if they hadde knowne the day of their viſitation . But they well bewray that they were wilfully bent againſt G O D , and that there is nothing but bitterneſſe and venime, yea and diuelliſh rage in them . For it ſufficed them not to haue ſcorned the grace which was offered vnto them, and the redemption which they had pretended to haue longed for ſo greatly ; but they did alſo crucifie the Redeemer which was ſent vnto them . Forasmuch therefore as the Iewes did vtterly reſuſe all the grace of God: the Goſpell was publiſhed through the whole worlde .

But (as I ſayde) we muſt marke well the long ſuffering which G O D vſed towards them, that it may keepe vs from ſleeping in our finnes. For if we abuſe the goodneſſe of our G O D when hee ſpareth vs, and vſeth not ſuch vengeance as we haue deſerued: we ſhall be driuen to pay the arreages . Therefore let vs returne to him when hee threatneth vs . For it had bene much better for the Iewes to haue ſuffered temporall puniſhmentes, than to haue bene ſo borne with, and in the ende to haue had ſo horrible vengeance layde vpon them as we ſee befell to the Citie of Ieruſalem . For if we looke vpon the aduerſities that fell vpon it, we ſhall not finde the like examples at any time ſince the beginning of the worlde, that the men of that country, and all other inhabitants were ſo afflicted . They played the madde men one againſt another for their vittelles, and the veryeſt cutthroates bare the chiefe ſway . They durſt not go out of their citie to eaſe themſelues becauſe they were incloſed on euerie ſide: and yet they were more cruelly handled within by theues and rakhelles . The ruſſians were ready to cutte the throats of them that came once out of their doores . Things were ſo farre out of order and ſo horribly put to hauocke, that women were faine to kill their owne children for hunger and to eate them, and it ſpited the father to ſee the mother ſteale her owne children to deuoure them into her owne bowelles . Therefore let vs thinke ourſelues, and when things are ſo farre out of ſquare, and wee perceiue it to be our Lordes will to giue vs ſuch examples, to the intent we ſhould liue in awe and feare, and yet notwithstanding that he giueth vs leaſure to returne vnto him; let vs goe vnto him, yea and that with ſpeede; & let vs not driue off ſr̄o day to day, for feare leaſt the gate be ſhut againſt vs . That is the thing which wee haue to bear in minde .

Nowe let vs proceede to that which Moſes addeth, namely: That G O D did then raiſe vpp a people which was no people, and a Nation which was no Nation . By theſe words we be doone to vnderſtande, that vntill ſuch time as G O D hath choſen vs, and drawn vs to the knowledge of hiſ truth: it is all one as if we were not at all . True it is that Gods ſetting of vs in this worlde is not a benefite to be deſpised, neither doeth he ſet vs heere as Aſſes, Oxen, and Dogges: but as reaſonable creatures, and he putteth hiſ image into vs . Inestimable is the benefite which he doeth vs therein : but yet for all that, forasmuch as we be corrupted in Adam, and all of vs are accuſed ; inſomuch that ſinne doeth ſo reigne in vs, that the Image of G O D is wiped out, and the vnderſtanding which we weene our ſelues to haue is but brutiſhneſſe, and our hearts are turned vpside downe, ſo as there is nothing but rebellioſneſſe in vs : therefore it is ſayde that wee be not worthy to be counted a people, that is to ſay, it were better for vs that we were not at all . Nor that G O D is not glorified continually in hiſ creatures : but this is ſpoken in reſpect of vs . For we will needes gloriſie ourſelues and ſeeme great men, for wee ſee howe men beleue wonders of themſelues, and they be ſo blinde that they ſuſmiſe this and that of themſelues . But let the children of this worlde eſteeme of themſelues what they liſt, and aduance their owne glorie as much as they liſt : yet doth G O D in one worde heere cut their combes, ſaying that their being is as though they were not at all . And it is not heere onely that the ſcripture vſeth ſuch ſpeech : for Saint Paul ſayeth generally, that G O D calleth the things which are not, as though they were . Ye ſee then howe our firſt being is when G O D calleth vs to the knowledge of hiſ truth : according whereunto Saint Paul ſayth in another place, y our being is of God in Ieſus Chriſt, inſomuch that we haue nothing at all before that time, becauſe there is nothing in vs but corruption . Seeing the caſe ſtandeth ſo, men can not looke for any thing but eternal death, vntil God haue reached them hiſ hand, and gathered the home to himſelfe . That is the thing which we haue to remember in this text where it is ſayde, that God would prouoke the Iewes to ieloſie by a people which were no people .

Furthermore let vs marke, that whereas we haue been at this day, that is to say, whereas God hath aduanced vs, (according also as hee sayth by his prophet Esay, I haue brought vpe children and aduanced them) forasmuch as God dealeth so graciously with vs as to put vs in the place of them that were his naturall children, euen vs which were as children borne out of time: let vs assure our selues that if wee prouoke God to wrath, and make him as it were ialous, he will surely rayse vp other Nations in our steede, according to this saying of our Lord Iesus Christ to the Iewes; The kingdome of God shall be taken from you. This threat is spoken to vs nowadays. For (as sayth saint Paul) if God haue not spared the naturall branches of the oliue, but haue cut them quite and cleane off, and cast them into the fire: how shall hee spare the wilde ones? What shoulde we haue who were barrene by nature? Could we say we were the children of Abraham, and that God had adopted vs at the first? No. For as long as the doctrine of saluation was among the Iewes, our forefathers were as rotten members, they had no hope of saluation, they were without GOD in this worlde, as sayeth saint Paul. But nowe we bee come to the heauenly kingdome. Because the Iewes are departed from it, through their owne vnthankfulnesse, and fallen from the degree wherein they were, GOD hath aduanced vs to it euen against nature. And thinke we then that if wee become like those which were our superiours in dignitie, GOD will not in the ende pouer out the like vengeance vpon vs as wee haue seene vpon them? Yes: and therefore let the Iewes bee a lookingglasse for vs to make vs behaue our selues humbly, that we abuse not the grace of GOD. True it is that wee must be assured that GOD will holde out to the ende in the things which he hath begonne for our welfare, specially if we on our side be not so malicious as to disappoint his grace. But if we followe those which haue gone before vs, let vs not thinke to speede better than they haue done. Thus yee see what wee haue to beare away in this Text where it is sayde that God will prouoke his people to ielozie by such as were not a people aforetimes.

And Moses sayeth, That they shall be a foolish Nation. And it behoueth vs yet againe to marke this well. For we imagine ourselues to be verie wise; and that is the thing which plucketh vs backe from submitting ourselues obediently vnto GOD, and disappointeth vs of the modestie to embrace by faith, whatsoeuer is propounded to vs in his name. But heere the holy Ghost bewrayeth vs what we be, to witte, that there is nothing in vs but starke folly, vntill GOD haue inlightened vs. What must bee our wisdom then? Euen that which we learne in Gods schoole. Heereby all selfe weening is beaten downe, that menne should not imagine themselves to be of sufficient abilitie to gouerne themselves, nor despite the doctrine of GOD, but yeelde themselves teachable thereunto.

And herewithall let vs marke also, that generally God ment to bereaue men of all glorie in that he sayth that they be not at all, and that they be but fooles, that is to say, that there is nothing in the but reprochfulnesse.

And hee addeth soorthwith, that his wrath shall be kindled, and that it shall enter vnto the bottomlesse pitte, and consume the Lande with her fruites, yea euen to rootes of the Mountaines. Heere Moses ment breefly to touch those yet better and neerer to the quicke, which were so bedoted, that they could not come to the knowledge of their sinnes. And he not onely spake to y people, whom he knewe to be stubborne and stiffnecked: but also through the power of Gods spirite he prophced of those that were to come. As for Moses, he knewe them not to outwarde appearance: but GOD who knoweth what men are, gaue his sentence vpon them aforehande. And forasmuch as hee seeth them so blockish he handleth them in their kinde, saying, Goe too, I see you be not greatly moued at my threatening, and that ye proceede from euill to worse: but I tell you that my wrath will bee no light fardle to beare, as though I gaue you but a yerke with my rodde by the way. What then? It is a fire that burneth vp all afore it, as we haue seene heereofore in the fourth chapter, where it is sayde, Knowe thou O Israel that thy God is a consuming fire. This was expressly spoken for the hardenelle of the peoples hearts. For it is certine that God is desirous to shewe himselfe louing towards vs, conditionally that we come vnto him with all meekenesse, and be readie to followe his voyce, taking him for our sheepeharde, and behauing ourselues to wardes him as his sheepe. If we doe so, then will not God fray vs, nor shewe himselfe terrible to vs. But if he see vs play the wilde beastes, so as wee can not by any meanes be tamed: then is hee faine to vse rigour, according to this saying of his in the eighteenth Psalme, that hee will bee harde to such as are harde, and that if men shew themselves vnreformable, hee also will come roughly against them, and they shall finde nothing in him but vtter terrour and dreadfulness. After the same manner is it in this text, where he sayeth, My wrath shall be as a burning fire. Yea, and thinke not (sayth he) that I will burne but the chaffe and the strawe; for I will burne vp the verie gronde, there is not so hard a mountaine but it shall melt before me, yea euen to the verie bottome: and there shall not be so deepe a pitte, but I will go to the verie bottome thereof. Now we see what the purpose or intent of Moses was in this place.

And heereby let vs take warning, not to tempt God; accordingly as the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrewes applyeth the forealleaged text to the same purpose. My friends (sayeth he) knowe ye that God is a consuming fire: and therefore let vs liue in his feare, & not tempt him: as soone as he speaketh, let vs quake at it: let vs not tarry till hee smite vpon our heades with main blowes: but let vs go vnto him obediently: and let vs pray him to haue pittie vpon vs.

For if we goe about to winne him by stoutnesse, surely we shall finde howe it is not sayde without cause that Gods wrath is a burning fire to consume all thinges: and wee shall feele that although we be neuer so stubborne, and that our heartes (to our owne seeming) bee as whot as fire through ouerweening, whereof wee haue made our selues as it were foretrestles, towers, and bulwarkes for our great safetie: yet notwithstanding, God will so vndermine vs, that we shall finde howe there is nothing in vs wherewith to make resistance, and that we haue no more power to stande before his wrath and vengeance, than stubble or hay which is consumed out of hande by fire: may we shall be no better than towe. Thus ye see howe wee may benefite ourselues by this doctrine, if wee will not haue the sentence that God pronounceth executed vpon vs. That is to wit, that forasmuch as his wrath burneth so whot and is able to consume all: wee must turne vnto him as soone as he threateth vs, yea and so returne, as he finde vs not to be foolishhe and wilde headed folke, as in whom there is nothing but lightnes and vnconstance.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to open our eyes more and more, that we may see our owne wretchednesse, and vpon the knowing thereof, bee also so touched by his holy spirite, that our heartes may stoope, and hauing felt what wee haue deserued, we may steppe to him aforehande to obtaine fauour and mercie of him: and so continue therein, that all our life long, our whole seeking may be to increase and to be settled in his feare and loue: that taking him for our father, and reposing ourselues wholly vpon him and his goodness, we may neuer thelesse yeelde him such reverence, as to quake at his threatninges, and yet assure ourselues that hee will be so good a protector and defender of vs, that we shall be safe from all daungers, when he hath once taken vs into his protection and safekeeping. That it may please him to grant this grace not only to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

23 I will heape euilles vpon them, and I will bestowe mine arrowes vpon them.

24 They shall be burnt with hunger, and consumed with heate and with bitter destruction. Also I will fende them the teeth of beastes, with the venime of Serpentes that traile in the dust.

25 The sword shall rob them of their children without, and in their chambers shall be fearefulnesse vpon the young woman and the mayde, the sucking child and the man with the hore head.

26 I haue saide I will scatter them abroad, and make the remembraunce of them to cease from among men.

27 Were it not that I feared the disdayne of the enemye, least peraduenture their aduersaries should waxe straunge and say: Our hande is high, and it is not the Lorde that hath done all this thing.

E sawe yester day howe Moses hauing spoken of Gods vengeance to the people of Israel shewed how dreadful the same is, because men are not so moued at y first as were requisite, at leastwise to consider their own naughtines, & to be displeas'd at it, y they might humble themselves & be a shamed thereof before God. For inasmuch as men are slowe vnto that, our Lorde sheweth y his threatning of them is not in sport, and therefore that it is not for the to fall asleepe at it and to take their ease, but rather to treble and quake. Now pursuing the same matter, Moses addeth That he will fende vpon that people all the euilles that can bee deuised, that hee will les fly his arrowes at them to the viter consuming of them, that he wil arme the wilde beastes against them, that hee will fende venomous serpentes among them, which though they glyde in the dust, shall neuer thelesse without fayle fasten vpon the with their teeth, that they shall be starued for hunger, that he will fende them burning diseases, enemyes without doores, and feare within doores, and that he will not spare their babes nor their olde men, nor any thing else. It might seeme at the first sight, that G O D were ouerrigorous. For seeing that God had chosen the

ofspring of Abraham from among the whole world, and his adopting of them was not grounded vpon any desert or worthinesse, but vpon the freegoodnes of Gods owne will: should he haue vsed so great sternesse against those wretched creatures, though they had right greedily offended him? Why did hee not rather spare them, and make the grace auailable which he had bestowed vpon them afore? Nay, we haue seene already the long sufferance which God had vsed towards them. And when men doe heape vp hoords of wrath a long time together after that fashion by their abusing of Gods goodnesse, as who should say they were minded to spite God wilfullie, and to defie him, to see the worst that hee can doe vnto them: it is good reason, that for their willfull and stubborn hardening of their heartes, God should make them to feele that hee will not haue his gentlenesse so scorned, and finally turned cleane contrarie to his intent. Again, after as God vttereth his fauour to vards vs, so must it bee the decreelyer solde vnto vs, if wee abuse it. Now he calleth the Church his house, and he taketh and admitteth vs for his children. Therefore if hee be dishonoured among vs, ought it not to greue him worse (as I haue declared afore) than if those which belong not vnto him (in comparison) at all, had offended him a thousand times?

Then let vs vnderstande that God did iustly shewe himselfe so rigorous against the children of Israell, and let vs applie this doctrine to our selues because wee be succeded in their roome. We haue seene already heretofore, howe God hath cut them off, and grassed vs in, in their steade, to the intent wee should bee partakers of the adoption that belonged vnto them. Nowe if God haue not pardoned them, what will hee doe to vs? For we be not of more worthinesse than they, neither is our state more excellent than theirs. Therefore let vs see that we liue warily, and that we make the grace effectual which we haue receiued at Gods hand, so as he may be glorified thereby, and our saluation more and more furthered and confirmed by meane thereof. Thus ye see in effect what wee haue to gather vpon this text.

And whereas it is saide that God will heape euill vpon them, and shoote out all his arrowes against them: let vs marke y here Moses meant to doe vs to vnderstand, that God hath no sorts & means of punishing men than one, insomuch that when they think themselves to be escaped, then are they newe to beginne againe. And this is verie worthie to be noted. For wee see what the negligence of them is which haue doone amisse. True it is that if they perceiue any token of Gods anger, they will be abashed at it at the first, but if they feele no further thā threatnings they shake their eares and make a mocke at it. But if God feare them a litle; as soone as it is ouer, they thinke themselves quite rid of it. As for example, if there bee any noyse of war, such as haue misbehaved themselves and led a wicked and loose life, wil begin to shudder at it. But as soone as the same is ceased, they be the same men they were afore. Likewise is it with them concerning famine, and all other afflictions whatsoeuer. If a man be stricken with a disease and pressed with the hande of God, hee wil play the holie man for the time; but as soone as hee is releued, by and by hee begins to set vp his bristles lustilier than afore. Yee see then at what point wee be. As soone as God withdrawes his hande, we beare our selues in hande that we bee quite and cleane discharged, and that there bee no moe means wherewith to punish vs. But contrariwise it is saide here, that if Gods shooting of one arrow haue not wounded vs to death, it makes no matter: for hee wil shoote agayne, and in the ende so deale with vs, that wee shall find by prooffe that it had bene for our behoofe to haue considered at the first, that he hath infinite meanes and incomprehensible to vs, wherewith to take vengeance of our sins. That is the cause then why he saith that he will heape vpon vs vpon them, as he will adde hereafter, saying: Are not these things laide vp in my treasures? And there this matter shall bee treated of more at large. And by this worde Arrowes, he betokeneth all the weapons of his wrath, the which he setteth downe more particularly by and by after, saying that He will sende wilde bestes to deuoure all, hee will sende Serpentes to consume men with their stinges; hee will sende enemies with the sword abroade; and hee will sende terror as home. Heere G O D alledgeth some examples of the thing which hee had spoken, to wit, that when wee be escaped from warre, famine shall catch vs, and if God spare vs from famine, yet shall that nothing boote vs, for he will haue other weapons to pursue vs withall. And herewithall wee be warned further that all creatures are in Gods hande, and that hee employeth them to what vse hee liketh best. As for example, if hee list to haue the wilde bestes to serue for our benefite, they must needs doe it. For hee leadeeth them by his secreete moouing in such wise, as they cannot but execute that which hee inioyneth. And on the contrarie part, whensoever it pleaseth him to arme the bestes: they must needs become our enemies, and wee cannot withstand them. For vntill such time as we bee at one with him, it is certaine that wee haue still the worse ende of the staffe. Secondly hee addeth the trayling serpents. Although wee despise these litle bestes, such as the Serpents are which trayle in the dust as Moses saith expresse here: yet wil God make the mischeefe of them to attaine euen to our heades. For albeit that the biting of a Serpent bee but on ones heele or his foote: yet the venime of it striketh vp through his whole bodie. The like is to bee saide of diseases. For vnder one kinde hee comprehendeth here all, when hee saith, That hee will sende bitter beates, and that the same shall destroy men. So then let vs marke (according to that which I haue treated of heretofore) that when wee be vexed by men, the same happeneth not without the ordinaunce of God. Such thinges are Gods chastisements whereby hee calleth vs to the considering of our finnes, and whereby hee summoneth vs before him, not onely to indite vs of them, but also to the ende wee should doe it our selues aforehand, and euerie of vs play the iudge in condemning our selues, that by that meane wee might ob-tayne fauour at his hande. But if we will needs be selfewilled, then are they as euidences a-forehande to condemne vs with, and wee must not imagine that wee can further our case by replyinges. And whensoever wee bee so visi- 10 ted, it wee yeelde not G O D the honour to confesse that he is righteous in so doing: sure-lie the mischeefe shall be doubled, and still increased vntill it haue consumed vs. Therefore although wee be troubled by men: yet let vs vnderstande that G O D serueth his owne purpose by them as by instrumentes, and that wee must haue recourse to him, and that if he were not prouoked against vs, wee should bee vnder his protection, and hee woulde not giue our enemies the bridle after that fashion. Let vs assure our selues that when sicknesse commeth vpon vs, it is to be accounted as the hande of G O D, and that his sending of it, is to visite vs, and to make vs to turne againe vnto him. As much is to be thought of the rest. For it is not to be thought, that the creatures are led at all aduenture, that G O D shoulde not bee serued by them, and that they shoulde not bee at his disposition. It is for heathenish and faithlesse folkes so to thinke. But in acknowledging that G O D is the maker of heauen and earth, we professe therewith that all things are at his commaundement, that all things are disposed by his appoyntment, and that nothing commeth to passe but by his iustice. That then is the thing which wee haue to beare in minde in this text when Moses saith that God will arme the enemy without, and sende feare within. Whereby hee meaneth that their ene-deth no more but a shadow to fray vs, accordinge as hath bene declared in the eight and twentieth Chapter. If G O D list to stirre vp great troubles and stormes against vs, he will doe it and it is meete that hee shoulde bee the ouerruler of all. But when hee intendeth to consume vs: then must our life needes hang as vpon a twyned threed, so as at euening wee shall sorrowfully say, Who will cause me to see to morrow morning? And (when night is gone) wee shall bee still in the same greefe of minde, wee shall bee as men besides themselves and much woofe. The thing then which this word Feare or terror importeth, is that God wil make men to be alwayes as it were besides themselves when they will not yeelde to his corrections to come to amendement, so as they shall bee wounded in their heartes, without his stirring vp of any enemies, or his sending of any in-conuenience vnto them; and they shall not knowe why nor wherefore, but that their owne shadow troubleth them and maketh them at their wittes ende. Therefore if wee intend to enjoy the greatest and most desirable benefite in the worlde, that is to say, to lue in peace and rest: let vs learne that wee must not prouoke

Deur. 28. 66

our God to make him our enemy. For as long as wee prouoke his wrath, all things must needes goe against vs. That is the thing which wee haue to gather vpon this place. And we must not thinke that wee haue profited any whit, when wee haue put God out of our minde, or when wee haue turned our backs vpon him for a time, as the skorners doe which in such times doe take their pleasure in sporting with G O D at the full. Therefore let not vs deale so hardheartedly: for there is not a worfe thing than to haue rocked our consciences asleepe after such a fashion, that wee haue no more remorse nor heartburning in vs. But let vs set our mindes to haue peace with God, that is to say to resort vnto him in such wise, as we may feele him to bee our father and seeke to stay our selues vpon his goodnes, that our so doing may keepe vs in rest. Thus yee see in effect howe wee haue to apply this worde Feare or Terrour, wherewith Moses threateneth here the transgressors of Gods law, and such as stand against him to the vttermost.

He saith farther that God will destroye euen the sucking babies, and the olde men which are alreadie gray headed, so as hee will not spare, neither sex nor age nor any thing else; for hee speaketh of young folke and of maydes that are to bee married. Nowe (as I sayde afore) wee must not thinke it straunge that God shoulde vse such securitie: but wee must call to minde the vnreformeable stubbornesse which was in the people afore. For wee knowe that Moses wrote this song to shewe the people their malicious and frowarde nature, yea and vtterlic vnamen-dable: in so much that when God had by all means vttered his goodnesse and mercie to-wardes them, they drewe all to the worst, and shewed themselves too vnthankfull, shrinking continually away from him, and marring themselves with superstition and idolatrie, so as the Prophetes streyning themselves to the vttermost, coulde not bring them backe againe into the right way. Is it then any wonder that G O D after so long wayting shoulde vse so great extremitie as wee see?
 No. For after that G O D had winked at them, their iniquitie came to the full growth, according to the fore alledged text of Genesis which saith, that the wickednesse of the Amorrhites was not yet full grown: but within fourehundred yeares afterwarde, they shoulde bee vtterly rooted out. And why was that? For it was too much that those people were hardened alreadie in the time of Abraham. But when as at the ende of foure hundred yeares more, they were become yet worse, and ceased not to increase still the great heape of Gods vengeance: was it not meete that hee should then make them to pay the whole arreages (as they say?) And seeing that the children of Israel comming into the same place and hauing so sayre a lookingglasse before their eyes, in those Nations whome O O D had vtterlic destroyed; did neuertheless giue ouer

Gen. 15. 16.

ouer themselves to the same superstitions, and thereby defiled the lande, which God had appointed to his owne seruice: was it not meete that they also should be made an example to others? Nowe this ought to serue vs. For wee be in possession of the inheritance which God promised to the children of Abraham: I meane not the land which they dwelt in, but the inheritance which was betokened by that land as by a gage and figure. Gods will therefore is that we now should be his householde, and that we should be gathered together into his Church and flocke, vntill he take vs into his kingdome. Nowe if in freede of honouring him, and of yielding him his due seruice, we become vnruelic folke, giuen ouer to all leawdnesse, and moreouer doe match the same with wilfull stubbornesse, so as there is no meane to bring vs backe into the way of saluation: thinke wee that our Lorde will not be reuenged of such vnthankfullnesse.

Furthermore let vs not thinke it straunge, that the young babes are here spoken of. For as touching maides that are to be maryed, young men, and olde folkes: if a nation be corrupted, and the mischeefe haue once overflowed his bankes (as they say:) they also must needes be infected as well as the rest, and the worlde sees it is so. For when olde men are once saped in naughtinesse, and injured by some to offend God: they will rather haue their skinned plucked off from their backs a thousand times if they had so many skinned, than once to be reclaimed. For they become so blockish, or els so enraged, that their is no way to deale with the. As for young folke, we see they be as it were set on fire to make war against God. Again, wherefoeuer wickednesse reigneth, and all things are peruetted: there the young women become as wilde as Roes: so as there remaineth not anie honestie, and much lesse anie feare of God in them. This is apparant to all men. And therefore it is not to be woondred at, though God doe threaten both young and old. But as touching little babes, that may seeme the more crucie, because they haue not offended like the others. For will God punish the guiltlesse? Doth hee not say by his Prophet Ezechiel, that the parties which haue sinned (that beare their owne punishment, and that the Childe shall not be punished for his fathers) Yes, but we must marke that God hath a reason of his iudgements, though it be vnknown to vs. Wee then may thinke some chastisements of Gods to be ouer- rigorous, but yet doeth he knowe why he doth so, and it becommeth vs to reuerence the things with all humilitie, which are incomprehensible to vs. For what a thing were it if we should measure all Gods workes by our wit? Can wee attaine to them? Howe farre extendeth our vnderstanding? Let vs consider howe weak and small it is, and what rudenesse is in vs. But on the other side, what are the iudgements of God? Euen a deepe gulfe vnpossible to be gaged: they be vncomprehensible as saith the scripture. Agayne, whom did he euer cal to counsell? Therefore let vs content our selues with the things which God hath opened vnto vs, and be mindfull of the thing which wee haue seene not long since, namely that the secrete things belong to our God, and that the things which are in his Law belong to vs and to our children: that is to say, we must hold vs to the measure which God giueth vs, and not be inquisitive without end: & more than is lawfull for vs to know, but receive the doctrine which hee giueth vs, affluting our selues that the same is sufficient for our saluation. Also let vs bethinke vs howe it is saide in Iob, that we see the brimmes of Gods workes, but we can neuer attaine to the bottome of the. Therefore whereas the scripture speaketh now and then of some executions which God doeth: although the same may seeme to vs ouerrigorous, yet must wee bridle our selues and imprison our wits to honour God with such reuerence as hee deserueth. Let that serue for one poynt.

Furthermore as concerning that which is said here of Babes, let vs marke that if God listeth to reude vp the whole worlde by the rootes, hee coulde doe it, yea and that right iustlic. For euen from our verie birth, we bring nothing but wrath and cursednesse. If God take young babes out of the worlde, yea and damne them: yet is there no rigour in so doing: for wee be all forlorne afore hande by nature. In this case therefore it behooueth vs to cast downe our heades and our eyes, and not presume to stande in contention with God by reasoning the matter with him, nor to controul him as though he did wrong or iniurie to little infants in taking them out of the worlde. For (as I saide) hee may not onely finite them with death, but also sende them to euerlasting damnation, because wee be all cursed in Adam. Now then, when he hath withdrawn his grace from a whole Nation, and all of them are become reprobates: then must his wrath needes extende as well to the young infants as to their fathers, according to this saying, that God casteth backe the wickednesse of the fathers, into the bosomes and lappes of their children. Not that the children be punished being guiltlesse: for God knoweth that they be not so. But we perceiue not that they haue offended. As who woulde say, that wee were able to perceiue as much as God knoweth. Haue wee as sharpe a sight as hee? [No.] So then, although wee take little babes to be faultlesse: yet notwithstanding there is a naughtinesse inclosed in them, and the seede of sinne is sufficient to condemne them before God. Wherefore let vs marke, that although hee root out young babes; yet in so doing he cannot be blamed of crueltie: but he executeth a iudgement which surmounteth the capacitie and measure of mans wit, whereat wee may well wonder, but yet must wee confesse it to be rightfull, as it is indeede. Wee see howe it fell out both in Sodome and in other places where it was his will to haue all destroyed. When anie such thing happeneth, let vs vnderstande that G O D S intent is to make vs to cast downe our eyes. For if it befall so to the greene tree, what shall be doone to the drie? Beh old the lile Infants whom we imagine to bee innocent and faultlesse : and yet wee see that Gods vengeance wrappeth them in with the elder sorte, and with those that haue greatlie offended. Righteous is G O D in so doing. What shall wee say to it, but onelie that wee ought to quake at it? For there is none of vs all which hath not deserued a hundred times as much. If G O D spare vs, are we not the more bounde to his goodnesse : And againe, if pleased him to deale with vs according to our misdeedes, should wee not be affraide that we shall bee much more roughlie handled, than wee see litle babes are? Yes surelie. So then, insteede of contending as manie doe, and of entering into curious questions euen with diuclishe malapertnesse to controll G O D, as I haue saide afore: let vs learne to be lowlie, in such wise that hauing giuen glorie vnto G O D by confessing that he is euer righteous and soothfast, and let vs also haue an eye to that wee haue seene, that so we may impute it to his free mercifullnesse that hee beareth with vs, and also bee the more incouraged to returne to him, so as wee may no more abuse the long time of his patience. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember vpon this text, where G O D saith that hee will destroy euen the litle sucking babes.

Nowe hee addeth yet further, I had saide or determined to roote out this people, but that I feared the prouoking of the enemy, lest the Adversarie might haue bene estranged, and haue said, Our hand is high, and it is not the Lordes that hath doone all this. In this text our Lorde sheweth that hee is so farre off from vsing any vmeasurable rigour against his people: that hee hath rather yet another respect not to roote them vtterly out, namelie lest the Infidels should haue occasion to blaspheme him. That is the meaning of Moses. They will complaine and say that G O D ought not to handle his people after that fashion, but that hee ought to vse greater kindnesse and gentlenesse towards them. Yea, saith hee, pleade on your case: but yet shall yee winne nothing by it. For if God had respected no further matter than you, hee had rooted you long agoe out of the worlde, and the remembrance of you had bene quite and cleane abolished long ere this. What letted him then? Not that you were not worthie to haue perished, for you haue not ceased to prouoke his wrath by dooing euill: but for that hee had a respect to your enemies, that is to say, to the Infidels. And why? For if God should haue rooted out that people, whom he had choosen: for asmuch as the renoune thereof was spread ouer all the worlde, and the deliuering of them out of Egypt was as a wonderfull miracle, and the Israelites themselues professed themselues continually to be the worshippers of the God which had taken them out of the deepe gulfes: should not his destroying of them haue opened the mouthes of the wicked to skoffe at the Religion which was held in Iurie, and to haue saide, Where is nowe the God which maintained them so long time, as they themselues haue reported? Either hee is false asleepe, or else he hath lost his wittes, for he succoureth them not any more. After that manner would the Infidels haue rayled at God if hee had not euer reserued and kept still some seede of that people, to shewe that his countenaunt was not quite and cleane disannulled, but that it stooode still in full force. That is the verie meaning of this saying where wee reade, I had determined to roote them, yea and to scatter the abroad eueriwhere. For the worde betokeneth such a scattering or rending asunder, as if one should dismember a mans bodie, and cast the peeces thereof abroad here and there, so as nothing were left whole. Therefore, I had rooted them out [saith hee,] yea and that in such wise as they should neuer haue bene spoken of anie more among men, but that I feared the prouocation of the enemy. Nowe the thing that is rehearsed here, is read of in Exodus. And so it should seeme that God was restrayned by Moses from doing the thing which hee speaketh of here. For hee giueth the sentence, and addeth, Let me doe it, as though Moses had fet himselfe against him. And yet for all that, it is verie certaine that God had determined aforehande to pardon his people: but yet it was his will that Moses should make intercession for them, yea euen Moses, in asmuch as he was there & made supplicatiō in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ, and the people knew that they could not haue escaped except God had hearde the prayers of Moses.

But howe soeuer the case stooode, this text sheweth vs that God altered not his purpose: for hee is not variable, neither repealed hee his sentence, though hee saide, I will yet againe pardon this people for thy sake. For the thing which hee had determined in his owne minde, was performed, and yet notwithstanding it was his will that Moses should steppe in as a mediator. And when God heareth vs, it is not for that we make him to change his minde: but it pleaseth him to declare the thing to vs which hee had determined to doe, to the end that our faith should be exercised, and wee knowe, that to pray, is no labour lost or vnprofitable, for the fruites sheweth the contrarie. That is the cause then why hee graunteth those things at our request, which hee had determined in his euertasting purpose afore. Yet notwithstanding wee see in effect, that if God had not bene minded to stoppe the mouthes of all the wicked, and vnbelieuing sort, he had destroyed that people. And that was done to correct y ouerweening of such as were euer ready to grudge against God. For such is the maner of men, that they neuer want replies: but as soone as God scourgeth them, by and by they stand in contention with him. And if hee presse them double; then they not onelie grunt at it, but also spewe out their blasphemies against him. But here our Lorde sheweth, that whē men haue cast forth al their rage after that fashion, yet it shall be proued to their faces, that hee notwithstanding hath dealt ouergentlie with them, accordingly as it is certayne that euen at this day, if God had not a further consideration than onely of vs, vs, we deserue well to be wiped out of the worlde. For notwithstanding that wee haue receiued his worde, what doe we fare the better for it? We professe the hauiug of the Gospell, and wee can well say that the Papistes are Idolaters, strangers from God, and men giuen ouer to all euill. And why? For they be blinde and walke in the darke. But yet for all that, wee that haue the cleare light of life, howe doe we order our doings? If we be compared with the Papistes, shall a man finde vs better than them? Nay, wee are so much more blame worthy than they, because that for all our teaching yet wee despise God of a certayne malicious and determinate purpose. Sith it is so, if God had not a further respect than to vs, surely wee shoulde bee consumed out of hand. But for asmuch as the Papistes would by and by set open their throares to scoffe at God and the pure Religion, therefore hee maintaineth vs still. Wherefore let vs not boast that wee haue helde our vnto this time by our owne power: but let vs consider that God would not haue his name blasphemed, nor make the truth of his Gospell to be a iusting stocke for men to scoffe at: and let that bee a meane to humble vs yet better. Wee see then that this doctrine belongeth vnto vs, and that Moses spake it not onely to the people of Israell, but also to all such as shoulde professe the seruice of God, and haue the pure doctrine of his worde: insomuch that if they play the naughtipackes, and prouoke Gods vengeance against them, and God neuertheless doe beare with them; it is not for their faire eyes (as they say,) nor for that they haue deserued it: but because our Lord will not giue such loofe and vnderled libertie to them that seeke occasion thereof.

And it is saide expressly, That God feared the promocation of the enemy, lest hee shoulde estrange himselfe, and say, My hande is high, and it is not the Lords that hath doone this thing. By this worde Promocation, hee meaneth the pride that is in men, accordinglie also as hee doeth in the eight Psalme, where it is saide that God is glorified by the moutnes of sucklings, in which place expresse mention is made of the enemy and of the auenger, because the vnbeleeuers are alwayes so proud and presumptuous, that there is nothing with them but crueltie & thundering. So likewise in this text it is saide that God feared to prouoke the enemy, that is to wit, least the Infidels shoulde proceede to such wickednesse as to scoffe at the Law and at the true Religion. God then prevented them. And wee must not imagine that God was afraid of men: for hee coulde well haue prouided for it by some other meane. Is it not hee that hath made mens tongues? And how can they then stirre to speak one worde, if he listeth to restrayne them? Could they moue to vtter one syllable: It shoulde seeme then that the thing which Moses speaketh here is needlesse, namely that God shoulde bee afraid to prouoke his enemies: for hee coulde well haue remedied the matter if hee had would.

I haue tolde you oftentimes already, that God is spoken of after the manner of men. Therefore when God prouideth for a thing by anie worldlie meane, and such as is common among vs: it is not for that hee is tyed vnto it, & cannot of his infinite power doe otherwise: but because it pleaseth him so to doe. Thus are wee doone to vnderstande in fewe wordes, that when it pleaseth God to serue his owne turne by the inferior meanes which hee hath ordeyned in this worlde; it is not for that hee cannot doe what he listeth of himselfe and without any other helpe: but for that it is his will to keepe that order. As for example. Hee coulde well susteine vs without breade, wine, or water: and yet notwithstanding hee vseth those meanes. And why so? Euen because it pleaseth him. If we be sicke, he can well heale vs without any medicine: and yet will hee haue vs to vse medicines. In the time of warre he coulde well repress all our enemies without our stirring of anie finger towards it; but yet hath hee ordeyned other meanes. Ye see then after what manner this text is to be vnderstoode, where it is saide that God was afraid to prouoke the enemy: not that hee was vnable to let them or to withstande them if hee had would; or that hee was vnable to haue stopped the moutnes of the Infidels; but because hee sawe men so malicious, that their whole desire is to haue full libertie to speake euill of his maiestie. Which thing hee perceyuing, intendeth to remedie it. And by what meanes? Euen by such as hee himselfe likes best of. Not that hee doeth it of necessitie (as I saide afore) or by anie constraynt: but that his good pleasure is so. And therefore God coulde well roote vs out of the worlde at this day: and on the other side hee coulde well make the Papistes dumbe, and altogether senselesse, or else hee coulde make them blockes or stones, or else hee could vtterlie ouerwhelme them, so as his name shoulde not bee blasphemed by them: and therewithall hee coulde raise vp a newe people which shoulde glorifie him in his iust destroying and consuming of vs. God coulde well doe all these things: but yet for all that hee holdeth still such order in his workes, as hee hath determined vpon in himselfe. That is the cause why on the one side hee spareth vs, and on the other side giueth nor occasion to the Papistes to blaspheme his holy name if hee shoulde vse extreme rigour against vs.

And by the way, here wee bee put in minde of the nature of man. Indeepe God speaketh of the aduerfarie and enemy: but yet vnder them, hee comprehendeth all such as haue not bene taught by his worde to yeeld themselues teachable vnto him. And what manner of disposition attributeth hee vnto them? That they estrange themselues: that is to say, that without inquiring or considering of Gods vengeance where-in he ought to be glorified, they turne it into a slander and say, It is not God that did it. Let vs marke well then, that if wee bee let alone to our owne nature, and that God giuide vs not by his worde and spirite, to giue vs the true found-ness of vnderstanding, discretion, and skill: although hee worke after such a fashion as his righteousnesse, power, and wisdom may so appeare, that wee must needs be conuicted by it: yet we shal not cease to cast fourth blasphemie against him. And why? For wee shall bee as witlesse beastes. And this saying, For feare leasf the enemie shoulde estrange himselfe, is to bee well weyed. For thereby God meaneth, that men insteade of applying their wirtes to the beholding of the things which hee sheweth them, do wrappe themselues in ignorance wilfully. Nowe it is certayne that although wee be blinde wretches, and that although by reason of Adams sinne wee bee bereft of iudgement, reason, and vnderstanding: yet there is malice still in vs, so as our whole seeking is to bee ignorant of the things which our Lorde woulde haue vs to knowe. Therefore whensoever men doe make a cloke of their ignorance, they shall euermore bee conuicted to haue refused the knowledge of those things which might haue bene well known vnto them, if they had set their minds vpon them. And that is the verie cause why Saint Iude in his Epistle speaking of these heathenish folke which despise G O D, and are grosse and dulheaded as folke that haue no knowledge at all; saith that they knowe not the things which they shoulde know, because they haue no list to knowe them. Then is it a cursed kinde of cloking, whensoever men make not their benefite of Gods workes, but applie them cleane contrarie to his meaning.

Now looke what is said here concerning the Infidels, the same belongeth likewise vnto vs. And were it not that G O D bringeth the light vnto vs, or vs vnto the light, and opened our eyes to see the things which hee sheweth vs: surely we should not onely continue stil blind, but also it shoulde cause vs to become worse and worse, accordingly as it is saide here, that the Infidels shoulde haue blasphemed G O D, saying, Our hande is high, and it is not God that hath done this. On the one side then we let God alone as though he had done nothing: and on y other side wee become so proude as to put ourselues in his roome. For men content not themselues with their robbing of God of his power, & with their defacing of his maiestie: but they will also needs deek theselues with his feathers, & make themselues verie Idols, and haue men to belieue them to haue bene the doers of the things which are peculiar to G O D. So then, seeing there is such mad pride in vs, and so grosse selfe weening: wee ought to bee the more warned to yeelde our selues vnto G O D, and to pray him not onely to shew vs his workes wherein his glorie may shine foorth and appeare: but also to open our eyes that wee may see them, in giuing vs skill and discretion by his holy spirit, so as we may learne with humilitie to honour him: and that when we haue confessed his iustice, goodnes, and mercie, we may consider howe much we be bounde vnto him, and that when hee punisheth other men, we may be drawn to repentance by their meanes, and vnderstande that he beareth with vs, because he might well confounde vs out of hande, were it not that he intended to vse fauour and goodnes towards vs, to the ende wee shoulde bee the more inflamed to honor him, and to dedicate our selues to him in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ.

Nowe let vs pray vnto him to vouchsafe to haue pitie vpon vs, and not to call vs to account for the great number of misdeeds whereof wee be gUILTY, because wee knowe well that if hee list to deale rigorously with vs, we should needes be confounded, yea and vterly perishe: and that although hee had not wayred for vs so long time, yet he had iust cause to haue destroyed vs as often as wee prouoked him to wrath: wherefore although we haue offended him without end or measure, yet notwithstanding seeing hee hath shewed himselfe so kindehearted a father towards vs alreadie, it may please him to continue his mercie and fauour, and therewithall to reforme vs so by his holy spirit, that being guided and gouerned by him, our whole seeking may be to frame ourselues to y obeying of him, suffering our selues to be ruled by his word, and seeking nought else but to please him in all respects. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

The CLXXXV. Sermon which is the eight vpon the two & thirtieth Chapter.

28 For it is a Nation voyde of discretion, and there is no vnderstanding in them.

29 But if they were wise, they would vnderstande this, and take heed to their ende.

30 Howe shoulde one of them chase a thousande, and two of them put tenne thousande to flight, were it not that God had solde them, and that the Lord had shut them vp?

31 For their gods are not as our God, and thereof euen our enemyes themselves are Iudges.

E saw yesterday how God hauing a respect to the Infidels & their blasphemies, had spared the people of Israel. And thereupon it was shewed, that God doth oftentimes pitie vs,

& not punish vs so rigorously as we deserue, to y<sup>e</sup> end that his name should not be made a scoffing stocke, & a iesting stock among the wicked, who seeke occasion of skorning when they see God chastise his Church: & thereupon they fall to rayling on the doctrine and Religion it selfe. But now it is added here, That this people were destitute of discretion, & voyde of vnderstanding. Truly men thinke themselves wise ynough when they be crasie and subtle in prouiding well for their businesse, and in practising this and that, And then fall they flat to despise God, as wee see that all these worldlings doe, who are forepossest of this fantastic of self-wisedom, by reason whereof the whole worde of God, and the suffering of themselves to be gouerned by it, is to them but simplicitie and foolishnes. But yet for al that, the holy Ghost affirmeth, & that iustly, that all such as liue not in the feare of G O D, are witlesse. For our true wisedom is to yeelde our selues to him which can leade vs to saluation: and without that, wee bee blinde wretches and inclosed with darkenesse. And therefore wee can not but goe astray al our life long, and after tripping to stumble right downe, yea euen into a deadly fall. Wee must vnderstand then, that vntill wee bee come to the submitting of our selues wholly vnto G O D, and to knowe that all our happinesse lieth in him: wee bee voyde of discretion. But this cannot bee, but that therewithall men must also needes knowe themselves. And in deede, if a man haue gone about heauen and earth, and gotten the vnderstanding of al things in them, and in the meane time thinketh not vpon his G O D, nor yet vpon himselfe: I pray you to what purpose is all his vnderstanding? If hee were the skilfullest Astrologer in the world, and had all Philosophie inclosed in his braine, and were perfect in all other sciences, and yet in the meane while knewe not himselfe, nor had any regarde of G O D; but were so brutish that hee wist not what Religion meaneth: were such a man to bee more esteemed, than a simple idiot which liueth in the feare of G O D, and knoweth to what ende hee is created? Then is it not without cause, that Moses condemneth all those of brutishnesse, which haue forgotten God, are gone backe from his worde, are intangled in superstitions, and to bee short, haue left the way of saluation, and the light which God offered them to guide them all their life long. As for those which haue so estranged themselves, Moses nor without cause doth terme witlesse and forlorne in their Discretion. And by that terme he meaneth, that the despisers of God being giuen to their vanities and wicked lustes, haue in deede some discretion, and doe delight and glorie in their own reason, yea and are full of pride, in so much that if a man speake to them to reclayme them into the right way, they despise all doctrine, bearing themselves in hand that they be able ynough to discern betweene good and euill. That dooth Moses meane. But what? It is a discretion of ouerthrowe and destruction. And therefore let vs suffer our selues to bee ruled by God, & let vs apply al our induerour to the receiuing of y<sup>e</sup> thinges which he teacheth, if wee will haue an vnderstanding that shall doe vs good.

And for the confirming of the same matter, hee addeth heere, O that they would haue bene aduised, O that they had vnderstood this, and that they had considered their last end. Wee see why God hath pronounced that there is no reason in men, and that they be vterly dull and destitute of vnderstanding, when their life is loose and vndererly. And why? Wee haue seene whereto G O D called the people of Israel. Nowe his adopting of vs, is to the ende that our lyfe should bee blessed and happy, and that after he hath preferred vs in this worlde, the inheritance of the heauenly kingdome should bee bestowed vpon vs. Yee see then that the true happinesse of men is to haue the fauour and loue of God. And wee be sure of his fatherly goodnesse towards vs, if when hee calleth vs by his worde, we come vnto him, and accept that grace by faith. The vnseparable bond then betweene God and man, is that they receiue the record of his goodnesse which hee giueth vnto them. And that serueth as well for this present lyfe, as for their euerlasting life. On the contrarye part wee haue heard the threats which are giuen forth heere: that is to say, that G O D hauing long time borne with the Churlishnesse of that people, would bee reuenged of it. Now he addeth, Must it not needs be y<sup>e</sup> this people are destitute of wit and reason, when they consider not this thing, ne haue an eye to their owne ende? Not without cause doth Moses here point out what y<sup>e</sup> people ought to haue considered: for wee haue bin told afore, y<sup>e</sup> God hath so reuered to himselfe the matters which concerne his own incomprehensible determination, as yet notwithstanding, he hath made the doctrine of the lawe familiar vnto vs: and he will haue it to be obserued for y<sup>e</sup> exercising of vs therein all our whole life. Seeing then y<sup>e</sup> God hath spoken, and his will is set before our eyes: let vs mark that his fo doing is not in vaine: accordingly also as hee auoweth by his Prophet Esay saying, We cannot alludge y<sup>e</sup> it is a darke thing & such as palleth our vnderstanding. Wee must not say any more, Who wil go ouer the sea? Who shall climbe vp about the cieudes? Or who shall go downe into the deepe? Seeing y<sup>e</sup> the word is in our mouthes & in our hearts, it ought verily to suffice vs. Neerthelesse it is true y<sup>e</sup> although God haue spoken, yet must he be faine to enlighten our wits with his holy spirit, or else we shall abide still without vnderstanding. But if wee consider the doctrine in it selfe, it is most manifest vnto vs, and God reuileth himselfe therein familiarly ynough. The thing then which we haue to remember vpon this text, is that Moses vpbraideth the Israelites, that they had bene called to God after such a fashion, as they could not haue erred vlesse they had would: and moreover that their end had bene shewed vnto them.

And by the word End, he meaneth al the happines that is promised to al gods children which additt themselues to him and rest vpon his promises, walking continually vnder his obedience: and contrariwise the confusio and ouerthrow of all scornfull, and disobedient persons, which despise such grace, withdrawing themselues from him and corrupting his woord. To that intent and purpose then doth Moses expressly speake of the end of them. And now must we make our benefite of this lesson. First of all therefore let vs marke that (as I haue said afore) we may be y<sup>e</sup> witticest folke in the world, and yet we shalbe counted as brute beastes and without reason at Gods hand, if we haue not a regard of him. The chiefe point then of our wisdom, is to haue our eyes open to behold the light of life, to haue profited wel in the schoole of our God, so as we can worship him; and to be no longer as stray cattell, nor knowing him that made vs and fashioned vs, nor yet knowing our selues neither. And therefore let vs learne to receiue Gods word with all simplicitie, & not doubt but that there he commeth so familiarly vnto vs, as we cannot say y<sup>e</sup> we need make long iourneyes, or that the things are too profound and darke for vs. For our Lord doth (as ye would say) chawe our morsels aforehand to vs, because of the rudenesse which he seeth in vs. And so he handleth vs lyke little babes, to the intent we may the easlier swallow down the foode which he giueth vs. Thus ye may see (I say) howe that when we haue Gods woord preached vnto vs, we must not doe as the Papistes doe, which say, Oh sir, this is to high for me, this geere is not for plaine folkes, this is to be reserued for the clergie. But let vs assure our selues that God speaketh both to great and small, and daly eth not with vs when hee calleth vs to him by his word, but will haue vs to vnderstand it. Then is it not long of any but our selues, if when his word is preached vnto vs, we be not dewly instructed in the things that are requisite for our saluation. True it is that we must not stepe to it with presumption, trusting in our own wisdom: but we must desire God to inlighten vs, and that as his voyce soundeth in our eares, so also he speake to our heartes by his holy spirite. Let vs humble our selues, accordingly as we know bow it is said that God vttereth his wil to such as are little and lowly. If we go to it after that maner, let vs not doubt but our Lord will make the things auailable which are set downe to vs in his name, and giue vs access vnto him both familiar and easie ynough. Therefore let vs marke well this word End, whereof Moses speaketh heere, and let vs consider whereunto God calleth vs. True it is that he maketh vs promises euen of this present life, so as wec ought to assure our selues that God will not saye vs in this world, inso much that although he will haue vs exercised with many miseries, and vexed with diuers temptations: yet notwithstanding he sayth he will hold vs vp with his mightie hand, so as we shall neuer bee destitute of his helpe at our neede. But yet the chiefe point is to consider the heritage which is reserued for vs in heauen, so as we tend thitherward, and set all our affections thereupon, without intangling ourselues so in these base things, that wec cannot haue our heartes alwayes vpwarde: and that for as much as our happinesse and treasure is aboue; wee be not held downe in this worlde; wherein all things are brittle and transitorie. After that maner ought we to consider the worde End, whereof Moses speaketh here. For whosoeuer they bee that seeke their happynesse heere beneath; surely they differ nothing at all from Oxen and Asses, but rather their state is yet much woore. For the beastes go on still, and are not troubled with the great number of lustes wherewith men are troubled. There is no ambition to be seene in them, there is no Couetousnesse, there is none of all the other lustes. If they be a thirst, they drinke; if they be a hungred, they eate. But men desire not onely to eate and drinke, but also to glut themselues and to follow all maner of excellen. Ye see then howe a man is more wretched than a beast, in that he is so caried away by his vnruely affections. Sith the case standeth so, let vs tend to the end which god setteth downe vnto vs; and let vs vnderstand that God doth so make vs to taste of his goodnesse in this earthly pilgrimage, y<sup>e</sup> he will haue vs to be filled therewith aboue, & but onely to passe through this world, or to dwell in it as sojourners, and in the meane while not cease to be ioynd and vnited to our Lord Iesus Christ, knowing that he is our head, and the fountaine of all good things, and that all our ioy, contentation, rest, and glory doe lye and consist in him: and on the contrary part, that if God punish vs not at the first for our offences, we must not therefore fall asleepe in the, nor take occasion thereby to flatter our selues. And why? If we liue so from day to day without looking any further: must it not needes be y<sup>e</sup> we be starke blocks? True it is that the faithfull are not vexed with ouergreat carefulness. For why? They cast themselues as it were into Gods lap, as they be encouraged to do in the psalm. Then shal we not be vexed wth vnquietnes, as they be which haue no trust in god. For when we cal vpon god, he is neere at hand, and we must not make long discourses in that behalfe as the worldlings doe, who stand scanning of that which is to come a hundred yeres after their death. Yet notwithstanding we must not be so wedded to y<sup>e</sup> things which we see before our eyes, that we shold not alwayes looke further off. But lyke as the promises of the heauenly lyfe ought to lift vs vp aboue the world: so ought Gods threatenings to quicken vs vp to walke in his feare, by rebuking vs for our sinnes when wee haue done amisse, and by calling vs daly to account: accordingly as it is sayde, that by faith Noe beheld the flood when other men made great cheere and feasting.

Matt. 6. 20.

Psal. 37. 5. &
145. 18.

Heb. 11. 7.

So then, let vs learne to haue an eye to our end: that is to say, when we haue offended God, let vs not fall asleepe vpon it, neither let vs foster our vices from morrow to morrow till we be growne hardhearted through vnreformable stubbornesse: but although God beare with vs and vse patience in winking at vs for a time: yet let not vs forbear to berinke vs of his threatenings, and to waken our selues that we may repent and aske forgiveness and turne vnto him with true amendment. Ye see then that the true wisdom is that men should not be tyed to the present things, but to lift vp their heartes and mindes to the things that are inuisible: accordingly as it is said that faith is a mirrour of the things that are not seene, and the ground of the things which are absent or farre from vs. Although then that our happinesse appeare not at the first, and it seeme that for all our seruing of God yet we be miserable, by reason whereof the vnbelieuers floute vs, and set their feete as it were vpon our throats, so as we be persecuted by them: yet notwithstanding let vs not cease to conclude, that hauing once put our trust in God, we shal not be disappointed. For why? The end of it wil be good: and therefore let vs tary patiently til God deliuer vs from the afflictions and miseries wherin we be at this day. Let vs therefore set our mindes vpon the end which God hath promised vs. And therewithall let vs also haue an eye to his threatenings, and let them hold vs in awe. And although the wicked prouoke God, and are not rebuked for it at the first, by cause God seeth that they be not worthy to be chastised by his hand: yet notwithstanding let not vs bee astonished therat, but let vs vnderstand that Gods threatening of the transgressors of his Law after that fashion is not in vaine. And therefore let vs frame our owne inditement, that we may prevent the condemnation which otherwise taryeth for vs. That (I say) is the thing which we haue to remember vpon the word End, wherof Moses hath spoken heere.

And therewithall we see the goodnesse of God heere expressed after a wonderful manner, in that he entereth into a complaining and sorrowing, as if he were a man that could suffer: O that this people (saith he) had bin weladvised. True it is that our Lord is not subiect to our passions; but he vseth such form of speech, to shew that the loue which he beareth vs, surmounteth the loue of all earthly fathers. And therefore it serueth in effect to doc vs to vnderstand, that when we goe wilfully into destruction, and receiue the grace which was offered vs to our saluation: then doe we grieve the spirit of God, as is said in the Prophet Esay: and it is al onc as if we strake God with a dagger, as he complayneth also by his Prophet Zachary. That is one thing in effect, which we haue to remember vpon this place. And were all this well grauen in our heartes; I pray you woulde it not make vs to abhorre all our finnes? When a man is tempted by Satan to offend his God, if hee would berinke himselfe of this point, and say; How now? Thou grieueth thy God, thou giuest him cause to enter into complaint and sorrowe, like a father that conceiueth griefe and anguish of mind when hee sees his children vnruely and vnreformable: It is a wounding of him at the heart, and so likewise God telleth vs y<sup>e</sup> we grieue his spirit: If a man (I say) would berinke himselfe throughly of these things: although he had a heart of stone, yet would they breake it and soften it. And this is the cause why that throughout all the holy Scripture hee complaineth of this; that we greatly grieue him, whē we are so wicked & vnruely. Therefore let vs aduise ourselues wel: & for as much as hee is desirous to be our father, let vs bee to him as children. For it must needs be that Satan hath more than bewitched vs, & that hee rageth most terribly in vs, if we be not moued at such kind of dealing. And it behoueth vs to much the more to marke well this text, by cause our Lord condemneth men for that they are too senselesse and brutish, and telleth them that they be too too blockish, in that they haue not eye to their ende: but specially for that hee proceedeth so farre, as to cloth himselfe with our humane passions, and lamenteth to see vs perishe wilfully, and that we cannot abyde that hee should deale like a father with vs. That is one thing more which we haue to make vpon this text.

Now if any man alleage, that God seeing men so destitute, could wel giue them vnderstanding, as we haue seene heereofore where it is sayde, God hath not yet giuen thee a minde and heart to vnderstand. We must mark that God hath his secret purpose, which he referueth to himselfe, (For he sheweth fauour to whom he listeth: and hee hath pitie on whom hee hath pitie) and it is not for vs to enter thereinto, but rather to doc him the honour to confesse that he is the fountaine of al goodnes, of al power, of al wisdom, and of all iustice and vprightnesse. Yet notwithstanding we must make hast when hee calleth & incorageth vs by his word. For if we come not, ne hearken to the things that are set forth to vs in his name, to receiue them obediently by faith: we shalbe condemned as persons that haue grieved his holy spirit by rebelling against him, and shewed our selues to be vnreformable children, that haue disdayned our father and made our selues strangers to him and to his house. That is the thing which is set forth vnto vs in this text. Therefore whereas God vpbraideth vs with our grieving of him, let vs beware that wee enter not into these needles curiosities: but rather let it suffice vs to behold him in his word, where he sheweth himselfe, and where he sheweth himselfe in such wise, as we shall finde that all they which frame themselues therewith, shall haue a happy end: that is to wit, that for as much as they bee adopted of God afore, they cannot perishe: and on the contrary parte, that they which turne their backe to God when he sheweth them his face, and which kick and spurne against him, shall for their sturdinesse reape nothing but confusion. That is the thing in effect, which we haue to gather vpon this place.

Now Moses addeth consequently, Were it possible for one man to chase a thousand, or that two should pue ten thousand to flight, unless the Lord had inclosed thee, and that their mightie one did hold thee captive? Here he sheweth by effect, y<sup>e</sup> God had sufficiently warned his people, if they had but one spark of reason in them. And thereupon it is to be concluded, y<sup>e</sup> there was no more excuse of ignorance for y<sup>e</sup> people, but y<sup>e</sup> they were convicted ouermuch, to haue hardened their hearts euen of willfull mallice, & so to haue withstoode God, & to haue letted him y<sup>e</sup> he should not bring the backe into the right way. That was y<sup>e</sup> meaning of Moses. Now let vs mark, y<sup>e</sup> when God vouchsafed to shew his fauour towards the people of Israel : then was his promise performed, y<sup>e</sup> is to wit, y<sup>e</sup> as soone as the people did but (as ye would say) remoue themselves, by & by their enemies were ouercome. We know what ouerthrowes they gaue, and by what meanes y<sup>e</sup> same came to passe. For we heare how it is said by y<sup>e</sup> Prophet Esay, y<sup>e</sup> whensoever God listeth to succour his people, & to vtter his power in their defence : it shall fall out wth them as it did in the voyage against Madian : for at y<sup>e</sup> time Gedeon gate not the victorie by mans policie, neither by vailancie, or strength of hand: but it was the sword of God & of Gedeon that did the deede. And yet it was so done, as it might seeme to be a play of young children . But our Lord saith y<sup>e</sup> he will maintaine his people after y<sup>e</sup> fashion. Againe in other texts he declareth that his sauing of his people shall be neither by sword nor by speare, but by his owne only hand. Ye see then how God hath shewed himselfe intuincible, as oft as he hath listed to defend his people. Contrariwise a verie shadowe was ynough to dismay those wretched people and to put them out of heart, so as they were ouerthrowen & brought in bondage of cruel tyrans. After what manner? A man cannot tell how. If a man looke vpon the ouercomming of them, it is a wonderfull and incredible thing to the sight of the worlde, that there should haue beene so great a change. Now for this cause doeth Moses adde, Were it possible that one man should put a thousand to flight, and that two should chase ten thousand, except your God had sold you, and that he held yee shutte up as prisoners? For so long as he gaue you courage, and shewed you that he intended to maintayne you : your enemies gayned nothing at your handes, but were vanquished by the onely looke of you, because your God fought for you . But as now yee see how your God taketh part against you, and howe it is hee that fighteth against you . And therefore impute not your rough handling vnto men, but consider howe it is the hand of God that pursueth you and is against you. Had the Israelites vnderstoode this, they had beene touched out of hand with their faultes, they had humbled themselves, & they had returned vnto God, acknowledging him for their Iudge. But they continued still in their spytefulness. Nowe then wee see the sturdinesse and also the more than beastly blindnesse which was in them. And this vpbaying of them is to be marked well. For wee knowe it is the highest poynt of condemnation, when GOD wynneth nothing at our handes by chastising vs, but his scourges become vnprofitable, as if a man should smite with a HAMMER vpon a stithy or Anuile. Therefore when GOD looseth his labour after that fashion in correcting vs; it is a token that our diseases are vtterly vncurable . And that is the cause why that in the first Chapter of Esay, hee playeth the sorowfull father, saying : Alas, what a thing is this ? From the crowne of the head to the sole of the foote, there is not any founde part in this people . I see they bee the same they were afore, they bee no whyt amended; and must I needes haue bestowed my labour in vayne? Wee see whereunto this tendeth : to wit, GOD sheweth that men are become starke diuels when they consider not that his correcting of them is to bring them to amendment . Nowe then if wee chafe vpon the bitte when God fendeth vs such warnings: surely wee be vtterly vnreformable . Therefore let vs bethinke our selues better, and as soone as God listeth vp his finger and maketh vs to perceyue his displeasure; let our finnes come before our eyes, and let vs thinke vpon them with vter mislyking of them, and returne againe vnto him . The thing then whereof wee be warned in this text, is that wee should better regard GODS scourges, and not kicke against the pricke: for wee shall gaine nothing thereby. Wee haue heard what is sayde in the Lawe, as I haue alleaged heerebefore, and as we haue read it in the eyght and twentith Chapter: that is to wit, that if wee march stoutly against GOD, hee also will strike crossely and ouerthwartly vpon vs. So then, let vs marke well the warnings which wee heare . When there cometh a dearth of vittelles, let vs not thinke that God sittes asleepe in heauen . It is hee that tryeth vs, to the intent wee should thinke vpon our finnes, and stand the more vpon our garde, knowing that they bee the Roddes wherewith he chastiseth vs . And hee doeth it not without cause; but of purpose to humble vs, and to further our saluation continually, vntill hee haue brought vs to it throughly . Therefore let vs learne to be brought backe continually to the knowledge of our vices and finnes, when God calleth and exhortheth vs thereto . And for the bringing thereof to passe, let vs take good heede to y<sup>e</sup> afflictions which we suffer, asuring ourselues that they ought to serue for our instruction .

And after this, Moses addeth further, that their mightie one is not as ours : that is to say, The Idols which the heathen worship, are not lyke to our God. And that it is so, they themselves are the Iudge. This place hath commonly beene expounded, as though Moses had complained that the enemies of the Israelites had so surpyred them, and so vexed them as no man might succour them; but it is cleane contrarie . For Moses declareth that if GOD were not against his people, they should not bee so scourged by their enemies: as if he should say, yee must not loke at your owne strength nor yet at your enemies, but consider that for as much as ye haue fought against your GOD, and prouoked his vengeance against you by your offences: all these troubles which you do now indure, are of his stirring vp against you, and your enemies haue not any whit of strength, but of his gift. Thinke not therefore that they should haue such power, vnlesse hee had sold you, and that hee himselfe held yee in captiuitie, and had deliuered you into the hands of your enemies. And for prooofe therof, is he like their ydols? Strength standeth not in men, but it cometh from heauen. Now then do not the heathen deserue to be deprived of all ayd, when they worship their ydols and dead things? But you now doe worship the liuing God, hee hath shewed that he will keepe you in his tuition, and that then you shall be safe against all the world. Seeing then that your God is not lyke the ydols of the heathen; howe could you bee overcome by them, if God did not afflict you, giue you ouer, and forsake you? And that it is so (sayeth he,) euen our enemies are Iudges. That is to say, the heathen perceiue and finde by experience the power of our God, so as they must needs spite of their teeth confesse, that our God hath all power in himselfe, and that their owne ydols are nothing. True it is that they abyde still in their ignorance and beastlinesse, but yet howsoeuer they bee disposed they haue the experience therof: and yet you consider not that. Heere Moses rebuketh the stubbornnesse of the people yet more, in that they tooke not warning by the great number of chastisements and visitations. Wee see then in effect, that when wee amend not at GODS chastisements, we must in the ende pay the arrerages: for there is so much the lesse excuse in vs. If God did lay the brydle in our neckes and warned vs not of our misdoings, but rather dazeled our eyes by blindingfold vs in such sort as wee might not see one whitte: yet shoulde not all that discharge vs, but yet shoulde not our sinne bee so heynous, so as it myght seeme to men that there were some little excuse for vs: but he goeth about to bring vs home to himselfe, hee sheweth vs that wee haue lued amisse, hee draweth vs to repentance, and wee proceede on still, as though wee had determined to resist his hande. Nowe it is sayde, Humble your selues vnder his myghtie haude. When GOD shaketh his hande ouer vs, it is good reason that wee shoulde stoop and relent vnto him, offering to him the sacrifice which hee requirerth, that is to say, the sacrifice of a sorrowfull heart. If wee doe not so, but stand our still with harde and stiffe neckies; so as although GOD proceede in calling vs to him, yet wee continewe still the same wee were afore; and notwithstanding his rehearing of one selfesame lesion to vs, yet wee stande still at one stayer: at length wee must needs come to account for it. That is the thing which Moses meant in this text.

What remayneth then to doe? Beholde, to all such as walke in the feare of GOD, and rest vpon the trust of his goodnesse, and flee to him for refuge; hee promisseth prosperitie in all things, so as they shall not want any thing so long as they be so vnder his protection. But on the other side, what can the ydols of all the heathen in the worlde doe, or of all such as haue peruered the true Religion? Shall they bee fauoured of God? No not a whit as in respect of themselves, sauing that hee will punish vs by their handes. Therefore when wee see men so aduanced about vs, and to haue the better hande of vs, so as they may tread vs vnder foote and deuour vs: let vs assure our selues that God persecuteth vs, and that it is he with whom we haue to deale. Because wee haue warred against him with our vices: he also nowe after long tarying for our amendment, is faine to shew vs and to make vs feeble to our cost, that for as much as he is our Iudge, he cannot abyde that his grace should be so despised and scorned. To bee short, whensoeuer wee bee afflicted, let vs enter into the thing which Moses telleth vs heere, and consider thus with our selues: Notwithstanding that our God haue promised vs that wee shall finde good succour continually at his hand, yet doe wee now see the cleane contrarie. And of whom is that long? Are not wee our selues to blame for it? Yes: For it is certaine that GOD soadeth nor his seruantes with wayne hope; nay hee alwayes goeth beyond their hope when they embrace his promises as they ought. Wee must conclude then, that by our sinnes wee haue forsaken and put from vs the succours which hee had promised vs, and by meanes whereof (as Moses sayeth in another place) wee bee stripped quite and cleane out of that good couerture wherein our welfare consisted. For in Exodus Moses speaking of the ydolatry which the people had committed in making the Calfe of golde, sayeth that they had stripped themselves naked: as if he should say, that the onely shadowe of God is ynough for our safetie, and that wee neede not to bee asfraid so long as GOD broodeth vs vnder his wings. But as soone as we fall to sin, we vncouer ourselues, laying ourselues open for a pray to Satan, and to all mischeefe. So then, we must conclude, that when our Lord dooth so set himselfe against vs, it is because of our sinnes. For why? His power is not abated, as saith the prophet Elay. Wherefore consume we so away in our miseries? Is it that God hath deafe eares & heareth not when we call vpon him? Or is his arme is broken so as he cannot help them as he did at first? No no: but because our sinnes haue cast a barre between him & vs, & we be not worthy to come at him to feele his helpe as afore.

Besides this, Moses by way of comparison toucheth the children of Israel yet neerer the quicke in that hee sayeth, That their enemies were Iudges thereof. And thereby he meaneth that euen beastes myght perceiue it (as it is said in the proverbe,) and that birdfolke myght iudge of it by groping. Nowe who were the enemies of the children of Israel at that time, but the Infidels which had not any sparke of light, euen such as were sorted in their superstitions? And howe coulde they then iudge of Gods power? Euen by the apparantnes therof, which was so great that it needed not any any great reason to conceite it. So then, in effect Moses sayeth heere that God had so manifested his power in sauing his people, as that not onely they which were enlightened by the holy ghost, but also euen the bruttishest in the world might perceiue it. And in deed, what myracl'es wrought God in deliuering his people out of the lande of Egypt, and in leading them through the wilderness? Neede we any great sharpnesse of wit to conceiue so wonderfull power, which may rauish our wittes to be astonished at it? No: but for as much as God hath shewed himselfe so openly: both great and small and euen the grossest in the world must needes perceiue, that it is God. So then, whensoever the word is matched with experience, & God giueth vs as it were spectacles to help vs, so as if our eyes be weake or dimmed, his word may bee a guide to shew vs how to discern his power towards vs: surely there will be no excuse for vs. For euen the Heathen must needes be Iudges or witnesses thereof, so as wee cannot alleage, Yea it is true that God hath done it, and we ought in deepe to discern it, but alas, wee perceiued it not, for he dealt after such a daike fashion, as we could not attaine thereto. Now, God telleth vs that if we were not so malicious as to shut our eyes, to stop our eares, & to dull all our senses when he sheweth vs ŷ tokens of his goodnes and mercy: we should feele them with our handes, though wee had no eyes to see them withall. And on the contrarie part, when he teacheth vs, if we were not wilfully blind, that is to say, are contented to bee ignoraunt of the things which ought to bee best known vnto vs, it could not be but that wlesse we continued, & that through our owne vnthankfulnesse, wrapped vp in ignorance, it could not bee I say, but that verie blind folkes themselves should be sufficient witnesses against vs, neither neede we to seeke any further staringholes in this behalfe, for it shall be in vaine. After that our Lord hath drawn vs to him as well by his goodnesse as by his chastisements, and we come not to him, nor persist to lue in his feare: then shall we come to the point to haue it cast in our teeth, and euen the ignorantest in the world, the Infidels which neuer tasted of Gods truth, must rise vp to beare witnesse against vs, and to condemne vs, and to cut off occasion of all excuses. Lo at what point we shall be then. But this is saide vnto vs to the intent we should not tarie to bee condemned after that fashion. Then seeing that our Lord maketh his woord knownen in these dayes, euen to such as are bewitched by Satan: & seeing that vnto vs he giueth his word, not onely as a lamp, but also as a bright shining sunne to giue vs light, and wee bee put in minde euery minute of an houre to thinke vpon him, to benefite our selues by his works, and to take such warning by them as may confirme our trust in his goodnesse, and bring vs to his obedience: let vs on our side apply our mindes wholly that way, and euery of vs put his induour thereto, and giue another manner of iudgement vpon such as haue despised God, and scorned his goodnes. Let vs (I say) become their Iudges, according to that which is said, that being the members of Iesus Christ, wee shall iudge the whole world. The way then for vs to put this text in v're, is not to tarie till our Lord haue condemned vs by the testimonie of the vnbeleeuers, but to be so well disposed to walke vnder his obedience, as our whole induour may be to frame our selues to that which he sheweth vs, and euery of vs to make his profite in such wise thereof, as our Lord Iesus may acknowledge & auow vs to be members of his body, and we may boast our selues to bee his, when it commeth to the last day.

Now let vs fall downe before the Maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchsafe to haue pitie vpon vs his sillie creatures, and that although we haue deserued to bee cast off by him, yet notwithstanding he wil not deal with vs according to our desertes, but rather shew foorth the treasures of his goodnesse, and for our Lorde Iesus Christes sake receiue vs into fauour, not only to pardon our faultes past, but also to bring vs home againe to himselfe, and to reforme vs in such wise vnto his will, as all our whole lyfe may be conformed to his righteoufnesse. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

32 For their vine is of the vineyard of Sodom, and of the fieldes of Gomorrhā, and their grapes are grapes of gall, and their clusters are bitter.

33 Their wine is the poyson of dragons, and the cruell gall of the Aspe.

34 Is not this layd vp in store with me, and sealed vp among my treasures?

35 Vengeance and requital belong to mee. When time is, their foote shall slip. For the day of their destruction is at hand, and the things that should come vpon them doe nmake hast.

Eere our Lorde sheweth what manner of fruites the Iewes deserued to gather. As if hee should say, that the vengeance which hee intended to execute vpon them, coule not bee founde to bee cruell, because there was nothing else in them but gall, bitternesse, and all manner of poyson. And bycause these figuratiue speeches might seeme somewhat obscure: hee addeth, That they brought forth none other than the fruites of Sodoms and Gomor. Whereby hee doeth them to vnderstande, that their wicked deedes were as shamefull as the dooings of those two Cities, the which it was Gods will to destroy with lightning from heauen, to giue an cuerlasting example to the whole worlde. Nowe wee see in effect what the meaning of Moses was. In deede some take this for punishment, saying that GOD would pay them with the like. As how? Namely that hee would giue them bitternesse, sowernesse, anguish, and all manner of punishments to drinke of. And true it is that the Scripture speaketh oftentimes so: for it likeneth all the chastisements which GOD sendeth vpon men, vnto drinke. Thou shalt drinke of my cuppe. As how? I will fende you of my spirit of giddinesse, and of the spirit of rage and madnesse. Likewise in another text he sayeth, I will feede you with heauinesse and sorowe, and I will make you to drinke of my wrath till yee burst. This kinde of teaching then is ryfe ynough in the holy scriptures. But in this text God hath a higher respect. Indeede it is true that hee threateneth the Iewes, but yet therewithall hee sheweth that hee will punish them iustly according to their offenses. They that referre this to the heathen and Infidels, deceiue themselves. For they tooke it, that God after he had punished his owne people, would turne his wrath against those by whom hee had serued his turne, accordingly as wee knowe that when God listeth to execute his vengeance vpon the Iewes, hee vsed the seruice of the heathen, stirring vp some of the King of Egypt, sometime the King of Assyria, and another while the King of Chaldie. Ye see then that the Infidels were the instruments of Gods wrath. Not that they minded to serue God in making those warres; but wee knowe that God by his secret prouidence ouerruleth all things here below, and applyeth them all to good vse, making men how wicked soeuer they bee, euen in despite of their teeth to execute and performe all y things that he hath ordained. Now when God hath so serued his turne by y heathen; then comes their turne also. For it is said that whē God hath done and dispatched all his woork vpon mount Sion, then will he also ouermaister all those which play their pranks, and weene to scape Gods hand and to abide vnpunished: for he wil wely enough find them out to pay them double. Howbeit, Moses in this place treateth not of the heathen, but rather proceedeth in his matter wherewith he had begunne: which is, that God would punishe the Jewes, which ought to haue bin as his children, and yet notwithstanding had not ceased to make warre against him, so as he held them and tooke them for his enemies. After which maner wee see how he speaketh by his prophet Esay in the first Chapter, saying: Alas, must I needes bee aunged of mine enemies?

But now that wee know of whom Moses speaketh: let vs looke more necerly wherefore it is sayde that the vine of the Iewes is of the vineyard of Sodome and of the fieldes of Gomor. Wee knowe howe our Lorde lykeneth his Church to a vineyard. And not onely in this place; but also in the fifth chapter of Esay it is most notably set downe, where he sayeth, I will sing a song vnto my beloved of his vineyard. There the Prophet taketh vpon him GODS cause, lyke as a friend vndertaketh a quarell of him for whom he is minded to doe it. I will goe sing a song, sayeth he. After I had brought thee out of the Lande of Egypt, I planted thee in a fat soyle, I husbanded thee, I made a pressing fette for thee, and I omitted not any thing that belonged to thee: and now whereas I looked to receiue good fruite of thee: thou hast brought mee forth nothing but bitternesse. Yea and our Lorde Iesus himselfe had an eye to this song of Esayes, when he accused the Iewes of such vnkindenesse towards God, that when hee hadde laboured by all means to saue them, yet they aduanced themselves so farre against him, as to murder his prophets whom he sent vnto them to gather vp his Rents, yea and in the end to murder his onely sonne and heire.

But nowe let vs come to that which Moses sayeth heere; namely, that they bee of the planting of Sodome, and of the field of Gomor. It be booueth vs to marke these two contrarie things. The one is, that God had chosen that people for his heritage, tendering it as a vine, and husbanding it all manner of wayes. It was meete therefore that they should haue yielded some good fruite vnto God, and that was the fruite of Sodome, that is to say, all manner of wickednesse wherewith Gods anger and vengeance were prouoked against them. And not without cause doeth Moses speake so: for hee foresawe in his minde, that that people would giue themselves ouer to all euill. And wee knowe also howe the prophets reprove them for it. For they blame them not for some meane faultes; but they tell them that they haue outgone the wickednesse of the Sodomites and Gomorrites, & that whē the account cometh to be made, Sodome and Gomor shall bee their Iudges, yea and bee counted innocentes in comparison of Israell and Iuda. For we must alway remember that God had gathered that people to himself, and that the more fauour he had bestowed vpon them, the greater was their vnkindnesse, and consequently the greenouser was their fault, and the lesse were they to be excused. Now the Prophets had an eye to the things which Moses had prophesied afore. And so the whole matter cometh to this pnt, that the Iewes, who ought to haue glorified God, and which ought to haue had none other regard nor other study all their life long, than to liue in all purenesse of conuersation; ceased not to doe euill, and to yeelde all maner of bitternesse vnto God. Such it is so, we must not thinke that God did them wrong, neither ought they to complaine though hee punishe them extremely, and lay farre greater and horribler vengeance vpon them, than vpon all other Nations of the world. Such fruite then as they had sowed, and such fruit as they brought forth, such fruit did they gather: and it was good reason that God should deale so rigorously with them. That is the thing in effect, which wee haue to beate in mind.

And now to apply this lesson to our benefite, let vs make first of all, that if we weene our selues to haue done but a small fault, as men commonly doe either cloake their offences through hypocritic, or else go about to make them lesse than they be in deede: God will take vs to be like the folke of Sodom and Gomor. And why so? Those blind wretches gaue ouer themselves vnto ouerheynous and cursed sinnes, and became beastly. But what? As for vs we haue the lyght of life; we haue GOD calling vs into the way which is ready made, so as we neede but to goe on; wee bee warned to walke in obedience to GOD, and to dedicate our selues wholie to him euen as hee hath chosen vs to be his heritage: now if after all this, wee offende him yet still, although our sinnes bee counted but small before men, are wee not as blameworthy as Sodom and Gomor, considering the rebelyounesse which is in vs, and that we make warre against God euen of set purpose? Yes: and therefore let no man beguile himselfe, nor no man flatter himselfe, but let vs consider how our Lorde will condemne vs still as he did Sodom and Gomor. For God did giue them their fill, so as they had abundance of all good things, whereuppon they waxed proud, and did shut their handes and vouchsafed not to succour the poore and needy. To bee shorte, in that place hee accuseth Sodome and Gomor of three things: first that when GOD preferred them, they became vnthankfull to him, and considered not from whence their welfare proceeded, secondly that they grewe proude, and gaue themselves to pompes and delyghtes: and thirdely that they were cruell, and had no pitie nor compassion of their neyghbours to releue them, hauing wherewith. And nowe let vs see if our Lorde giue not vs occasion ynough, to loue and serue him, seeing he blesteth vs so many wayes. We must not haue an eye to the things that belong to this flightfull and transitorie lyfe, and to the sustentance of our bodyes: but let vs consider howe God powreth out his spirituall benefites vpon vs. Hauing so our fill, what acknowledgement doe we make to him thereof? Doeth not the world see that we put all things out of minde? It should seeme that our meaning is to deuour GODS benefites euen in mockage of him. As touching pride, doth not the world see howe great it is in most of vs? Doe wee suffer our selues to be guided by the hand of Gods Nay, as soone as any man shewes vs our faults, wee gnash our teeth at him, and there is none of vs that will bee meekened. True it is that wee will all generally confesse, that it is good reason that GOD should gouerne vs, and that wee should be guided and directed by his word: but when it comes to the prooffe, none of vs will taste of that sauce: euerie of vs letteth the brydle loose to his lustes, and so wee drowne and become drunke in our delyghtes. Likewise wee bee full of crueltie. Where shall a man nowe a dayes finde men that desire to communicate so with their neyghbours, as they bee contented to releue the neede of the poore? We see the contrarie. Thinke wee that GOD sleepeeth in the meane whyle? Thinke wee that hee hath a double measure to mete with? So then (as I haue declared afore) wee shall gayne nothing by flattering our selues: but GOD shall euer finde vs like to the folke of Sodom and Gomor, if we beelie his word, and in stead of dedicating our selues vnto him, doe leade a heathenish and loose life. That is one thing which wee haue to marke vpon the first place.

Againe, let vs marke well also, howe hee lyketh the fruite of Sodom and Gomor to the gall or venim of the Aspe, to the cruell or deadly poyson of the Dragon, and to all manner of bitternesse. For thereby hee doeth vs to vnderstande, that when wee liue wickedly, it is all one as if wee offered GOD poyson to drinke, or woulde goe about to poyson him. True it is that God is not subiect to such things: but yet is it not long of vs. But if a childe shoulde offer his father the gall of an Aspe, and all maner of bitternesse: I pray you woulde not euerie man abhorre such a monster? Woulde they not say he deserued to haue all men rise vp against him to roote him out? Beholde, heere our Lorde complaineth that when wee yeelde not the fruite which hee requireth of vs, it is all one as if wee did giue him bitter things to drinke, or as if wee woulde make him to burst with gall, or with the poyson of an Aspe. Were this weyed as it deserueth, surely wee woulde stand more in awe than wee doe. When the diuell tempteth vs and prouoketh vs to euill, if wee beare this lesson well in minde, [wee woulde say to our selues,] Howe now? Wilt thou profer thy GOD the gall of Aspes, and ranke poyson to drinke? Truly wee are not so blockifft but that our hartes woulde relent at it, and it woulde make vs to bebinke our selues. But alas, the diuell doeth so bewitch vs, that wee followe our wicked lustes still. Neuertheless this is not spoken in vayne. So then let vs not imagine that Moses hath heaped vp heere a deale of needelesse speeche in that he sayeth, Their vine is of the planting of Sodom and of the vineyarde of Gomor: and againe, their grapes are bitter, they bee the vertie gall of the Aspe, and their wyne is the poyson of Dragons. His gathering of all these things together, is to shewe vs that wee cannot let ourselues against GOD by leading a disordered lyfe as we doc, but that (so farre as is possible for vs) wee offer to him bitterneffe and sowerneffe to drinke, as if wee should put venim and poyson into his cuppe. And euen for that cause also doth he complayne that such as haue forebelled against him, haue greued his spirit. Not that God (as I sayd afore) is subiect to any such passions; but therein hee sheweth mennes wicked dooinges according to this saying: They shall perceiue him whom they haue wounded. And how is that? Where are the daggers and swordes wherewith GOD can bee wounded? Nay hee sheweth that our sinnes are taken as sore to heart, as though they were daggers to wound liim withall. Now seeing it is so, and that our God hauing chosen vs for his vine and planted vs, dooth also take payne still to husband vs; let vs learne not to yeelde him so harsh and bitter fruite, but rather to regarde what hee demaundeth of vs, and thereunto apply our selues, that in the end wee bee not condemned to haue bin as Sodom and Gomorre, whereas hee would haue had vs to haue bin his holy cite, and hee himselfe would haue dwelled among vs, as in his sanctuary and dwellinghouse.

Now hee addeth thereunto, Is not this layd vp with mee? Is not this sealed vp among my treasures? This text comprehendeth two things. For first of all God sheweth that sinners beguile themselves, imagining to scape his hand as though his eyes were blindfold, or as though he regarded not the things that men do here below. And secondly he sheweth that he also will therfore do his office, not to wit, that forasmuch as hee knoweth their sinnes and wicked deedes, he will also punish them as they deserue. Those are the two poyntes which we haue to marke. Now as touching the first, wee knowe that men doe alwayes surmise that God perceiueith them not. True it is that wee will not say it with open mouth, nay wee will abhorre to say so; for if it bee demaunded of the veriest naughtie packes, whether God gouerne not the world, or whether he knowe not all mens fautes; they will say yes. But yet for all that, it is certaine that such as prouoke him so boldly, are so dulheaded and brutish, that to their seeming God seeth them not; and the Scripture is full of that thing. Shall not he which hath made the eare, heare? Shall he be blind which hath created the eye. Shall not he which fashioneth mens harts vnderstand all their thoughtes? And they againe haue sayd on their parte, God shall not perceiue it. To bee short, experience sheweth that when men haue hardened themselves in their sinnes, they doe also beare themselves in hand that God thinketh not any more vpon them, but that he turneth his backe and forgetteth them. So at what poynt we bee. But our Lorde telleth here on the contrary part, that all those things are layde vpe in his treasures, and fast sealed. As if he should say, true it is that at the first dash I shewe not that your sinnes are come to my knowledge, I make as though I saw them not. Now because I vse such patience, you imagine that I sit idle in heauen, and let you alone, and minde not any more the gouernment of the world. Therefore ye abuse my goodnes when my vengeance is not seene out of hand; but yet are all those things layd vp in store by me, and fast sealed vp in my treasures.

Nowe to benefite our selues by this text, let vs haue an eye to that which is sayd in Daniell, that the bookes shall bee layd open when the Iudge holdeth his Assises. Therefore if our sinnes bee hidden as nowe from the worlde, so as wee be not accused of them nor no man rebuketh vs for them, insonmuch that we doe as it were fall asleepe in them: let vs nor therefore forbear, continually to mourne for them before God, and to enter into account, and to quicken vp our selues, knowing well that the Registers must bee layd open, when the sentence shall bee giuen, and that as then our inditement must needs bee framed. Wee shall not bee made priuie to it aforehand, but as soone as the Trumpet shall haue sounded, and our Lorde is set vpon the benche, there shall neede neither Register nor secretarie to reade it, but euery mans conscience must accuse himselfe, and euery man beare witness against himselfe, and euery man must lay open his owne shamefull dealings: Sith it is so, let vs take heede, to ourselues, and not deuite our selues by our vaine selfe soothing; For although God punish vs not presently, but beare with vs. for a time: yet dooth it not therfore followe, that hee perceiueith not all our naughtie and wicked doinges. That is the thing then which we haue to remember in this text, wherein God saith; that all these things are layd vp by him, and fast sealed vp in his treasures.

Yet notwithstanding; no doubt but Moses had an eye to the punishmentes, as if it had bin sayd, that GOD can well referue chastisements to their due times, so that if he venter them not at the first; hee knoweth wherfore hee delayeth them, and yet in the meane while they abide fast locked vp. Therefore whensoever GOD openeth his chestes; hee will finde terrible manners of vengeance, which are incomprehensible to vs as nowe. Yea and let vs marke, that when GOD hath punished vs. two or three wayes; if hee withdrawe his hand afterward, and yet wee cease not to offend him still; but hold on from euill to worse: wee shall bee amazed to see what new punishmentes hee will finde out; which wee neuer thought of. Therefore let vs not beguile our selues; as though wee by our wit could measure both Gods punishmentes, and all things belonging to his iudgement: but rather let vs vnderstande, that they bee hoorded vp as treasures; and as often as wee becke thinke vs of our fautes, let vs say with David, Lorde who is hee that knoweth his owne sinnes. Truly David played not the hypocrite in hiding himselfe, neither sought hee vaine and tryling shifts to disguise his sinnes; but after he had well examined himselfe, hee sawe that Gods a farre other manner of Judge than hee himselfe was, and (as Saint Iohn saith) farre greater than our owne consciences. If our owne consciences accuse vs, for euery fault which wee perceiue in our selues God knoweth a hundred. So then, there is no more for vs to doe but to cry out with Dauid, Who is he that knoweth his owne faults? Lorde cleanse mee from my secret finnes. The way then which wee haue to deale, is first & foremost to doe our indenour to search well the euill that is in vs, and (when wee haue done all that wee can,) to conclude in the end that wee perceiue not the hundredth part, and that God must bee faine to cleanse vs from our Iniquities, euen though wee perceiue them not at all. Let that serue for the one poynt.

Againe as touching punishments, if GOD maintaine vs in rest and at our ease, yea and thereunto doe also prosper vs: it must not make vs to fall asleepe. For why? He hath his treasures in the meane while, which are hoorded vp. Therefore let vs bee afraid, and although the signes of his anger appeare not, but hee seeme rather to smile vpon vs: yet if any man finde himselfe faultie, let him flee to him and praie him to forbear the putting forth of the treasures of his vengeance, and rather to cleanse vs from all our faultes, and to set vs so cleare from them, as we may come before his face without spotte, and vnblameable, not in respect of our owne perfection, but because hee hath forgiven vs our offences, and so buried them as hee will not call them to account. After that manner must wee put that texin practise. And for a worde let vs marke well, that he behooueth vs to awake that wee may lue as in the presence of God. Seeing that out nothing escapeth him, nor nothing beeth out of his remembrance, except it bee when he vouchsafeth to vse mercie towards vs: and lyke as hee marketh all our offences, so he hath wherewith to punish them; and hee can lay most horrible and dreadfull vengeance vpon vs: let vs not tary till hee execute such sentence vpon vs, but (as I tolde you afore) let vs rather pray him to cleanse vs from all our finnes, and to viter forth the endlesse treasures of his goodness towards vs.

Now to confirme this lesson, Moses addeth, Vengeance is mine, and I will pay home in time come. Their foote shall slip, the day of their destruction is at hand, the time thereof is set on apace. We see that when Moses sayd, This is layd vpon my treasures, hee meant it not simply of mens finnes, but also of the corrections which God sendeth vpon such as haue offended him too much; & to shewe that hee hath meanes wherewith to punish them, which are withowen to men, and which shall amase them when they come to passe. In respect whereof hee sayth, Vengeance is mine: As if hee should say, what thinke yee mee to bee? For you call mee God, and yet in the meane while yee acknowledge mee not to bee the Iudge of the world: and that is a robbing me of my glory and maiestie. And in decde, what is GODS beeing, but that when men haue liued in this worlde, they shoulde come to account before him, and hee bee their Iudge? If wee scape Gods hand, so as our faultes abide vnpunished, and euery man might runne at routers as hee listeth, and in the meane while GOD should shut his eyes at them; what a thing were that? Should wee not make as it were a dead idoll of him? Yes certainly. Here therefore GOD chalengeth to himselfe the office of reuenging, as if hee should say, Think not that my diuine being or this name of GOD consisteth in I wot not what an idle toy: but that it importeth that I gouerne the worlde with my power, that all things are guided by my wisdom, that my righteoufnesse reigneth, and that I haue the dominion of the worlde in such wise, as all things must needs come to account before mee, that such as haue serued and honored mee may not loose their labour, nor the wicked scape vnpunished which haue not ceased to breake all order and to worke mee despite. After this manner will I bee known to bee GOD, euen when you shall perceiue and seele my wisdom, power, and righteoufnesse. Now then, vengeance is mine (sayth hee) that is to say, I am the Iudge, and therefore be guile not your selues. It seemeth at the first sight that Moses saith not any thing here, which is not known and confessed of all men. For who will deny that God is a Iudge? And yee for all that, (as I sayd afore) after wee haue confessed it generally, euery of vs intangleth himselfe in his owne imaginations, and wee thinke not vpon it when it cometh to the offending of GOD, wee make no account of it; all is one to vs, wee bee as bolde as mad men. And must it not neede be then, that the knowledge which wee had thereof is ouercast with a slumber? Now then forasmuch as men doe wittingly deceiue themselves, by turning away from this doctrine, that is to wit, that GOD is the Iudge of the worlde: therefore are men here put in minde that vengeance is his, and that hee will not forget to execute his office. And so wee see now to what purpose Moses vsed that lesson.

Notwithstanding this, Saint Paul alledgeth the same euen properly also, there by to restraine vs from reuenge and from taking vpon vs the thing that GOD hath referred to himselfe. Now then my friendes (sayth hee) reuenge not your selues, but giue place to wrath: for it is written, Vengeance be longeth vnto mee. There wee see howe Saint Paul asswageth the cholere and vnruly passions which carry men away, when they bee in a chafe. My friendes (sayth hee) reuenge not your selues, for yee must giue place to wrath, or else it is all one as if yee striued against GOD, and hindered him from dooing his office. But let him alone, for hee hath promised that forasmuch as he is the Iudge of the worlde, whensoever you bee troubled by your enemyes, hee will requite them with the lyke; howbeit conditionally that yee beare all thinges patiently and meekely. For if yee will needes auenge your felues, it is all one as if yee did shutte the doore againſt GOD; as who woulde ſay, I will not tari for him, but I wyll trie what I can doe of my ſelfe. Howe ſo? God is willing to bee your protector, hee is ſo gracious to you all as to take you into his tuition, and to auenge you of your wronges: and you bee ſo vnpatient and ſumiſh, that ye cannot find in your heartes to tari his working: But whoſo- euer haſteth after that ſorte, dooth as it were thruſt himſelfe into Gods ſeate, and that is a blaſpheming of his name. Nowe therefore bee well aduiſed (ſaith hee,) and looke that yee giue place to GODS wrath, that is to ſay, that yee ſuffer our Lorde patiently and with a mild and quiet minde, to doe and perſorme the thing which hee hath promiſed, for as much as vengeance belongeth vnto him.

This wee ſee nowe whereto this ſaying rendeth, and that Saint Paule hath applyed this text wiſely, as whereof two thinges may bee gathered: whereof the one is, that for as much as wee ſee our felues continually giuen to throwde our felues vnder hypocriſie, wee ſhoulde alwayes lue in feare and warineſſe: aſſuring our felues that when wee haue playde the beaſts neuer ſo much, and when we be neuer ſo befoted in our ſins, we ſhall haue made neuer the better marker, but in the ende GOD will needes perſourme that which he ſpeaketh heere. For why? Hee cannot bee God but that therewithall hee muſt needes bee Iudge of the world alſo. Therefore let vs lue in awe of him. Secondly wee haue wherewith to comfort vs, in that wee ſee he will auenge vs of our enemies, if wee induour to giue our felues wholly vnto him, and to keepe our felues brooded vnder his winges; for if wee ſuffer him to guide and gouerne vs by his holy ſpirit, and induour to followe his worde, the vengeance which is to bee feared of all the deſpiſers of his Maieſtie and of all that ſtriae againſt his word, ſhall be turned vpon our enemies, and in ſo doing our Lorde will ſhew and confirme the fatherly loue which hee beareth vs. To bee ſhort, on the one ſide this doctrine prouoketh vs to bee afrayde to prouoke the wrath of our GOD wittingly, for feare leaſt wee feele his horrible vengeance. And on the other ſide it gladdeth and cheareth vs, by cauſe wee ſee that GOD vndertaketh warre againſt our enemies, to reuenge our wronges as if they were done to himſelfe. Now therefore if wee will obey Saint Pauls exhortation, wee muſt note that we muſt not onely referre all reuenge vnto God: but alſo holde our felues as brydled or impriſoned, and not deſire to haue GOD to execute all thinges which we haue imagined in our owne fanſies. For there are which wil not reuenge themſelues with their handes, but yet they woulde haue GOD to execute whatſoever they haue conceiued in their owne brayne, yea and they doe euen pray vnto GOD to thunder downe vpon their enemies. But contrariwiſe wee be commaunded to pray for the welfare of them that doe vs harme. Then muſt we not onely abſtaine from reuenge, but alſo pray GOD to forgie our enemies, and to rure them, and to haue pitie vpon them. For if we auenge our felues, howe doe wee leaue it to Gods wrath to bee auenged? True it is that if our enemies bee vnterly paſt hope of amendment, wee muſt put them into the hande of the Iudge. But vntill ſuch tyme as there bee no more hope of recouerie, let vs alwayes deſire their conuerſion vnto GOD, and let vs further them thereunto, by reaching them as much as wee can. Therefore, to giue place vnto wrath, is not onely to keepe our handes tyed vp, that wee doe not murder men: but alſo to brydle our affections, ſo as wee wiſh nor any euill to our enemies; but rather (why they be conuerſant with vs heere beneath,) to deſire God to haue pitie and mercie vpon them, ſo long as there is any hope of them.

Let vs nowe goe forwarde with the ſaying of Moſes. To mee (ſayeth hee) belongeth Reuenge and Requital, or I will requite it. For the worde which Moſes vſeth may well be translated thus: Vengeance is myne, and therefore I will requite it. As if our Lorde ſhoulde ſay, I will doe my duetic: for I am not as mortall men, which doe often ſayle, pretending great tydes and dooing nothing in effect. Seeing then that vengeance belongeth to mee, I will pay euery man according as he hath deſerued. And ſo thereupon he concludeth, That their foote ſhall ſlip in conuenient time. Here Moſes meant to ſhewe, that whereas God had ſpared the Iewes, it did not therefore follow that he had quite and cleane diſcharged them, but that his bearing with them was to ſee if they would at length returne to him againe, and that for as much as hee ſawe them ſtubborne, they ſhould catch a fall in the ende, yea euen in the turning of a hand. He addeth expreſſely: in time conuenient, to ſhewe that hee knoweth that it behooueth him to moderate his roddes, and that it is not to bee ſayde that hee foreſloweth too long, when hee is not haſtie. And why? By cauſe hee doeth thinges in their due ſeaſons. Therefore wee muſt let him alone with the doing of his workes in ſuch meaſure as hee liſteth: wee muſt not haſt Gods vengeance after our owne fanſie. And hee vſeth this compariſon, That their foote ſhall ſlyde, or ſlip. And why? For wee ſee howe the wicked miſbehaving themſelues againſt GOD, doe vaunt themſelues aboue other men, and are not contented with their owne place and degree, but they ſuppoſe that without winges they can take the Moone with their teeth, as the common ſaying is. For as much therefore as they exalt themſelues aboue other men, and would as it were fet their feete in all folkes neckes, yea and that they make countenance to bee no more ſubiect to GOD himſelfe: Moſes ſayeth expreſſely that their foote ſhall ſlip. As who would ſay, Thinke they that they ſhall keepe their footing? Thinke they themſelues ſo well rooted and grounded, that they ſhall neuer be ſhaken? Nay, but as it is ſayde in the tenth Pſalme, They ſhall ſtumble.

ble, and I will make them to flyde. According whereunto it is sayde in another place, Lorde thou hast set their feete in slipperie places, To be short, Moses meant to shewe heere, that God will ouerthrowe all the despisers of his woorde. When they haue long time looked aloft, and flourished and prospered among men, yea and triumphed ouer others: hee will at length make them to stumble. Therefore let vs not truit to our state, neither let vs abuse our selues when wee bee vphelde and vnderpropped, so as the worlde fauoureth vs and wee haue store of worldly helpes to mayntaine vs. For why? Vnlesse God holde vs fast, and that wee rest vpon him, surely wee bee in slipperie places; for although wee perceiue it not, yet is there nothing but yce in this world. One speciall poynt then which wee ought to note well, is that wee must not thinke to haue any stay but in the grace of God. When he vouchsafeth to maintaine vs by his power, then may wee assure our selues that wee bee well grounded. But if he bee not fauorable to vs, if he vpholde vs not: let vs assure our selues that wee stand vpon yce, and wee shall not neede any thing to ouerthrowe vs. And although it befall vs not so at the first dash, yet let vs assure our selues that the conuenient times are in the hand of God, who knoweth well the fit seasons, and that if they bee not to day, they will bee to morrow. And that is a thing which ought to waken vs well, and make vs to looke about vs for feare of this lesion.

Also on the contrarie part it ought to bee a comfort to vs to see howe our Lorde ouerruleth all things in this worlde, and that although the wicked which seeke our ouerthrowe bee now exalted, and haue such authoritie that they make all other men to tremble: yet our Lorde will giue them the slip, and trip vp their heeles. Yee shall see them vaunt themselves, yee shall see them looke as bigge as though they would swallow vp Gods Church, yee shall see them make stoute bragges, the thrusting foorth of their hand is ynough to sweepe downe all thinges a hundred leagues off; & yet ere they can turne their foote, they are cast downe and all their attemptes goe quite and cleane backward. Now when wee see these thinges, truly it is ynough to astonish vs and to abash vs: but yet on the other side seeing it is sayde that they stande vpon yce, God will make them to stumble. The remembrance wherof being wel printed in our mindes, woulde put away all impedimentes that keepe vs from fleeing vnto God, & from praying him to vouchsafe to hold vs alwaies vnder his protection, vnder the which, (do the wicked what they can against vs) they shall neuer bring it to passe. Thus much concerning the conuenientnesse of the time, and the slipping or flyding wherof Moses speaketh here.

Nowe to knit vp the matter withall, hee sayeth, That the day of their destruction draweth nigh, and that their times are comming in hast. This serueth still to touche those the better, which doe easily beare with their owne faultes, and cast the time behinde their backs, as they say.

But GOD telleth vs that suddainly ere they thinke of it, yea and euen when they warrant themselves peare and rest, their destruction shall come vpon them, accordingly as the Scripture doth oftentimes put vs in mind thereof, and not without cause. For wee see howe men do take their aduantage, by cause they imagine that whē God hath borne with them a day, a moneth, or a yeere, it shall bee so still for euer after. By this meanes ye see how men doe reckon without their hoste, bearing themselves in hande that tyme is worth monie, according to the common prouerbe which hath raigned at all tymes. For this cause it is sayde, that the wicked must feele Gods hand in such sorte, as that they shall bee ouerwhelmed ere they thinke of it. And therefore the Scripture likeneth them to a woman with Childe: for she is ouertaken in lesse than the turning of a hand. Euen so is it with those which are full of Gods wrath according to their feeding of it in themselves. And yet for all that, they go on still and keepe their olde trade, bearing themselves in hand that God is a great way off, and that they shall haue forewarnings a long time before they feele the blowes. But they be amased to see how God hath vnterly destroyed them.

For this cause it is sayde, Your dayes make haste, your time is at hand. And that is the thing which Moses looked at. Therefore let vs now looke to benefite our selues by this lesion, and let vs make our commoditye of it in such wise, as we may walk in y<sup>e</sup> feare of our God. Although things seeme to be in quiet, yet let vs not cease to haue an eye to his wrath. For that is a thing wherein our sayth must be exercised, if our lord spare vs and deale not roughly with vs as we deserue; let vs thinke, alas, yet haue we offended our God exceedingly, and thereby deserue well that hee should looke sternely vpon vs: and yet notwithstanding hee sheweth himselfe to haue pitie vpon vs, but yett must not that cause vs to fall asleepe. The first thing then which wee haue to remember vpon this place, is that wee must haue an eye to Gods wrath a farre off as though it were at hand. The second is that we must be of good comfort when God seemeth to be as it were asleepe and letteth the wicked alone, and toucheth them not so much as with his litle finger, but seemeth euen to fauor them. Let vs assure ourselues that their state is neuer the better for all that. For it shall amafe vs to see how God will worke more in one day, than wee looked for in ten yeeres. Yee see then after what manner the saythfull ought to hold themselves in awe. Namely that when we haue bethought vs of Gods threatenings, and considered that his Iudgements make haste in coming: we may be sure that we shall not linger ouerlong in this world, but that God wil performe this saying of his by the prophet Abacuck, that although he shew not himselfe to haue pity vpon his children at y<sup>e</sup> first: yet will he performe his promises: and although he doe it not out of hand, yett shall we perceiue in the end, that they make haste, that is to say that they be comming in time conuenient, Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs perceiue them better than we haue doone, and in the meane while not to suffer vs to settle still in our leawde dealings and offences, nor to yeelde him such bitter fruites, that in steede of beeing his inheritance wee shoulde become as Sodome where all manner of outrage was committed; but that being governed by his holy spirite, wee may be cleansed from all our wicked affections, y<sup>e</sup> hauing brought him forth such fruit as heerequireth, we may be gathered vp into his glorie, to be taken and auowed for his children: And that whē he chastiseth vs we may so benefite our selues by his correCTIONS, as wee may not become vntreformable, but CAP. 32. to him out of hande, to the ende we may not onely bee exempted from the curses wherewith hee threateneth the skorners of his worde; but also be mayntained by his defence, and his wrath and vengeance bee turned vpon our enemies, to the better assuring of vs that he is our God and Sauour. That it may please him to grant this grace, not only to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewfday the xvj. of Iune, 1556.

The CLXXXVII. Sermon, which is the tenth vpon the two and thirtieth Chapter.

36 Surely the Lorde will take in hande the case of his people, and repent him for his seruantes, when he seeth thei strength is so gone from them, that they be in a manner shut vp, and none of them left remaining.

37 And when it shalbe sayd, where are their gods, [euen] their God in whom they trusted:

38 The fat of whose sacrifices they did eat, and the wine of whose drinke of frings they dranke? Let them stepe vp and helpe you, and let them bee your refuge.

39 See nowe how it is I, euen I that am God, and there is no God with me.

Such as thinke that God hath hitherto already threatened the heathen & vncircumcised, which skorned the Iewes when they sawe them in aduersitie, expounde this text as though our Lorde shoulde say that hee will maintaine the case of his people, when hee sees them become such a skorning stocke to the Infidels, and that hee will reioyce in so doing. For the seconde worde which Moses vseth, betoketh sometimes to comfort. But wee must remember what hath bene saide afore, namely that GOD continueth in threatening such as cannot bee subdued but by maine force, according to the hardnes of heart which wee knowe to haue bene in that people. It was not enough then for God to haue threatened them in a worde or twayne: but it stood him vpon to holde them as it were imprisoned. And that is the cause why hee addeth nowe, That God will iudge his people. As if hee shoulde say, Those whome GOD hath chosen must not thinke to haue a priuiledge to be let alone vnpunished in their offences and wicked doings: it is cleane contrarie: for therein will God shew his Iustice. And although God be Iudge of the whole worlde in generall: yet will he be knowne to bee so cheefely in his Church as the which is his house, and it is good reason that he shoulde haue a care thereof and shew himselfe to watch ouer it. And therefore when they that haue bene trained in Gods worde, and are his stocke doe runne astray: he must needs reforme them first of all. And that is the cause why the Prophete saith that Iudgement shall beginne at Gods house, which thing Saint Peter alleadgeth also. And it is a verie notable saying, and such a one as may serue vs to great purpose. For we be abashed when wee see God lay his hand vpon them that call vpon his name, and are counted of the number of his seruantes. When hee handleth them more roughly than he doth the Infidels, which belong no whit vnto him, it seemeth strange. But wee must note what I haue alleadged afore, namely that forasmuch as GOD acknowledgeth vs for his household folke, hee must needs haue a speciall care of vs. Therefore when hee fees vs goe astray, hee reformeth vs, whereas in the meane while he makes as though he saw not the faults of those that are strangers to him, which neuer

knewe him, and which neuer had any instruction by his worde: hee giueth them the bridle for a time: not that they shall not be driuen to yeeld an account thereof in the ende, but for that (as I haue saide afore) God executeth his chastismentes rather vpon his owne Church, than vpon all the worlde besides: Or at leastwise beginneth at that poynt. And that is the meaning of Moses in this place where hee saith: The Lord will iudge his people. As if he should say, Consider vpon what condition God hath gathered you together, to wit, that you shoulde call vpon his name, and be his people and his heritage; his intent is to gouerne you himselfe, and to haue the guiding of you himselfe. Nowe then if ye be rebels against him, hee must needs haue his hand lifted vp, for to punish you. Know ye therefore that when ye transgresse his lawe, and that moreover he sees you hardened in euil and cannot reclaime you by gentlenes, he must needs use another remedie, and deale with you by all kinde of rigour: for it is his peculiar office to iudge his people.

And hereunto also is referred the text that was alledged yesterday out of Esay, When God hath dispatched all his worke vpon mount Sion, then will he turne his sworde against the skorners of his maiestie and against his vtter enemies. There the Prophet meant to hearten the faithful which might be troubled when they sawe God punish them out of measure as men might deeme, and in the meane whyle beare with the heathen who had prosperitie and made good cheare as though God gaue them more libertie to doe euill. The goodie therefore might be shaken, and what meanes this? What auayereth it vs to haue the promises? Where is God become? It were better for vs y he gaue vs ouer, that wee had no acquaintance with him. After that manner might a man be tempted as in respect of the fleshe. But the Prophet saith, No, no, spite not them which liue nowe in rest, for they shall haue their turne. Howbeit, God must first finishe his worke vpon mount Sion, that is to say, he must first beginne with you, because you be nearest him, in so much that you ought to be linked to him by the bonde of his worde. But you haue sayled, you haue offended: and therefore hee is faine to chastise you, and that not sleightlie as it were with his litle finger, for he will doe all his worke throughlie. And it is not without cause that hee setteth downe the worde Ally for it serueth to doe vs to vnderstande, that wee must haue our backes readie to receiue his strokes, vntill it please him to withdrawe his hande who knoweth when it is enough, and that hee haue chastised vs as much as needeth. That is the thing in effect, which we haue to remember vpon this text.

And the Apostle also helpeth vs to that construction in the tenth to the Hebrewes. For after that he hath shewed that if they which break the Lawe of Moses were condemned to death, wee in these dayes cannot escape Gods vengeance, if wee breake the couenaunt which hee hath made with vs by the bloude of our Lorde Iesus Christ, which ought to bee much holier to vs than the couenaunt which hee made, but by the bloude of brute beastes: after his speaking so, hee addeth, My friendes, yee knowe howe it is hee which hath saide, I will iudge my people, it is I to whome vengeance belongeth. Hebr. 10. 38 Also hee notheth the text that was expounded yesterday, and likewise the same which we treat of as nowe. And wee see howe this applying of them is to make vs to vnderstand, that if God spared not the despisers of the couenaunt which hee had made and contracted with them in old time; needes must wee be handled more rough-lie in these dayes. For we be worthie of it, considering that God hath shewed himselfe to vs after a farre more excellent fashion, by sending his owne sonne, through whome he would haue vs to bee the more confirmed in the promise of saluation, by meanes of his bloude which is the verie seale thereof. Nowe then, if wee in these dayes despire so great a good turne, God must needes shewe double rigour to vs, and execute the thing which Moses speakes of here, which is, that vengeance belongeth vnto him, and that it is his office to iudge his people, and that he will do it.

Now afterward Moses comforteth the faith-full, telling them that Gods rigour shall be none such, but that in the ende he will haue pitie vpon such as are not vtterlie past grace. Hee will repent him ouer his seruantes, saith hee. This is added as a qualification of that which he had saide afore, to the intent we should not bee too much dismayed when we heare that in punishing sin God will beginne at vs. For that might put vs into such an vnquietnesse, as that wee had leuer he should let vs alone, and neuer take or auowe vs any more to bee his people. Not without cause therefore doth the Apostle adde this qualification: My friendes (saith hee) true it is that wee must liue in feare, and beware that wee tempt not God in abusing his goodnesse. If hee beare with vs for a time, wee must not in the meane while play the loose coltes: for if wee bee his people, wee must receiue the first stripes.
And why? Because he hath a speciall care of our welfare, and hee must needes call vs home againe to himselfe when hee sees vs runne at randon. But yet must not wee thinke out case the worke, neither must we greue vs to bee so chastised at Gods hande. For why? Hee will punish vs mesurable, and in the ende wee shall perceiue that hee hath not forgotten his mercie for all his shewing of such rigour. Hee will then repent ouer vs, because hee seeth we be his people, and that hee hath entred into a couenaunt with vs and hath adopted vs for his children: and therefore hee will haue vs to bee his ser-uantes, to the ende hee may rule ouer vs: and so at the length hee will declare; that whatsoe-uer hee hath doone in correcting vs, hath not beeene doone in vaine, or without purpose. But when the worde is taken for Comforting, it is as much as if G O D should say, that hee will take

take pleasure and delight in their viter ouerthrowe and destruction; But here it is easie to be perceiued that Moses meant to say the cleane contrarie: For he addeth, That God will repent him when hee seeth the strength of his people vanishes away, and that all of them are as folle discomfited, so as there is none of them bee hee neuer so well garded and shur vp in hold, or bee hee abroad in the fields, which is not forlorne and vndone. Therefore when God seeth his people so miserable vnder foote, then will hee be forie (sayeth he). For it might be sayd vnto them, Where bee your gods? Heereby Moses meaneth in effect, that GOD wilbee contented to haue so ouer-maistred the Iewes that they put not their trust any more in their Idols, ne bee any more blynded in their superstitions. For they shall well see that Sathan had beguyled and deceyued them. And on the other syde GOD may then saie vnto them, Yee see now how it is 20 I, euen I only that am GOD alone, and that there be no other gods. Knowe ye also that when I haue stricken, I doe heale: and when I haue killed, I do quicken againe. Therefore turne yee againe to mee, and by the way consider that there is none which can deliuer you out of my hand. God then sayeth that he will finde the meane to speake after that manner, and that when the people are well bea- sen, then they will be disposed to come to a- mendement. Now we see what is contained in 30 this text of Moses: it remaineth to apply the doctrine hereof to our vs.

As touching this worde repent, we must take it as it is taken through out the whole scripture, not that God is changeable, or that he hath any alteration in himselfe: but that it is so sayd in respect of vs. Moses reporteth that God repented that he had made man, which is not to bee so vnderstoode as though God had not bin well advised at the first what should in fewe after- ward. For whereof proceedeth repentance in vs, but that to our seeming we fore sawe not the matter well at the first, and therefore it grieueth vs afterwarde that we were no better advised aforehand? But this can in no wise befall vnto God: for all things are present vnto him; and he cannot be ouerlicene in any thing what- soeuer. Why then sayeth he that he repenteth? (for surely it is a very comon manner of speeche among the Prophets to say, Repent you of your finnes, and I will repent me of the euill which I had purposed against you, I will discharge you of it saith the Lorde) As haue sayd afore, he applyeth himselfe to our vnderstanding. When we see any change or alteration in Gods works; to our seeming hee himselfe also is changeable; not that hee is so in deede, but wee be so dull of vnderstanding that wee cannot reach to the maiestie of God, and we imagine of God after the manner and resemblance of our owne nature. Now God applyeth himselfe to vs. Howbeit not to bring vs a sleepe in our owne ignorance, or superstition; but to drawe vs to him leasiurely by degrees. That is the cause why hee sayth hee will repent him. Neuertheless the worde signifyeth properly, to cease from punishing of vs, lyke as when a man hath chastised his childe, hee is touched with remorse for it, and thereupon is loth to vse so great rigour any more, in such that hee saith in the ende, I forgie thee and I will forget the euill and the offence which thou hast done: onely see that henceforth thou doe as I bid thee; and all shall bee forgotten. When a father speaketh to his childe after that manner, it is as much as if he repented him, because he is touched with a fatherly affection and loue that hee beareth to his owne bloud: But God who in goodnesse excelleth all worldly creatures vseth this similitude of Repenting, to shewe that when hee hath chastised vs he will withdraw his hand, and not presse vs to the vttermost. And that is a very necessary lesson, and that is the cause why the Prophets, doe harpe so much vpon it. For if we looke well vpon the Prophets, there is nothing more ryfe among them, than after threatening, to adde some comfort wherewith to sweeten Gods wrath, least the faithfull should be too much discomfited. For when wee see that God is against vs, is it not a gulf to swallow vs in despaire? Who is hee that can stand out, when hee thinketh that God is his enemy, and can taste nothing in him but viter rigor? Must we not needes bee stricken then with such terror, that heauen and earth doe threaten vs, that our lyfe becommeth lothsome to vs, and that wee could finde in our hartes that the moun- taines should ouerwhelme vs, as is sayd in the Prophets? What should become of vs if there were nothing but such rigor in God? Could wee euer preace vnto him, to hope that hee would be fauorable to vs? No, but wee would shunne him as much as wee coule, and we could find in our hartes that his maiestie were vtterly abolished. Now then, if wee bee desirous to fare the better by Gods threatenings, there- by to be drawn to repentance: wee must vnderstand also that he is mercifull, and that we shall finde him ready to receiue vs into his fauour. When we once tast of such goodnesse, then shall wee fare the better by his threatenings. The thing then which Moses telleth vs here, is that when wee once knowe that GOD will not spare vs to feede vs in our vices and corruptions, but that forasmuch as he hath adopted vs to be his children, he will hold vs in awe and correct vs when wee haue done a misse: we must also consider therewithall that hee forgetteth not to be our father, but will re- pent him ouer his seruantes, and so measure his chastisements, that they shalbe as a medicine to vs, and we shall finde them to be to a good end. That is the thing which must comfort vs, that is the thing which must make vs to like well of all Gods chastisements, that wee be not too sorrowfull in greeting our selues; ne gnash our teeth at them as the faithlesse do, which marcy themselves with sorrowing, and play the madd beastes. But let vs marke well that for the same cause Moses addeth ouer his Seruantes.

It is true when he saith, God will iudge his people, that is to wit, the people that call vpon his name, not withstanding that the most part of the were hypocrites and wicked persons. But whereas hee speaketh of Gods Seruantes, he meaneth those which followe the good trade whereto they were called, and which seeke to honor God to whom they belong, and who hath dedicated them to himselfe. Then must we not onely haue the title of Gods people, but we must also indeuour earnestly to serue him, and be Zelous in yeelding ourselues ouer vnto him, seeing he hath reached vs his hand, and tolde vs that he will receiue vs to mercie.

And it behoueth vs to marke well the reason that Moses addeth, to wit, For hee shall see that their strength is faded and weakened. Here it is shewed, vs that God withdraweth not his hand at the first when he hath once begunne to punish such as haue shrunk away from his obedience, but at such time as he perceiue that their strength fayleth. For why? We see that his corrections drawe vs not to amendment at the first. In deed we will protest as soone as God toucheth vs, that we be cleane altered from that we were before. If a man fall into any sicknes, he will mourne & make a gay confession of his former life, he will seeme to be wholly reformed, & that frō thenceforth his whole endeuer shall be to giue himselfe altogether vnto God. But be he once a foote againe, he falls to his old byas, and there appeareth no chaunge at all in him: but rather we accomplish that which is sayd by the Prophet, namely that we returne but onely while God smiteth vs; and as soone as he giueth vs a little rest, we forget it by and by, and make no more account of it. So much the more neede therefore haue we to marke well these wordes of Moses, where God taryeth till our strength vaine the way. For as long as wee haue any courage in vs, we employ it altogether to rebelling. Although GOD haue broken our armes, yet if we can stirre our legges, wee will be still kicking and spurning against him. If our tongue be able to wagge, wee will occupy it either in chafing and fuming, or in grudging and blaspheming: To be shorte, as long as men are strong and lusty, they cease not to striue against God, and to lift vp their hornes, and to puike at him lyke Bulles and wilde beastes. Lo at what poynt wee be. Therefore it is no woonder though GOD continue his chastisements, and that wee seeme to be at the last cast, and that it might well suffice him to haue handled vs so roughly, yet hee layeth miserie vpon miserie still; it is nothing to be wondered at. For why? Vntill wee be washed away lyke water, and that there remaine not one whit of strength in vs, it is certaine that wee will keepe some peece of stubbornesse still lurking within vs, which will shewe it selfe whensoever occasion is offered, GOD then knoweth good cause why hee withdraweth not the afflictions by and by which he sendeth vpon vs. For vnlesse it were expedient for our welfare, surely he taketh not delight to see vs so in anguish and sorrowe. But hee knoweth our secreete diseases which are vnperceiued euen to our selues, how that wee should be beguiled by them. For a man wil diuers times imagine himselfe to bee so well reclaimed, that hee needeth no more, and that is the thing that beguileth vs. But GOD seeth much clearer than wee doe, and hee is faine to play the Physitian. If a Physitian being a morall man, be able to coniecture that there lyeth some further inconuenience lurking in the diseased person, and thereupon doe giue him a stronger medicine: shall not our Lord from whom nothing is hidden, & to whome it belongeth to search mens hearts, perceiue y there are yet stil some naughty and wicked afflictions to be remedied in vs? Yes: and therefore let vs marke well this sentence of Moses, where hee saith that God will repent him, at leastwise when he seeth all the strength of his people to bee spent. And therefore let vs not thinke that our Lorde will vterly sinke vs, though he as swage not the afflictions out of hand which he sendeth vpon vs. For hee knoweth that it is for our behoofe to languish, and he seeth that wee would kicke at him againe, if hee left vs in our full strength. Therefore we haue neede to be tamed, yea and to be broosed and broken, or else hee shall neuer haue ioy of vs. That is the thing in effect, which wee haue to practise vpon this place.

Nowe it is expressly sayd, that GOD will see them all discomfited, as well the man that is shut up, as the man that is left abroad. This manner of speaking is common enough in the holy scripture, as if yee would say the strong and the weake, that is to say, all one with another. For by this worde Shut up, the Hebrewes betoken him that is in a fortresse, castle, or holde, and in good safetie as in respect of men. And by the man that is left abroad, they meane the poore man which goeth abroad in the fieldes without defence or safeguard. We see then howe his meaning in effect is that all of them as well great as small, strong as weake, riche as poore, shall bee all discomfited. True it is that such as are already seecble to the worldward, ought to bee easily reclaimed vnto God and teachable enough. But herein it appeareth howe much nauignesse there is in our nature. For the miserablest of vs cease not to striue against God, and euen they which haue not whereof to bee proud, but ought rather to hang downe their heads and to be ashamed of themselues, euen they (I say) will not faile to swell with pride lyke Toades. When we see men fight after that fashion against nature: needs must we say y there is a terrible yntowardnesse in mans nature. Now if these cannot be made to stoope at the first, but God must be faine to winne them by maine blowes, inso much as hee may sooner break them than make the obedient & subiect to his gouernment & auctoritie, how much more needful is it for y rich, & for such as thinke themselues to be well fenced, & for such as haue worldly meanes to stay vpon?

Howe much more neede haue they to bee tamed? For they doe cuen burst for pride, accordinglie as wee see howe the riche folk e and the great personages of this worlde, and all such as seeke to stande by themselves, are so befotted yea and bewitched with diueltic selfeweeening, that they thinke they may defie God, and that his hande cannot touch them, & that they haue made a league with death, so that although all the earth were afflicted, yet they themselves should scape. Wee see that men are blinded after that fashion vnder pretence that all things shall fall out as they woulde wishe. Now therefore let vs learne that all of vs as well small as great, haue neede to bee subdued by Gods hand, yea and to be so subdued, as that wee may bee brought in maner to nothing. For vntill God haue brought vs to that point, wee will neuer cease to put out our hornes at lum like snayles. Albeit that we be nothing, yet will we pretend some signe of pride. Seeing it is so, our Lorde must be faine to trample vs so vnder his feete, as wee may not be able to indure any more. Furthermore wee see how pride is a disease so rooted in men, that the remedying thereof must needes be violent. Nay, which more is, God must bee fayne to vse as it were a poyson to cure that disease withall. Wee see what befell to Saint Paul. To the ende (saith he) that I should not boast of my selfe, God buffetted mee. As howe? After what manner? Hee saith that hee sent him a messenger of Satan. See heere howe the diuill is become a Physitian. And howe is that? Wee knowe that he bringeth nothing with him but deadly poyson. That is true. But yet God serueth his owne turne by this poyson as by a medicine. And if Saint Paul were fayne to haue this doone vnto him, what haue wee neede of an comparison of him? So then, let vs not thinke it strange, seeing wee be so vntrulie and so vnweeldie, that when we haue once done amisse, a man cannot tel at what end to beginne to reclayne vs. For as much then as we be so harde to bee tamed, we must not thinke it strange that our Lorde should beare vpon vs with mayne strokes, & continue still in chastising of vs, vntill wee be vterly dismayed, and ashamed of our selues, yea and be brought as it were to nothing in ourselues. And nowe Moses declareth, wherat God aimed in all his scourginges of his people, to wit, to make them able to abide the hearing of the reproch that was to bee doone vnto them, and to touch them to the quicke, that they might accuse and condemne themselves, and make no mo replies and vaine excuses, nor be any more possessed of their own fonde fancies, so as they coulde not feele their owne harme and offence.

For this cause hee addeth, that it should be saide vnto them, Where are your gods? Or where is the mightie one in whome you trusted? Ye haue eaten the bloude of the sacrifices, you haue drunk the wine of their drinkofferings: nowe therefore let them stepp vp to helpe you and to succour you, and let them be your refuge. Ye see ye haue bene deceived by your foolish imaginations. Know ye now therefore that I am the Lord,

I am hee, euen I am hee without any other. By these words which I haue declared, Moses doeth vs to vnderstande, first that God respecteth nothing else but the winning of vs to himselfe, to the end wee should be meeke, and of a mield disposition to receiue correction. That is the thing wherewith he is contented: in so much that if we returne to him by repentance, it is enough. The let vs conclude, that when he sheweth himselfe rough and sharpe towards vs, it is altogether for our welfare, and that although he put vs in feare by pretending the countenance of a iudge, yet he ceaseth not to be a father and a Physitian vnto vs. True it is that all men cannot taste of this. For we may see a great sort of these braue laddes of the worlde, which will needes abide in their wilfulnesse, whatsoeuer come thereof. As for such, all Gods chastisements must serue for summonings, to warne them of their final condemnation, howe it is as an entering into hell for them. But if wee bee not vterly vnreformable, let vs marke as I haue saide alreadie, that Gods intent is not to sink vs, when he seemeth to thunder against vs: but to put vs in feare, y we may bee led to repentance & become pleyable, to suffer him to gouerne vs, that hauing acknowledged our sinnes, we may come to him with true humilitie, craving pardon at his hand, that by that meane wee may be reconciled vnto him. That is a verie needefull thing for vs.

Nowe by the way wee see the fruite which the afflictions sent of God doe ycelde vs. Not that they bee profitable to all men, as I shall shewe hereafter: but vnto the faithfull, whom God maketh his corrections to serue. For by this he holdeth vs in awe, to the end we may not be moued with impatiencie when we happen to be chastised by his hande. For naturally wee be inclined to impatiencie: in so much that if wee feele anie smarte, by and by wee leape out of our boundes. And we heare what complaintes and grudgings are made continually in the worlde: when men see warres, when folke are pinched with famine, or when they be stricken with plagues: what a number of blasphemies doe they spewe out against God? And although men dare not bee so bolde as to defie G O D in wordes: yet doe they gashe their teeth at him, shewing thereby that they be no whyt moued to receiue his chastisements with such mieldnes & meekenes as they ought to do. And whereof proceedeth that? Euen of that we tast not the thing which Moses telleth vs here, namely, that by Gods ouermastring of vs wee beginne to bee quiet towards him, and to become teachable, and to receiue the warnings contayned in his worde, so as they profite vs to our saluation. Vntill G O D haue tamed vs, wee be both deafe and blinde, yea and in a manner Lunatique. If a wretched man that is in a burning ague, haue anie strength in him, hee will caste him selfe into the fire or into the water: and if hee bee letted of his purpose, hee will fling himselfe downe headlong to breake his necke. Nowe if the Physicion do hold him downe in his bed, & seeme to deale violently with him: it is meete he should doe so, and hee doth no more than neede constreyneth him vnto. Let vs vnderstand then, that wee be like Lunatike folke, and that there is neither wit nor reason in vs as long as God spareth vs. By reason whereof hee is forced to tame vs euen to y<sup>e</sup> vttermost til we can no more. For when wee be come to the poynt that there is scarce any more breath in vs, and that we can scarce fetch our winde: then beginne we to fall to the mildenesse whereof Moses speaketh here, which is, that if a man vpbrayde vs with our offences and blame vs for them, wee keepe silence and holde our peace, and are not so haistic as to say by and by: It is not so, ye doe mee wrong, as wee see a number doe, who as soone as a man openeth his mouth to tell them of their faultes, they come out their furiousnes, and cannot be reclaimed vntill God haue ouermistred them. Therefore lets consider the fruit that commeth of Gods corrèctions: namely that where as earst we did nothing but sooth our selues in our sinnes and vncleannesse, and weltred in them, and could not abide to be drawn from them: then we haue our eares opened to receiue good instruction, and we acknowledge our selues to haue done amisse. That is the thing whereunto the words of Moses tend when hee saith, Where are your gods?

For the same cause also doeth our Lorde by his prophete Osee liken Idolaters to Harlots. As long as a Harlot or Courtisan hath great resort vnto her, and hath great giftes, gaynes, and rewardes, and is coslie apparelled, and mayntayned in her delights and pleasures: she maketh more account of herselfe (notwithstanding her leawdnesse) than all the honest women of the worlde: and euen so is it with Idolaters. As long as they prosper in the worlde, they beare themselves in bande that their Idolatrie is the cause thereof, and thereupon they growe hard-hearted. Nowe if our Lorde let them alone in that plight, they setle themselves continually more and more in their filthinesse: and therefore hee must bee fayne to vse violent remedies. In respect hereof hee saith that he will strippe them out of their clothes, yea and discouer their shamefull partes, so as they shall become like a Harlot that is smitten with fistulaes, Pockes, and such other filthy diseases, and in steede of her former brauerie, is lashed and shunned of all men, that whereas she went ruffling in her aggles before, now shee findeth not a man that will giue her a bit of breade, but is shaken off and scorned at al handes: whereby she perceiueth her miserie, and saith, Alas, I shoulde haue kept mee to mine owne husband, and [because I did not,] now I haue the reward which I haue deserued. Nowe then a leawd woman that is giuent to such naughtinesse, will neuer bee reclaimed but by such necessitie. And euen so is it with Idolaters. That is the cause why Moses saith now, that when God hath so discouraged his people, that both great and small shall bee as it were vanished away: then it shall bee saide vnto them, Where bee your gods? Goe make your monie to your Idols, goe call vpon them as yee were wont to doe. And so let vs consider Gods goodnesse in that hee hath reclaimed vs from the Idolatrie wherewith we were, and that with more gentlenesse than is spoken of here euen by his reaching of his hande vnto vs to drawe vs to him. And if hee vse nowe and then some sharpe chastisements, let vs assure our selues hee doeth it not without cause, but for that he knoweth our diseases to be so deepe rooted, that wee haue neede to bee so purged and cured.

Nowe it followeth, Let them steppe vp to succour you, and let them reskeme you. Hereby Moses meaneth, that when Idolaters are berect of al worldlie thinges, and finde themselves disappointed of their vaine imaginations which they had conceiued afore: then they fall to recouer their sight and their hearing. And in verie deed there is no access to Gods truth, for those that are wilfull, vntill they see themselves at such an afterdeede, that for all the shuffles and windlasses which they can make, they perceiue there was nothing but deceite in all their deuices. As for example in these dayes, so long as the Papistes thinke they can preuaile by the diuelishe deuices of their Masses, Pilgrimages, and the rest of Satans illusions wherein they be plunged; who can persuade them to giue over any of all those thinges? What say they? Is it not good for a mā to serue such a Saint, to call vpon such a patron or aduocate, to builde a Chappel, to cause a masse to bee said, or to mumble before such an altar? To bee shorte, as long as the Papistes thinke they may preuaile by their superstitions, they be so wilful that it is vnpossible to haue any entrance vnto them, except our Lorde set to his hande, as hee hath doone towardes vs, and touch them with his holy spirite. But I speake of the ordinarie meane, and I say that men are so forepossessed, that they shut the doore against God, and against all instruction, and against all warninges that can bee giuen. And therefore our Lorde had neede to smite vpon them with mayne blowes, yea and to bring them to such extremities, as they may knowe that they doe but mispend their time to no purpose, in gadding after their Idols, and so fall to misliking of their offerings and other superstitions whereunto they were giuen afore.

But yet the knowing hereof is not all that is to be doone: the cheefe point is that which Moses addeth here, namely to returne vnto God, and to acknowledge that it is hee only on whom we ought to rest. For euen the Idolaters themselves wil oftentimes through desperation desie their owne Idols. Wee see that when the Saint George of the Papistes or some other of their Idols haue beguiled them, so as there commeth some great frost, they fall to dragging of him about in a Corde, like a gallowclapper, whom they had worshipped a litle afore. Wee shall see some, yea euen men of honour, which to spite their idols, doe breake downe their puppets, yea euen their blessed Ladie and all. And howe so? They play the madde bedlems, not onely onelic against their owne Idols, but also against whatioeuer else they imagine to bee as a God.

 And the heathen haue shewed ful well, that their worshipping of their Idols was not for anie re-uerence that they bore vnto them, but for that it seemed to yeelde some benefite vnto them: insomuch that when they were once touched to the quicke, then they vttered their poison to abolish the name and maiestic of God, ouerreaching themselves so far, as to say that there is no God at all. After that manner doe all Idolaters and all vnbeleeuers deale, vnlesse our Lord take vpon him to worke and restraine them by his holy spirite. And that is the knowledge which Moses speakes of. Let vs marke wel therefore howe it is not saide here barely, that God would vpbraide the Iewes with their yeelding of themselves to their Idols in vaine, and that their Gods in whom they trusted, had stood them in no steede: but that hee addeth, Beholde howe it is I my selfe, and there is no other God with mee. To bee shorte, it booteth vs not to knowe all the abuses and foolish fancies wherewith men beguile themselves; but wee must also returne vnto God. And indeede what a sorte of skoffers are there nowadaies in the worlde, which make a skorning of all the dotages of the Papistes, and yet in the meane while are worse themselves than dogges, so as it were much better for them that they were Papistes. A man shall see (I say) the despisers of all Religion, which will say according as they thinke, that all the Religion which is in the Popedome, is flat mockerie, and a verie childishe toy. But what? They haue no feare of God, nor reue-rence of his worde; it beareth no sway at all with them. Nowe (as I haue saide afore) it were much better for such that they were Papistes.
 And so let vs marke well howe it is to no purpose to knowe Idolatrie, and to perceiue and beleue that all that euer is doone without the warrant of Gods worde or contriued by man is but abuse, filth, and corruption: vnlesse (which is the principall poynt) wee returne vnto God to doe homage to his maiestic, and come ashamed before him, acknowledging our faultes & crauing pardon at his hande, so as euerie of vs accuse himselfe and humble himselfe in such sorte as there bee no more replying in vs, but that wee yeelde ourselves to him with true re-penance. That is the cause the why Moses hauing spoken of sacrificiing to Idols, and vpbraded the Iewes with their desiling of themselves with their abominations, in eating the bloude and drinking the wine of their offerings, and in intermedling themselves with the filthinesse of the heathen: after hee hath said all these things and shewed that in all those things there is nothing but illusion and deceitefulnesse: hee addeth, Beholde, I am hee. Nowe God presupposeth that they which are so subdued with maine blowes, haue their eyes well opened. Hee had cast them in the teeth afore, that they were vt-ter blindfooldd as it had bene with a towell: but nowe that they shall see themselves starke naked, now they shall see themselves vnarmed, their eyes shall be opened, there will be nothing to hinder their knowledge any more. What is to bee doone then? They must consider that there is but one onely God, and that it is he to whom we must turne againe, euen to craue forgiuenes of our sinnes at his hande, and consequently to put our whole trust in him, contenting ourselues with his protection, without troubling of ourselues to trot vp and downe as the wretched vnbeleeuers doe, who neuer haue any rest but are tossed and turmoyled with continuall vexations. Therefore let not vs bee caried away with such vnquietnesse, but let vs conceiue a right assurance, so as wee may rest all wholie vpon our God. The rest that followeth cannot be dispatched as now, and therefore it shall bee reserued til to morow.

Now let vs fall downe before the maiestic of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchsafe to make vs so to seele them, as hauing perceiued howe farre we haue ouerthor ou selues, wee may seeke earnestly to be reformed by his hand, and that if it please him to chastise vs, wee may patiently a-abide all the corrections which hee shall send vs; or rather it may please him to make his worde to profite so much in vs, as wee may not tarrie till hee lift vp his hande to punish vs, but receiue the warniges that are giuen vs in his name, to reclayme vs wholly to his will, and that in the meane while hee beare with vs in our infirmities, till hee haue rid vs quite and cleane of them, and in such wise reformed vs to the obedience of his righteounesse, as our whole seeking may bee to glorifie his name, euen till wee come to the immortal glorie which is prepared for vs in heauen & was purchased for vs by our Lord Iesus Christ.
 That it may please him to grant this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Wednesday the xvij. of Iune, 1556.

The CLXXXVIII. Sermon, which is the eleuenth vpon the two and thirtith Chapter.

39 See nowe howe it is I, euen I that am God, and there is no God with mee. It is I that kill and make aliuie againe, I wounde and heale, and there is none that can deliuer out of my hand.

40 For I lift vp my hande to heauen : and as for mee , I liue for euer.

41 If I whet the edge of my sworde , and my hande lay holde of Iudgement: I will execute vengeance vpon mine aduersaries, and will pay them their hyre which hate mee.

42 I will make mine arrowes drunken with bloude , and my sworde shall deuoure the bloudie flesh of the flaine, and of the prisoners at the beginning of the vengeance of the enemies.

43 Yee nations prayse you his people : for hee will auenge the bloude of his seruantes , and yeeld vengeance to his aduersaries:but he will be fauorable to his owne lande, and to his owne people.

Esawe yesterday howe it is not enough to knowe , that there is nothing but vanitie and leasing in Idols, and in al y superstitions y men haue deuised of their owne heades: but that the cheefe point is to knowe God to do him homage , to walke in his feare , and to consider howe dreadfull his niaicitie is. Nowe heere-withall wee must marke also, that when we once knowe God to be too great a Lorde to be daled withall, if he chastise vs for offending him, we must taste of his mercie to retaine freely vnto him, beeing throughly perswaded and resolued, that wee shall finde mercie at his hande, though wee be vnworthie of it. And that is the cause why he saith, This is hee which killeth and quickeneth, and that is hee that woundeth and healeth againe. Nowe wee haue alwayes these two things to marke: The one is that wee shall bee helde in awe by considering ( as I saide afore) howe dreadfull Gods maicestie is , according to the Apostles treating thereof in the fore alleadged tenth chapter to the Hebrewes. That is the thing which maketh vs to lue in awe. For we be not so bolde to offend God, neither take wee such libertie as they doe which sling out at all aduerture: but yet, when wee haue done amisse and God warneth vs of our faults, then haue we neede to resort to his infinite goodnesse, and to assure ourselues that howsoeuer the case stand, we shall obtayne pardon of our offences. Truly these two things, namely, That God killeth and quickeneth againe; and that hee maketh a wounde and afterwarde healeth againe: seeme at the first blush to be contraries: For God seemeth not to play the Physicion towards vs when wee bee as it were deade and layde in our graues. Neither seemeth this to be agreeable to his nature: to put vs to death, and to afflict vs: but (as I saide afore) hee must be faine to doe both the one and the other: and wee on our side also must bee faine to feele it. For as long as men take leaue to doe euill, it is meete that God shoulde hold them in awe, and shewe them that hee is their Iudge. And on the other side that wretched sinners should humble themselves, and with griefe of minde turne againe vnto him to obteyne forgiveness at his hande; and then will he bee forward and readie to forget all their offences, and shewe them nothing but all maner of gentlenes & friendship. To be short the two things which Moses noteth here, are to be considered well: namely that God vseth rigor towards such as take too much libertie to do euill, and also that his goodnes is ready to vter it selfe towards those which returne to him with repentance. And so ye see howe we haue to marke also howe good and pitifull God is: and againe on the contrarie part, wee haue to consider his rigour and seueritie. To be short, as oft as wee be prouoked to euill, and the wicked lustes of our flesh do tickle vs and intice vs to sin; let Gods iudgement come before our eyes, that we may be moued with feare, and thereby bee restrayned from the euill whereunto we bee tempted. On the other side, when we fall through infirmite, let vs not be afraide to turne againe to our God, neither let vs thinke that hee hath quite cast vs off. Although his hande be fore vpon vs, and he smite vs as though he meant to vse wrath and vengeance against vs: yet let that not make vs to shrink from him, but rather let vs vnderstande, y as he hath made the wound, so he is at hand to heale it, so wee seeke the remedy. Now the mean howe to seeke it, hath bene declared heretofore. And so ye see after what maner we ought to put this lesson in vre, where Moses saith that god hauing put to death, doth make aliuie again. And herewithall let vs also beare in minde, that God playeth not with men as the heathen haue imagined, as who would say he tossed and turned them like a bal: but y reason is manifest why God doth first kill and lay in graue, before he restore to life againe: namelic because we cannot find in our harts to submit our selues willingly vnto him vntill he haue subdued vs by force: Nay the feruent heate of our boyling lustes doth so carie vs away, and we be so blinded with them, that wee cannot conceiue howe terrible Gods iustice is, vntill he haue made vs to feele it by experience. Therefore it is needfull for vs y our Lord hold put vs as it were to death, to y intet to make vs to tast y life which he giueth to those y return vnto him.

And for the same cause he addeth, That nomā can deliuer out of his hand. For we know how men doe alwaies beare themselves in hand: that they shall scape Gods hande: insomuch that hee beginneth no sooner to strike them, but by and by they seeke startingholes, and they will needes haue some pretie shift or other, and thereupon they fall asleepe, and y is a kinde of contempt to God ward. To the end then that wee may goe directlie vnto him, whether wee haue offended him, or whether we haue bene tempted to euill: we must alwayes vnderstande that there is no deliuerance, there is no shift but we must make our account to him, vntill hee of his owne infinite goodnesse haue receiued vs. and bee come to attonement with vs. The thing therefore that will perswade vs to come vnto God, is that we be fully determined and settled in our selues, that we shall gayne nothing by our running to and fro and by our seeking heere and there for starringholes, but that all is mere deccyte to beguile our selues withall. When we once knowe this well: then shall wee bee prouoked to submit our selues to God. Also it will hold vs in awe of him, and make vs to seeke forgiuenesse of our finnes at his hand, when wee haue so giuen ouer ourselues to him.

Againe we ought to wey well the wordes of Moses, It is I (sayth he) it is I my selfe that am the euerlasting, and there is not any other God. For hereby wee see howe harde it is to holde men to the knowledge of the true God, because they be euer swaruing aside to their owne foolish imaginations. For wee be naturally inclined to the forging of Idols, and to corrupt our selues with superstitions, so as fashood doth alwayes beare sway in vs rather than trueth. A man woulde wonder how so many errors should be in the worlde. But let him consider what a workehouse our owne brayne is, and what things it forgeth and yeeldeth fourth; and surely hee shall finde that we neuer cease forging of lies and deceites to corrupt ourselues withall, and to turne vs away from Gods pure trueth. And so, because men are so wholly bent, yea and giuen ouer to leasings: therefore doeth God confirme this matter the more by saying, It is I, and there is not any other: It is hee on whom wee must wholly rest. Nowe seeing it is so, it behooueth all of vs to knowe that euerie of vs had neede to holde himselfe as it were by force in the pure singlenesse of Gods worde, or else wee shall bee ouercome by Satans illusions, and he will haue caried vs away here and there out of hande. And by the way, if wee see the worlde intrangled in neuer so manie disorders, and all men possessed with false and wicked opinions: let vs not be too much troubled at such a stumblingblocke. For why? Wee see there is nothing harder than to holde men in the pure knowledge of God.

Nowe hee addeth consequentlie, Surrelie I will lift vp my hande to heauen and say, I am the liuing; and that I hauing shoupened the edge of my sword, & hauing taken iustice in my hande, will execute such vengeance that bloud shall run downe in streames euerie where, so as all mine enemies shall be made to come to their aunswere, and I will spare nothing from one side to another. Now here God confirmeth yet better that which hee had declared heretofore, and he confirmeth it with another: For this speech, to lift vp the hand so heauen is as much to say, as to Swear; not that God can lift vp his hande after the manner of men: for besides that hee hath no hande, there is nothing higher than his maiestic: but it is a figure taken of the custome among men, and wee knowe it is verie common in the holic scripture. Because we comprehend not God as he is in deede, but finde him to be a thing farre passing our reach: therefore is hee fayne to apply himselfe to our rudenesse. Euen so in this text he saith that he will lift vp his hande, that is to say that hee will sweare. Now, there is no need, that God should sweare: For the cause why we haue othes among vs, is our owne naughtines. There is so much craft and sutletie among men as is pitifull to beholde. They bee fleeing, they bee full of lightnes and conscience, and it is harde to bring them to vpright dealing. In these respectes, and for that wee be so giuen to deccitfulness, othes are faine to bee ministred to vs: But Gods swearing is for our infirmities sake. And truly wee bee greatly to blame in this behalfe, in that we compell God to sweare. For nothing is more peculiar to him than trueth, and if hee had not that, hee were not God. Seeing then, that hee is the infallible trueth it selfe, if when hee hath once spoken, wee stand doubting still, and examine whether it bee so or no: can there bee a more horrible blasphemie, than to call Gods trueth in question after that fashion? Is it not all one as if wee woulde bereaue him of his verie being? And yet for all that, wee see howe men stande as in a mammering when God speaketh to them. For if hee threaten vs, wee make no account of it: If we were thoroughly perswaded that all that euer proceedeth out of Gods mouth is of such certaintie as there ought to bee no replying against it, truly wee woulde tremble and quake out of hande for feare, as soone as hee threateneth vs: but wee know howe hardhearted wee be in that behalfe. On the other side, if our Lorde promise to bee mercifull to vs when wee haue done amisse, and intreate vs as his children, and call vs to the hope of euerlasting saluation: wee bee so tangled in this worlde, that euerie thing of nothing holdes vs backe and wee despise the incestimable benefites which God offereth vs. Wee see then that men do not the honour to God to count him faithful. For then woulde they holde themselues wholie to his worde, they woulde bee touched to the quicke; yea they woulde quake at his threates, and they woulde set for their ioy and delight in his promises. That is the cause why G O D warranteth, and confirmeth his worde with another. Nowe in this case (as I saide afore) wee our selues are much too blame; seeing that God is faine to yeelde to such condition as to abace himselfe as though hee were a mortall creature, to the intent hee may winne vs, and that wee may no more wander away, but bee fully perswaded in our selues that this speaking to vs is in good earnest. Seeing then that our Lorde is faine to frame himselfe vnto vs after that fashion, thereby wee see our owne malice and frowardnesse: and yet doth God beare with vs in y<sup>e</sup> case. But when he sweareth, it is as much as if we sawe heauen and earth shaken, nature changed, the Sunne darkened, and all the starrs bereft of their light. And therefore if wee bee not touched with y<sup>e</sup> othes which God maketh after y<sup>e</sup> manner: it is certaine y<sup>e</sup> the diuel hath as it were bewitched vs, and that wee bee become starke blockes, or rather that wee be horrible and vglie monsters. Therefore let vs benefite ourselues by the othes which wee reade in the holy scripture. And when God sweareth that he will be auenged at his enemies; let it abashe vs, as though we sawe his vengeance and wrath take effect out of hande, and as though we sawe him readie and in a forwardnes to execute the thing which hee hath vttered with his mouth. And when he sweareth that hee will be friendly to vs and take vs for his children, confirming with an othe the heauenlie heritage which hee hath promised vs: ought nor the doing of those things to assure vs to withstande all temptations? Although Satan and the flesh tempt vs to distrust, yet notwithstanding let vs set this for a shield against them, and say, No, seeing that God hath sworne, shall we doe him such wroog and dishonour, as to cal the truth of his word in question? Let that bee far from vs. That is the thing which wee haue to note in this text where God saith that he will lift vp his hande to heauen and say, I liue.

And he sweareth by himselfe, accordingly as the Apostle toucheth it in the sixth to the Hebrewes. When we sweare, we call God to witness as our Iudge if we lie. But it is not so with God; he cannot finde a greater than himselfe to sweare by. He saith therefore, I am aliuie, as if he should say, Nay, whosoeuer he be that holdeth not himselfe to the sentence which I doe nowe pronounce, he derogateth my glorie as much as if he meant to abolish me quite and cleane, and to declare that I am no more God. But if I be God, it must needs be perceiued in the execution of the things which I doe nowe speake. I am contented that men shall henceforth take mee but for an idol or a deade thing, if they finde not my sayings true in deede. When God speakes after that fashion, ought it not to make the haire to stande vp vpon our heades, if wee esteeme not his words to be verie certaine? Yes. And so we see my former saying yet better confirmed, namely that it is not for vs to replie any more when God hath once spoken, but wee must take the matter to bee out of all erie, as though wee sawe the thing already done before our eyes. But let vs see nowe whereto God aimed: for it is certaine that hee sweareth not but for our welfare. It is not for his owne sake, hee taketh neither good nor harme by it, but hee hath regarde of vs. And in token thereof hee saith, That hee will whet the edge of his sworde, that it shall bee as a flaming sworde, and that hee will take Iudgement in his hand, that is to say, that he will hold his assises to shewe himselfe to bee the Iudge of the worlde, and that as then all his enemies must bee confounded, and all aduersaries be brought to nought. And whereas God speakes here of the edge of the sworde, we must not imagine that hee vseth any material sword, for that cannot agree to him: but wee know hee hath all sortes of punishmentes to chastice men withall as seemeth good to himselfe. For in verie deede, all the swordes in the world do serue to execute Gods ordinaunce. When warre is to bee had, well may princes assemble great armies: but it is God that must beare the stroke. Then if there be fiftie thousand men in armes on the one side, and forty thousand on the other: wee must not thinke that God is that whyle asleepe in heauen: for all they are of his waging. And although the two armies bee set one against an other: yet shall not one stroke be stricken but by the disposition of Gods hand. The like is to bee sayde of pestilences, famines, & such other like things. To be short, all the scourges of this worlde are Gods swordes. And in that respect it is saide that God will sharpen the edge of his sworde, that is to say, hee will execute the chastisementes which hee hath in his hande. But if hee winke at things for a time and list to vse patience: hee seemeth to haue no regarde of the faultes that are committed here belowe. Yet doeth it not followe that all those things are not inregistered before him; neither is it to bee saide that hee hath forgotten his charge, or that his power is idle: for hee hath all kindes of punishmentes, which he can well shewe forth whensoever it shall bee expedient to execute vengeance. And so yee see after what manner God is sayde to drawe his sworde.

Nowe the applying of this doctrine will giue vs yet a more easie vnderstanding thereof. Let vs consider to what ende it is saide: namely because it seemeth to vs, that when God punisheth nor the wicked out of hande, hee letteth things goe at all aduenture, and that is y thing which troubleth vs fore. When we be wrongfully afflicted on the behalfe of men, and wee see the Church of God to suffer manie slaunders and molestations: what say wee? Whereon doeth God thinke nowe? Hath hee not pitie vpon his children? Wee be tormented with extremitic, and yet hee maketh as though hee sawe it not. Shall the crueltie of men haue such scope for euer? Should hee giue heade to the wicked after such sort that wee shoulde alwayes bee made a pray to them? Such complaintes do men make, when God doeth not out of hande punish the outrages that are doone to his seruantes. And therefore it is saide, That hee will sharpen his sworde, and take Iudgement in his hande, as though that to holde vs in patience, he should say, My friendes, trouble not your selues, let not your lustes be our hastie and inordinate. For I doe not this as vnmindfull of you. Although I suffer the wicked to doe manie things outragiously: it is not for that I haue no regarde of you, or for that I watch not for the welfare of my Church, or for that I pitie not those which suffer aduersitie, and are so molested: but because I haue my conuenient times, which I dispose at my pleasure; and therefore tarie you my leasure. For the wicked shall bee vtterlie amased at the whetting of my sworde to make warre against them. Be not afraid: for although yee see it not at the first day; yet will I not faile to shewe my selfe your protector and the defendour of your life. Nowe then wee see in effect, that all this is applied to our infirmitie, euen thereafter as we be tossed with temptations: so that when it seemeth vs that God thinketh not any more vpon vs, but that hee hath turned his back and is asleepe in heauen: we should notwithstanding that all this fall out, take it, as though hee had sayd: Cease not you to be patient and quiet, yea, hold your selues still til I draw my sworde, for I will surely doe it.

And for the same cause he addeth, that he will take iudgement in his hand. Wee knowe that Gods maiestie and his iustice are things vnseparable. Sith it is so, let vs hardly conclude that hee is the Iudge of the world, yea & although the same bee hidden from vs, so as wee perceiue not any signe or lykelyhoode thereof, yet let vs not forbear to say continually, What? Is it possible for God to renounce himselfe, who is vnchangeable? Then must wee take him for our Iudge, assuring our selues that although hee hide himselfe away, yet notwithstanding hee will shewe that hee sawe all, that all things lay open before him, and that he neuer chaunged his mind. Thus yee see howe wee ought to practise this lesson, yea euen at such time as our Lorde suffereth vs to bee as it were trodden vnder foote by the wicked, and all the whole Church is cruelly dealt with, and all things are out of order here beneath. For euē then we must not cease to hope & to put ourselues into y protection of our God, because he hath sworn, and not only affirmed but also ratified with a solemne orthe, that he will do iustice vpon his enemies, and that the execution thereof shal be so terrible, as y there shalbe an vtter discomfiture of them, and all shall bee filled with blood. And it is not to bee doubted but that in this place Moses meant to confirme the faithfull still in the hope which they ought to haue of Gods goodnes, although they seeme to bee as it were sunken. And hee proceedeth in the matter which he had dealt with before: which is, that in the end God will betinke him of his seruantes. Howbeit that hee beginne at this poynt, namely that while the wicked doe make great cheere, and liue in pleasure, & make their triumphes: God dooth say that hee will iudge his people, and that those which are his children and household seruantes, must be faine to indure hardnes, because hee reformeth them when they haue done amisse. Nowe it would seeme that their state is much woorse than the state of such as are vtter straungers to God and haue no acquaintance with him. And therefore dooth Moses adde, No, in the ende God will mitigate his rigour towards you, and therefore let it not grieue you to see the worldliges spared, or to see them weltering in their pleasures, as though all things were lawfull which they listed. If your God afflict you in the meane season, let it not seeme straunge vnto you. For hee must needs haue a speciall care of his owne children & chastice them seeing he hath adopted the. And as for your enemies, assure your selues that their turne will come about: and thereof your GOD assurcth you here, in that hee dooth not simply affirme it, but also sweate it. Therefore you may trust vnto it. So then euen in the midst of our afflictions, let vs bee vpheld with this lesson. For it will bee a good stud for vs to leane vnto, when wee make it auailable as it deserueth, and as God himselfe intendeth it. Now wee see the state of the faithfull to be too too miserable both generally and particularly: for many of them indure such miseries and reproches in this world, that to all seeming they bee vtter costawayes, and that God disdayneth them no lesse than the world despiseth them. Behold they which walk purely & simply before God, which loue righteousness and vpright dealing, which will neither deceiue nor hurt any man; euen they neuertheless are faine to abide hunger and thirst, and are greeued with many temptations and troubles, so as they wote not which way to turne the. Now they might bee brought to despaire, if God withheld them not, by dooing them to vnderstand that they haue neede to be chasticed, and put in minde of their sinnes. On the other side they see the wicked and the despisers of God sporting themselves in all manner of disorder, and in the meane while they bee neither chasticed nor corrected, but seeme rather to be exempted and priuiledged from all harme, as it is sayd in the threescore and thirteenth psalme. Loe here a very fore temptation. Wee see generally that Gods Church is as a sheep in the midst of a great sorte of Woolues. For the power of our enemies is such, as they might swallowe vs vp out of hand, and we see there is no meane of resistance in vs, we be all scattered abroad. Seeing then that wee see such thinges, were it possible for vs to holde our one minue of an houre, if wee had not our refuge to this doctrine, that God scourgeth his owne, and that he beginneth at them, because he must needs haue a care of his owne household? But the wicked shall fare neuer the better for his beating with them as now, neither is it to be sayd that their state is therefore better than ours. Therefore we must tary his leasure with patience, vntil he take the sword in hand, and keepe his Afflictes. Let vs referre all vnto him, and in the meane whyle keep silence, without grudging against him. Let not the corrections which wee suffer set vs in such a chafe as to make vs play the desperate persons. Thus yee see how profitable this doctrine is to vs, if we can apply it to our instruction.

Now it is sayd consequently, that God will requite his enemies with the lyke, and pay them their lyre which hate him, hee will make his arrowes dronke with blood, and make such a slaughter of them that they shall all bee discomfited. His speaking after that maner is to make his Iustice the more terrible to vs, because we be slow and dulheaded as I haue sayd afore, in somuch that wordes moue vs not a whit. Therefore doth our Lorde set downe a vehement kinde of speech here, to the ende to waken vs, and to make vs yeeld due honor to his Iustice, and that (as I haue sayd afore) it might be to vs as though wee sawe both heauen and earth shaken. For after the same maner speaketh hee by his Prophet Aggeus; & the Apostle shewing vs the maiestic of the God-pell, alledgeth the same text, that as oft as we see Hcb. 12. 26.

heare the voyce thereof sound, it behoueth vs to call to minde, that God will bee heard and known both aboue and beneath. Now it is certaine y<sup>e</sup> the holy Ghost would not haue vsed such speech but for our blockifnes sake. Seeing then that our Lord setteth downe here so many figures and so many comparifons, let vs accuse our felues, and consider that hee doth it for the brutifnes of our nature, by reason whereof hee is faine to chawe thinges to vs aforehand, to the end we may finde some tast in them and be touched with them. But yet must we alwayes haue an eye to the end, and to the intent wherat this doctrine ameth. And our Lord sayth that it is for the staines sakes, and for the prisoners sakes. Whereby he dooth vs to vnderstand that the vengeance which hee speaketh of is for the welfare of his Church; howbeit not for all that haue borne y<sup>e</sup> name of faithfull, for wee know there are many which make false bragg of Gods name, & that is to their double condemnation. We know that the chaffe is mingled with the good corne, and the wicked are intermedled with the godly. But yet they which falsly abuse Gods name after that fashon, must not looke that their hypocrisie shal any whit boote them any rather they shall pay full deere for it. They then which pretend to bee faithfull and are not, shall not be allowed before GOD for euer: but hee will mark them out for falsifiers of his truth. But our Lorde here comforteth such as are not altogether past grace, but which notwithstanding that they haue offended, doe neuerthelessse turne againe vnto him, and beeing fury for their sinnes doe humble themselues to him and seeke to bee reformed by his hand and by his holy spirit. Those therefore which are so ouermastred, haue neede to be comforted at Gods hand, accordingly also as we see howe our Lord Iesus Christ speaketh to that sorte of men, Mat. 11. 28. 39. Com: vnto me al ye that are wearie and ouerloden, and I will refresh you, and yee shall finde rest vnto your soules. So then, in this text our Lord hath an eye to such as might be drowned in dispaire, if he should not giue them some taste of his goodnesse to stay them vp withall. And therefore he saith that although hee haue shewed himselfe rigorous to his Church for a time: yet notwithstanding he hath not disanuled the couenant which hee had made with his seruauant Abraham, but he wil shew that the people whom hee had cchosen and adopted are his own, and that seeing he is their protector, he will performe this saying of his; I will be a friend to thy friends, and an enemye to thine enemies. That is the thing in effect, which Moses had respect vnto.

Sith it is so, let vs learne to arme our felues with this lesion, and whensoever our enemies behaue themselues lyke wood beastes, yea and are as furious as flaming fire: let vs on our side vnderstand that our God hath power enough to maintaine vs, and that if he do it not at the first, it is to try our patience, and to make vs to ouercome all temptations. Wherefore let vs learn to proceede on still, yea euen though he should leade vs vnto death, assuring our felues that hee dooth it to giue vs a better lyfe, and therefore let vs alwayes goe on still, whither soeuer it shal please him to lead vs. But yet howsoever we fare, let vs not beare any spite to our aduersaries. Although as now they execute their rage against vs: yet let vs be thoroughly perswaded, that in the end they must come to account, and that as the God will shewe how deere our welfare was vnto him, & that although he seemed to haue forgotten vs and to haue cast vs quite and cleane vp: yet notwithstanding hee did still esteeme vs as his flocke. God then will shew that he had vs alwayes in his protection. Therefore let vs in the meane time abide quiet, and let vs not be so cast downe with temptations that wee should be out of hope of our saluation, and giue ouer the promises thereof that haue bin made vnto vs. Thus doe we now see the meaning of Moses, and also in how great stead his doctrine may stand vs, if we can haue the skill to apply it well to our vs.

Now it is said for a conclusion, Ye people (or nations) prayse ye the people of God. Here Moses directeth his speech to all infidels and heathen folk, to the intent that the exhortatiō which he hath set downe heretofore, may haue the more force. Hitherto he had spoken to the beleueers, and to such as haue eares to heare God withall, and to such as he calleth to his schoole. Howbeit forasmuch as there is so much troublefomnesse and scrupulousnesse in vs as is pitifull to see; Moses meant to giue vs yet one meane more for our better confirmatiō: in respect wherof he sayth, Consider my friends & see how your God comforteth you in the midst of the chastisements which he sendeth you. Although ye haue offended him, & deserue to haue extreme rigor vsed towards you, without any abatement of his corrections: yet notwithstanding, to shewe that hee would not haue you to perish, nor y<sup>e</sup> you should feele him but as a Iudge onely; he sheweth againe that he will haue pitie vpon you, and repent him of his smiting of you after that fashon, and that he will withdrawe his hand. And if you belecue not this; yet neuerthelessse, y<sup>e</sup> infidels must needs beleue it. Although they be destitute of reason, although there be not one sparke of light in the, although they be as brutish as beastes that neuer heard speaking of the liuing God: yet shall they perceiue this, and their experience shal be such, that they shall be driuen to say, Blessed is the people whose father & sauour God sheweth himselfe to be: Euen they (I say) shal bleesse you. Now, when the dumme are able to speake, the blinde to see, & the deafe to heare; should not they that haue bin inlightened by Gods word, & to whom he hath giuen tongues to magnifie his name; should not they see nor perceiue a whit? What excuse then shall there be for them? Now then, wee see why Moses hauing exhorted the faithfull to repentance, & hauing shewed them that God will haue pitie & mercie vpon them after he hath corrected them for their faultes & offences: turneth his talke to such as were blind, & had not any knowledge or tast of the truth, namely to the heathen, of purpose to make vs to perceiue perceiue the better, after what sorte God cau-serth vs to feele his goodnes, euen by experience, scaling it vp in our hearts by his holy spirit, which is named the earnest penny, and the seale of the hope of our saluation. & the caufer of vs to take hold of all the good thinges which we receiue at Gods hand. Now then if we know nothing ther-of, & that the infidels by beholding Gods won-derfull working after a manner vnaccustomed among men, be enforced to say, O what a thing is it to be of the number of Gods people? ought not we to haue a more liuely knowledge thereof, & such as may comfort vs in our afflictions, so as we may not cease to call vpon our God to hold vs continually vnder his obedience, and to haue alwayes wherewith to alluage the bitternes of our sorrowes? Truly the thing that Moses rehearfeth here is shewed vs in the example of Balaam. For he was a false Prophet, hee was an enemy of God, hee was such a one as had his tongue to sale and his heart vpon his powch, seeking to turne the trueth into falshood, and yet for all this, as though God had held him vpon the rack, he was enforced to vtter this speech; Let my soule dye the death of the righteous. He speaketh there of the people of God, saying: Who art thou Israel? Who is hee that can doe any thing against thee, seeing thou standest in the fauor of thy God? Was a deceiuer and an vnderling of Satan faine to say so? Yea verely.

 For it is Gods will that his will which hee hath witnessed already to his people by his lawe and by his word, should be knowen, and further confirmed euen by the mouth of his open enemy.
 Balaam was faine to say that the death of the Iewes was more to be desired, than the life of all other men, because God held them for his people. So then, let vs marke well, that whereas Moses sayth, Ye Nations or ye Gentiles prayse yee the people of God: it is as much to say, as declare ye that God hath wrought after such a fashion, as it is not for men to doubt any more, but that for his adoption sake, in that he hath voutsa-fed to choose the linage of Abraham, he will haue it knowen that therein he hath layd forth the infinite treasures of his goodnes.

And forthwith he addeth, that hee will reuenge the blood of his seruantes, and requiue vengeance to his enemies, but be mercifull to his land, and to his people. Here are three things in effect, which I will touch in few words, and it will be enough to conclude this song withall. The first is that God sayth, He will reuenge the blood of his seruantes. Now vnder this saying hee sheweth vs that wee may well be afflicted for a time, so far forth that euen our very blood shall not be spared, whether it be that God punish vs for the faults which we haue committed against him, or that his will be to try our patience. The thing then whereof wee be warned, is that if God thinke good to haue our blood shed, we must not thinke it straunge nor shrinke from the promises which he hath made vs, in auowing himselfe to be our God, and the defender of our lyfe. Neither must we thinke that those promises are disannulled, though our God suffer vs to be handled so cruelly. But let vs tary the time till he reuenge our blood: for hee will then shewe how deare and precious our lyfe is vnto him. Thus much concerning the first point.

As touching the second, he sayth that God will requiue his enemies with the lyke, to the ende wee should knowe that all the felicitie of the wicked and of the despisers of God shall be accursed, & therefore that we must not repine at them therfore. Now then, if wee see Gods enemies to be rich, to haue their ease in this world, and to welter in all pleasure: let vs let them alone, and not be drawn to spite them, or to intermeddle our selues with the. For why? Gods vengeance which is yet vnseene, must come before our eyes, & be considered by faith, & we must also remember how it is said, Cursed be you slauch, for ye shall weepe, Forasmuch then as the laughter of y despisers of God must be turned into mourning, weeping, and gnashing of teeth: let vs choose to weepe & waile as now, that God may dry vp our teares, & wipe them away when the time shall bee come.
 That is the second point.

The third is, that wee must learne and take hart to rest vpon the promise that God will neuer forsake vs howsoeuer the world goe. Insomuch that although we haue offended God neuer so many wayes; yet he will euer be mercifull to vs. And why is that? Because we be his people. The very foundation whereupon we must build, is that being adopted of God into the number of his children, according to his purchasing of vs by our Lord Iesus Christ, into whose body hee hath grafted vs, and wee knowe that his pardoning of our sinnes is for that he hath washed and skoured vs in the blood of his onely sonne: wee alwayes haue recourse to this promise, that our God will be fauorable to vs. True it is that now and then we shall be so at our wittes end, that we shall not knowe what to say; but yet must wee hope beyond hope, that although God shew vs many tokens of his wrath, and we be assaulted on all sides, so as we see no way to get our, but we seeme rather to be shut vp in the very bottom of y dungeons; yet notwithstanding we haue this stay to leane vnto, that God will be fauorable to his people and to his land. And therefore let vs goe on stoutly still, vntill God haue shewed vs by the deed it selfe, the thing that he had promised in word, as he declarerh it here.

Now let vs cast our selues downe before the maiestie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to voutsafe to make vs feele them better, so as we may bethink vs of them and indeuour to forsake ourselues, that he may so raise ouer vs, as it may appeare that it is very he which gouerneth vs by his holy spirit, and we may suffer our selues to bee so-ruled by his hand, as we neuer bee disquieted and put out of patience for all the afflictions and mi-series of this world, but that we may be more de-sirus to yeelde obedience vnto him, than to in-ioy all the prosperitie, ease and pleasure that the vnbeleeuers can haue, which can serue them to no purpose but to their endlesse ouerthrowe and confusion. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

On Thursday the xviii of Iune, 1556.

The CLXXXIX. Sermon which is the twelfth vpon the two & thirtieth Chapter.

44 Then went Moses, and rehearsed all the words of this song in the eares of the people, he and Hosea the sonne of Nun.

45 And when Moses had made an end of speaking all these wordes:

46 He sayd vnto them: set your mindes vpon all these wordes, which I protest against you this day: commaund you your children to keepe them, and to do all the wordes of this lawe.

47 For it is no vayne worde towards you: but it is your life. And by this word you shall prolong your dayes in the land wherinto yee goe ouer Iordan to possesse it.

Haue told you heretofore how it was no very pleasant thing to the children of Israel, to heare the contentes of this song which I haue expounded. For therein

God accuseth them to haue bin vnthankfull to him from the beginning: insomuch that whereas he had vttered all the treasures of his goodnes towards them; they had abused the same most wickedly, and bin vnfaithfull to him, and that, not for once and away, but by shewing themselves alwayes vnreformable. Now, this might well haue greued them: but yet was Moses faine to shewe them the will of God. And so we see that they which are set in office to teach the people, must not sooth them vpon nor seeke to please them, according to the saying of S. Paul that men shall haue itching eares, desirous to be fed with winde: but they whom God hath placed in the office of Shepherdes, must not bend themselves that way. Although then we see men spiteful against Gods word, and to conceiue an vtter misliking of the things which we see commaunded to declare vnto them: yet must we follow our commission, and discharge our selues faithfully of our duties. For although men lyke not to be reproofed: yet is it for their benefite neuer thelesse. As for example, a sicke person will perchance refuse a medicine: but yet must he receiue it, for it is for his health. Lykewise although the people of Israel were stubborne: yet notwithstanding they did patiently abide this doctrine which was rough and hard; as we see. And hereby wee be done to vnderstand, that if we cannot abide that God should blame vs for our sinnes, & reprove vs sharply when we haue deserued it; we be worse than those to whom God hath spoken heretofore. Now God calleth them a cursed and froward generation: and what shall then become of vs? So then, if wee be not payable to submit our selues to God willingly, at leastwise when we haue done amisse; Or if he finde such frowardnes in vs that wee haue neede to be handled roughly: let vs beare it with all mildenesse and meekenesse. Thus much concerning that poynt where it is reported that Moses spake or vttered all the wordes of the song in the hearing of the people.

Now here is yet thus much more, that therein wee may see howe God spake by the mouth of Moses. For it had not bin possible for that doctrine to haue bin retained, except the maiestie of God had marched with it. Had a mortall man handled the people as Moses did, vnauthorised from aboue: surely it had bin the next way to haue raysed a great sedition against him. Therefore it behooued God to shew that he had giuen power to Moses, and that he held the people in awe. And that serued to shewe that the Lawe was not coyned here beneath: but that God was the very author thereof, and therefore is to be receiued with such reuerence as is due to things that proceede from him. That is an other thing which wee haue to remember vpon this text.

Hauing rehearsed the song, now he addeth an exhortation. See yee your mindes (saith he) vpon all the wordes of this Lawe. Here he sheweth to what purpose and intent Gods will was to haue the sayd song published: namely; that the people might know their owne naughtinesse, wherein they had continued a long time, and be releyamed from it, and learne to mislike of their stubbornnes, and thereupon to meeken their hartes that they might liue in obedience to God. And this belongeth vnto vs, as whereof we may gather a generall rule: which is, that whensoever our Lorde entereth so into protestation & pleading against vs, discouering our vices and bewraying the corruption that is in vs: it is to the end to draw vs to repentance, that knowing in what plight we be, we should humble our selues, and therewithall bee more ready to receiue the worde of God, that whereas we were hardhearted and full of venim before, so as there was no entring into vs to be found; our hearts might be disposed both to heare & to beleue his sayings, and to be obedient to him in all cases.

The

The end (say I) whereunto all the rebukes which God giueth vs, in exhorting and quickening of vs vp, ought to serue to make vs the better disposed to heare his worde, because he seeth that naturally wee would rather goe backward than forward. This thing is declared heere expressly by Moses, who hauing finished his song, sayeth, Set your hearts vpon all the words of this lawe. Nowe the maner of speech which he vseth, betokeneth that they should be attentive or giue good care. And not without cause: according to his former discourse, where he sayth that he wakeneth men after that fashion. For wee see what negligence is in vs. Although wee pretend some zeale of profiting in Gods schoole: yet notwithstanding the doctrine is no sooner preached, but that not onely the one halfe of it, but also the most part of it slippeth from vs: in so much that euen they that haue profited best, doe scarcely beare away the third part: and some others scarce one word. To be short, wee bee so light headed, that our wittes are continually routing here & there, and wee are at no stay to apply our selues wholly to the doctrine which is preached vnto vs in the name of God. But although wee vnderstand the things that are spoken, and can say them by heart: yet are not our heartes and affections euer the more giuen vnto them. Therefore wee must not thinke it ynough for vs to be able to talke of it: but wee must haue an inward harkening vnto God, and euerie of vs must talke of it to himselfe, cheewing as it were his cudde, that is to say, musing vpon it in his minde by himselfe, as if he should say; It standeth mee in hand to marke this wel: but whereas we should in deuour after that manner to print the things in our memorie which haue bin taught vs in the name of God: we let it all slip away. For as much then as wee fee such fault in our selues: we ought to marke this text the better where it is sayde; Set your heartes thereon. As if Moses should say that Gods word requireth a singular affection, so as if we will vnderstand it well, we must not heare it as some other thing of another mans telling: for it is a kinde of wisdometh that surmounteth all our wittes. Therefore it standeth men in hand to straine themselves in this behalfe: but on the contrarie part we see the coldnesse that is in vs, in so much that when we haue once tasted a little thereof, wee passe not any more for it. Come wee to the hearing of Gods woorde? Doe wee read it alone by our selues? Then let this warning alwayes stand before our eyes, that Gods woord is worthe to be receiued with such reuerence, as we should lift vp our minds on high & labour and in deuour to rid our selues of all things that may hinder vs from giuing our selues wholly thereunto. Thus ye see what Moses meant by this speech of setting their heartes.

And he speaketh not of some one part alone, but of All the wordes of the Lawe. Whereby hee doeth vs to vnderstand, that we must not so part stakes with God, as to perforce some one saying slightlly, and to let the rest alone: but that wee must doe our in deuour in all cases, to bee thoroughly learned in all the things which our Lord knoweth to be available to our saluation. For it is certaine that there neuer seaped any superfluous word out of the mouth of God. Wee must not thinke that Gods speaking is after the maner of men, who to attaine to some one good sentence, doe vse many fetches about and many interminglings: so that if one good saying be rehearsed, a man must let passe three or foure other for it. But as I sayd afore, Gods speaking is in such wise, that all is profitable euen to the last word. And therefore not without cause doth Moses heere exhort the people of Israel to see their heartes vpon all the wordes of the Lawe. True it is that wee can neuer haue the full vnderstanding of Gods worde, but wee shall haue doone much when wee haue knowne some part of it. And wee heare what Saint Paule sayeth, 1, Cor. 13. 12 who comprehendeth himselfe also in the number of those which see and knowe but onely in part, vntill wee may behold Gods glory face to face. But yett must wee receiue all, euen to yeeld our selues obedient to God without exception, so as wee may bee quiet in all things which he speaketh vnto vs. Then let vs not doe as many folke doe, which receiue Gods worde alonely so farre fourth as it is to their owne liking, and as for the rest they let it alone. There are other some which beate their braynes about some one point, because their minde inclineth that way; and as for all the residue, they thinke it belongeth nothing to them. But let vs pray God to graunt vs the grace, that when wee once knowe any one peece of his will, wee may continually growe more and more in vnderstanding, and that wee perceiue (as sayeth Saint Paul) that all scripture is profitable. For he sayeth not that there wee shall finde wherewith to edifie our selues: but he sayeth that it is profitable to all things, so as there is there not only some thing that may doe vs good: but also that if we search throughout the things which our Lorde declareth there, wee shall finde from the very beginning, that nothing is set downe there without cause, but that GOD had alwayes a regard to giue vs good instruction in all things which he hath spoken. And so ye see to what purpose Moses exhorteth heere the people to set their mindes vpon all these wordes.

But nowe if wee consider howe many thinges there are to drawe vs away from it, and to thrust vs out of the way, yea and to pluck vs backe that we might not profite in Gods woorde: it may well teache vs further, howe greatly wee ought to straine our selues to bee quiet and peaceable, that our Lorde may bee heard, and wee giue heed to the things which hee vouchsafeth to teache vs. Howebeit wee bee farre off from such perfection. For hardly can a man abyde steadfast one minute of an houre, without the coming of some toy in his head to turne him away. A hundred of them will come vnto vs in one houre: and how many moe then in a whole day? Yea and sometimes the conceite of our foolish imaginacions doth so eary vs away; that we wote not where we be. But beholde, our Lorde God woulde fayne assure vs of his sayings: there is such such a covenant passed between him & vs, that it is not heard for vs to hearken vnto him; inso-much that if we will giue care vnto him, we shall finde that his doctrine is not vnprofitable to vs. And ought not this to prouoke vs to fight against all such imaginations as trouble our mindes and make vs to wander away? Yes: and so wee see how greatly this exhortation ought to preuaile with vs, considering that we be lo fickle minded and lighthheaded, as experieuce proueth.

Nowe after this, Moses sayeth that the people must command their children. Heere it is shewed vs, that it is not ynough for vs to profite every man himselfe in Gods schoole: but that when we our selues haue learned, we must also indeuer to bring others into the right way of saluation; specially wee to whom God hath committed the charge of such as want learning and instruction. As for example; fathers and mothers shall yeeld an account for their Children, because God giueth them with this condition, that they shall be brought vp in his feare. Lykewise Maysters and Mistresses haue to aunswere for their menseruantes and womenseruantes; and if they lay the brydle in their neckes, they must not thinke that our Lorde will let their negligence scape vnpunished. Therefore let vs take warning by this text, that such as haue children must haue a care to teache them, and to make it knowne that God is the father of all their whole offspring, if they themselues wilbe taken to bee the children of God. Lykewise they that haue menseruantes and maids seruantes must vnderstand that their house must bee fo dedicated to the seruing of God, as he may haue all louerainy in the same. After that maner ought we to take paines in the behalfe of those which are committed to our charge. For the more we see that the world sayeth in that behalfe, the more careful ought wee to bee to doe our ducie therein. For it wil bee no excufe for vs to allcage y it was a common vice, but it will rather turne to our forer condemnation, bycause one corrupteth and marreth another. Nowe then, let vs learne to haue the zeale that is commaunded vs here; namely that where God hath graunted vs the grace to be drawn to y knowledge of his truth; then to consider, that we must also indeuour to make all other men partakers thereof, that after our death Gods word may haue his course still, and not be buried with vs. For wee bee mortall creatures, and as touching this world we doe but passe away, and that very swiftly. But we knowe that Gods truth endureth for euer: and therefore wee must fo deale as that Gods woorde may continue and bee knownen, and bee receiued of men from hand to hand, euen after that wee be departed out of this worlde. And those which haue any charge ought to bende themselues chiefly heereunto, according to this saying of Saint Peter concerning the same matter. I will cause you (sayeth he) to haue a remembrance of my doctrine after that God shall haue taken mee out of this worlde. Although I liue not to speake to you any more with my mouth; yet to discharge my ducie, I must fo deale y when my mouth shall be shut and I shall be no more conuersant with you heere below to teach you, yet the same doctrine which I haue brought vnto you may haue his course still, fo as you may keepe it to your benefite and edification. For although fathers and mothers bee bounde to teache their children, and maisters and mistresses to teache those that are vnder them, and likewise the ministers of Gods woorde according as the Lorde hath called them to speake in his name, are bounde to shewe the right way and to giue good example to other men: yet notwithstanding we ought all generally to indeuour that all folkes may hearken to God, and receiue his word, and that not for two or three dayes onely, but for euer. Thus yee see to what purpose Moses hath saide heere, that Fathers must trayne vp their Children in all the woordes of the Lawe.

Nowe hee saith consequently, To doe them and keepe them. Heere Moses repeateth that which hee had spoken afore: namely that our Lordes speaking vnto vs, is not to the end wee shoulde alowe of his sayings, and confesse the same to bee true, rightfull, and iust: but to trye our obedience. Gods word then must reforme our lyfe: for to that end and purpose is it spoken vnto vs. Neuertheless, we see howe many a one doe thinke themselues well discharged when they haue but ducked downe with their heades, in token that they gainefaile it not. And they thinke GOD to bee beholden to them if they blaspheme not his doctrine, and shewe not themselues to bee enemies to it, but confesse the same to bee good and holy, for they wil not haue GOD to vrge them any further. But that were too easie a marker. For if GODS woorde were preached but onely to the ende it shoulde bee receiued and confessed with the mouth: to what purpose shoulde it serue when in the meane while curie man might take the brydle in his necke, and liue as though wee neuer had any rule of GOD? Were it not an unhallowing and defiling of the holy thinges, and a disesteating of the power of GODS woorde? Let vs beare well in minde therefore, that if wee come hither to Sermons, and yet continue still lyke our selues, fo as our lyfe bee not aunswerable to that which hath bene taught vs heere: wee shall be dubble to blame, bycause it is but a mocking and skorning of the doctrine of saluation, when wee let it slip away, and haue but our eares beaten with it, without any touching of our hartes or any reforming of our liues thereafter. What is to bee doone then? Wee must vnderstande that GODS woorde is not named a Garde without cause, fo as much as men are lyke wretched beastes without discretion, vntill God haue shewed them howe they ought to walke. Yee see then that it is our Gard or defence. And therefore if wee keepe Gods word, we also shall be kept and garded thereby, and we shall haue our bonds certaine, fo as we shall neuer erre while we liue: and moreover we shall haue wisdome to iudge betweene good and euill.

Esa. 40. 8.

And that is the cause why Moses saith, Let your children keepe the worde; and againe, let them obserue it. True it is that wee can neither keepe Gods woord nor doe it; vntill hee haue written it in our heartes. But Moses presupposeth that God will shedde our his holy spirite vpon the people, so they shud not the doone against him, but bee readie to receiue the grace which our Lorde had promised them, as wee haue seene heretofore, where he saith; Behold, the worde is nygh thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart. And not without cause doth Saint Paul say that this worde is the same which is preached in the Gospell, by cause Gods speaking there is not to make a noyse in our eares onely, but also to ingraue the doctrine in our heartes by his holy spirit, which is brought vnto vs. So then let vs marke well, that whereas Moses treateth here of the keeping of Gods worde, God also doeth bynde himselfe to his people, with condition that hee will gouerne them by his holy spirite, and write his worde in their heartes: and moreover when hee hath so touched them, hee will also be fauourable to them in bearing with their infirmities and in forgiving their sinnes. And after that manner doe wee perfourme G O D S woordes: not that wee can accomplish it and do it thoroughly: for wee bee so farre vnable to perfourme the lawe, that wee cannot so much as thinke one good thought. Nay rather wee drag backe from that which God commaundeth vs: wee bee enemies to all righteousnesse and vpright dealing. God therefore must be fayne to bow vs, and to giue vs such teachablenesse as we may bee readie to heare his worde. And moreover when hee hath graunted vs the grace to haue such zeale and affection, hee must also beare with vs in that we haue not done our indouour to do the things which he hath appointed vs; & whereas we be disobedient, and therefore hee might iustly punish vs, yet notwithstanding hee must be fayne to receiue vs to mercie, and to giue vs our pardon for our Lord Iesus Christes sake. And although the fathers of olde tyme had not so great and so euident teaching as we haue nowadayes by the Gospell: yet did they knowe that our Lorde had promised them both the grace of his holy spirite and also his mercie, to the forgiving of their sinnes. For the sacrifices which were offered in those dayes, were not ordayned without cause. It was not a trifling matter, that the people came to the temple to offer sacrifices: but it was a sure president that God receyued them to mercie; in so much that when the bloud of any beast was there shed, it was a figure which ought to leade them vp to a higher thing. For there was alwayes a heauenly patterne which Moses had seene vpon the Mount. So then, let vs not thinke as the Papistes doe, that Moses vpholdeth here the Freewill of men, of purpose, therewithall to fet forth their deseruings, as though men coulde by their owne power and pollicie obtayne Paradise, and were able to serue G O D and to doe the commaundements of the Law: Moses went not that way to worke, but hee knewe what promyse had bene made to the people, and that all thinges tended to the Couenaunt which G O D had made with them, notwithstanding that the time of the full opening thereof was not yet come as it was promysed afterwarde by Ieremie, Esay, and all the rest of the Prophetes, where it is sayd that G O D woulde make a newe Couenaunt with his people, which was that hee woulde write his Lawe in their heartes, and chaunge their stony heartes into heartes of flesh. True it is that this belongeth to the Gospell: neuerthelesse, it was figured also vnder the Lawe, and the fathers that liued in those dayes, had some taste thereof so farre as was expedient for them.

Nowe seeing that our Lorde hath nowadayes multiplyed his grace towards vs, and made our state more excellent than the state of them that liued vnder the Lawe: surely wee be lesse to bee excused than they, for it is certayne that it maketh our offences and disobedience the more heynous. Therefore let vs bethinke our selues, and let vs marke well that seeing God doeth offer vs the liuing waters whereof Ezechiel speaketh, that is to say, seeing he sheddeth fourth the giftes of his holy spirit to make vs to walke according to his will: wee must assure our selues that it wee shud the gate against him, we shalbe much more worthy of blame than those which yet neuerthelesse were condemned vnder the lawe. And therefore let this waken vs, and make vs more willing to heare Gods word, to the end to keepe it, seeing hee not onely speaketh to vs by the mouthes of men, but also prepareth vs to draw vs to him by the inward power of his holy spirite, and on the other side spareth vs, and falleth not to examining of our liues with rigour, but accepteth our dooings as a father doeth his childrens, notwithstanding that there bee much infirmitie and many vices in vs. And to the end this word may haue the more force, Moses sayeth that hee not onely spake or vttered it, but also shathe witnessed or protested it to the people, as wee haue seene afore. And not without cause doeth hee repeate it heere againe. For we be so lasche and shouchfull in receyuing Gods worde, as is pitie to see. Therefore it is requisite that there shoulde alwayes bee some protestation, to make vs thinke the better thereon. Hee sayde heretofore, I call heauen and earth to witness against you this day, that if the doctrine which I bring vnto you doe fall to the grounde, and that yee make no account thereof: the very Sunne and Moone and all other creatures shall cry out against you for vengeance of such contempt and negligence.

So then he addeth now, God hath made mee a teacher, and I for my part will discharge my duetic, and that not with a colde and dead vtterance of the things which I haue receiued, but by protesting to you on Gods behalfe as though I were a publike notarie & had a proxie from him, assuring you that sith your God hath graunted you the grace to heare his word, if you bee negligent in receiuing it, yee must make a dreadfull account for it. Hereby wee bee warned to receiue Gods worde with such reuerence, as the Angels of heauen may bee witnesses of our fayth, zeale, and constancie. Let vs goe with open heartes and mindes lifted vp to God, that wee may bee taught by him. And if wee doe so, wee shall bee turned away from all the impediments of the world, in so much that God shall no sooner haue spoken the word, but wee shall bee agreed to yeeld to his teaching, and we shall not bee zealous for a small time onely, but when we haue once begun, wee shall holde out to the ende. For woe to vs if wee turne head in the middes of our way, and start aside when we haue begun well, so as the diuell may finde y<sup>e</sup> means to leade vs astray. Alas, what shall it boote vs to haue beene come into a good trade? So then, let vs marke well this worde Wümeße, which is set downe here by Moses, to doe vs to vnderstand that our Lorde speaketh not to vs to leaue our vnthankfulnes unpunished when wee haue despised the things that are tolde vs in his name, but that there shall be always this solemne witnessing or protestation, vnlesse we benefite our selues by his teaching of vs.

Now Moses addeth consequently, That the worde is not vaine towards them. This peece of text is misundersoode if it bee taken for an exhortation. And yet for all that, it should seeme, that Moses exhorteth the people, when he saith: Let not Gods woord bee vaine towards you, beware that yee receiue it not as a thing of no price, nay rather consider what a Maiestie it hath, when God appeareth to men by his worde which is his luely image. But in the Hebrew tongue wherein the Prophet spake, it is thus: The worde shall not bee vaine towards you. For so is it, worde for worde in the Text: when he sayeth; sowards you, he meaneth, that in respect of the people, the word shall not bee in vaine. And this will well bee perceived by the saying of Esay in his five and sixith Chapter, which text is misexpounded likewise. But the right expounding of the one will bee a key to open the right vnderstanding of the other. It is layd in Esay, my word shall not returne empirie vnto mee, but it shall yeeld his fruit there as I send it vnto. Some haue thought that our Lorde meant there, that whensoever his worde is preached, it shall not bee in vaine; but that it shall yeelde profite by giuing fayth to the hearers. But the Prophet Esay ment not so by those wordes. What did he then? Hee confirmed or warranted Gods promises, to the intent that men should not doubt of the performance of the things contained in them. As for example, God promiseth vs to prosper vs by his blessing, to take vs into his keeping, and to defend vs against all the troubles and vexations of the world; so that if men persecute vs, he will bee as our bucklar: if wee bee threatened and assaulted on all sides, he will bee our fortress; in time of death he will haue a care to feede vs; against all the assaults of Satan, hee will gard vs by the power of his holy spirit: to be short, Gods promises are infinite. And yet for all that, wee bee so weake hearted, that we conceiue not what he saith, but rather wee thinke that wee shall be disappointed if wee trust to his promises. There needeth not any thing to tolle vs too and fro, for to our seeming all Gods promises are but deceites. For this cause he sayeth; No, like as the Raine falleth not in vaine, but moisteneth the earth, and the earth being moistened yeeldeth forth his fruit, so as the raine hath as it were a secret vertue to giue nourishment to men: therefore like as yee see that in the order of nature, the raine ingendreth such a kinde of fruitfulness in the earth, so assure you your selues that my word shall not bee in vaine, but I will make it to yeelde profite, that is to say I will perourme all my promises. Therefore bee bold to trust vnto mee, that I will performe and bring to passe al that euer I haue spoken by my Prophetes. So in this text Moses sayeth, The word shall not be vaine towards you, that is to say, so you receiue it, thinke not that God will leaue you with your mouthes open like silly hungerstaruen folke, so as yee should hang lingering and not knowe what shall become of you: for your God will make you to seele by prooffe that hee hath not promised you aught in vaine. Now, when our Lorde speaketh after that manner, shall wee cast doubt yet stil, and stand scanning whether his sayings shall be performed or no? His worde shall not bee voyde towards you: that is to say, yee shall finde the effect thereof, and hold ye hardly vnto this, that God will worke with such force, as yee shall peceyue that when his worde is preached vnto you, it is as much as if he himselfe were present, to put the thing in prooffe and execution, which hee hath declared. Thus wee see now the meaning of Moses, to the intent that the people should take some tast of Gods word and receiue it with all reuerence. He telleth them that when God speaketh, it is not a sound that vanisheth away in the aire: but that in that word lieth and consisteth all our happinesse and chiefe welfare, and that wee haue wherewith to content our selues, when our Lord vouchsafeth to direct his worde so vnto vs. For why? Wee shall not bee foaded with vaine hope; but we shall seele in duee how our Lorde meant to trie our faith in such wise for a time, as that he wil yet neuer the lesse performe all that euer he hath spoken.

Now Moses confirmeth this exhortation yet better, by this which he addeth: It is your life and your welfare, by it shall your dayes be prolonged in the land which you goe to possesse. Hereby we may easily gather that Moses made not an exhortation to the people, [to shewe] that the worde is not vaine; but rather that he made them a promise, that the worde should haue force and vertue continually as it were without interruption. It is your life sayeth he, and through the power thereof shall you prolong your dayes. Hee sheweth then, that vntill such time as our Lorde had giuen his Lawe to the people, they were as wretched folke that wist not where to haue any rest, no more than all other men vpon the earth. True it is that Gods creating of vs and his setting of vs in this world, is to the ende wee looke at him, put our trust in him, and hope for al good things at his hand. But what? We besō earthly, that we can by no meanes come nigh him. And indeede he is too farre off, and though wee thinke vpon him, yet vntill he giue vs his word and vtter his fatherly loue towards vs, alas wee must needes euer tremble and bee abashed. Let vs marke well then, that we shal neuer haue any assurednesse, vntill our Lorde haue giuen it vs by his woorde. For our lyfe is but a lingering, wee bee turmoyled with continuall troubles and vquietnesse, and (which more is) wee must needes finde GOD our deadly enemy, vntill he haue taught vs by his word. And I pray you, can wee haue any sparke of lyfe, when we perceiue that God is against vs? Now surely men deceiue themselves if they weene to liaue Gods fauour, vntill they be grounded and settled vpon his woorde. And therefore not without cause doeth Moses say that the word is our life. For thereby wee bee doone to vnderstande howe wretched our state is, vntill our Lorde haue drawn vs to him, and communicated himselfe to vs by meanes of his word.

Nowe when we once knowe that Gods word bringeth vs such benefites, to wit, that we knowe that God wilbe fauourable to vs, that he quickeneth vs, and that it sheweth vs wherein our ioy and felicitie consisteth: wee must knowe also that it serueth vs for a Seale, & that our Lord will haue vs to take it as a gage, as though the thing were done already. And therefore whensoever God speaketh, let vs hold vs to him. For hee is no vnliar as mortall men bee: hee is not free of promise, and a performer of nothing: therefore let vs boldly sticke to his word, and sith it is our life, let vs assure ourselues that it wil not deceiue vs, nor beguile vs if we trust vnto it. For why? It shall not returne void from vs: that is to say, when we haue once admitted it in, it wil take such roote, as Gods power shall euer be at hande to vs, and God shall sooner renounce himselfe than not performe his promises. True it is; that we shal not see it out of hand: but yet must we be fully resoluēd thereof, and patiently tarry til ſit time be come for our lord to shew that he ment not to iest or to dally, in telling vs that he would be liberall vnto vs. Now sith it is so, let vs learne to be the more desirous to receiue Gods woorde; in respect of the profite that it bringeth vs. For God thiaketh it not ynough to shew vs the maiestie that is in his word, to the intent we should be humbled to obey it: but his mind is also to allure vs, that we might be in loue with it. And to that ende doeth Moses speake it here. He had magnified the word sufficiently heretofore, shewing that it proceedeth from God, and that heauen and earth shall beare witness against vs if we refuse it: but now he addeeth another reason to induce men the better to heare God, yea and to heare him desirously, namely; that God will prolong their dayes in the land which they go to possess, at leastwise if they suffer themselves to be taught by him. And why? For we be all poore silly soules without hope of saluation, if we continue in the state of al mākind. All the life which men weene themselves to haue in this world, is but as a way to hell vntill God haue turned vs to the better, and haue taught vs what is saide in his woorde. As touching that which he addeeth, saying, That they shall lengthen their dayes when they bee passed ouer Jordan: I will create thereof to morow if it please God.

Now let vs fall downe before the Maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faulces, praying him to make vs so to feele them more and more, as wee may learne to turne againe vnto him, and make the great number of exhortations available which moue vs dayly to doe: and that when he layeth before vs our sinnes and threatneth vs with his wrath, we may be so conuicted, as we may not continue hardened in euill, but returne vnto him, and pray him to bee so gracious vnto vs, as not to suffer Satan to haue dominion ouer vs; but rather to make vs indeuour to reform ourselues in such sort, as that our hearing of his word may cause vs to amend and bring vs backe to him, and frame our whole life according to his will. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Fryday the xix. of Iune, 1556.

The CXC. Sermon, which is the thirteenth vpon the two and thirtieth Chapter.

48 And the same day the Lord spake vnto Moses, saying, 49 Get thee vp into this mountaine Abarim, the mountaine Nebo which is in the land of Moab ouer against Iericho: and there take a view of the land of Chanaan, which I giue in possession to the children of Israell.

50 And thou shalt dye vpon the mountaine which thou goest vp into, and be gathered vnto thy people like as Aaron thy brother dyed vpon Mount Hor and was gathered with his people.

51 Bicause ye sinned against me among the Children of Israell by the waters of strife in Cades, in the wilderness of Sin. For yee sanctified me not in the presence of the Children of Israell.

52 Therefore thou shalt see the land before thee, but thou shalt not enter into it, namely the land which I giue vnto the Children of Israell.

Deut. 1. 37.

His historie hath bin touched alreadie heretofore in the first Chapter, where Moses declared that he was deprived of the benefite which he had looked for, that is to say, of inioying the inheritance which God had promised to all the lineage of Abraham. Now the ful time was come, and Moses had bin appointed of God to deliuer the people: by reason whereof there was great likelihood that he aboute all others should haue gone into that land. But when he was to haue set his foote into it, then behoued it him to die: and that was a verie hard case for him. Hee made mention thereof afore, to shewe to the children of Israell, howe great and excessiue their lewdnesse was, seeing that he was punished for their sakes. For the mischiefe came not of himselfe, hee had not consented, neither to their murmurings nor to their blasphemies, but rather had strayed himselfe to withstand them. Yet notwithstanding, his constancie was not so great as was requisite. Onely because hee was as a man amazed, and glorified not God with such steadfastnesse as hee ought to haue doone; hee was banished from the land. This doeth he charge them with to their reproch. And here he repeateth againe, how that after he had published the lawe, God told him againe that he should beare that punishment of not entering into the lande of Canaan: and therewithall he telleth him immediately of his death. Nowe first of all, if wee reade what is written by Moses himselfe; it will seeme that he ouershot not himself in the place called Meriba, which aforetime was named Raphirim. For there perceiuing the people to cry that they died for thirst, hee called vpon God. Moses doeth not take part with them that storned after that manner, hee was no fellow with them, hee repyned not at God: but rather went to him with all humilitie, saying; Alas Lorde, I am a mortall man, and how may I satisfie this people, vnlesse thou prouide for them? Moses resorted vnto GOD, his meaning was not to prouoke him to wrath, & therewithall it should seeme that he looked that God should worke after his accustomed manner; that is to say, that hee should shewe forth his power. Now then; if a man looke vpon the outward apparance of the matter, it will seeme that Moses behaued himselfe faithfully, and that he was not to be blamed. Yet notwithstanding, hee is condemned, both he & his brother Aarou. And why? Hereby wee see that wee must not alwayes weigh our finnes in our owne ballance: for that will euer deceiue vs, according to this saying of Salomon,

Prou. 21. 2.

Man thinketh his owne wayes to be right, but God weyeth mens hearts. Therefore when men haue acquit themselves, they haue gained nothing thereby. For sometimes the lewdnesse lyeth hid within: God seeth it, and it is he y<sup>e</sup> chalengeth to himselfe the office of searching of all thoughts. Then by the example of Moses we be warned not to flatter our selues. For although our finnes be hidden from men, yea and that we our selues cannot comprehend them: wee must not vnder colour thereof deeme our selues to be righteous, but put our selues into Gods hande, praying him to make vs vnderstand our secrete vices, and to vouchsafe that as they bee buryed from vs, so they may be pardoned by him: & let vs cry wth Dauid, Lord who knoweth his faultes? But cleanse thou me from the things which I haue not perceyued. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember vpon this place.

Psal. 19. 11.

And nowe hercuppon let vs learne to discharge our selues of all pride, for there are many men to bee seene, which coulde finde in their heartes to stand in contention with God; and would neuer agree to his iudgement, vntill hee haue shewed them wherefore he doth condemne this or that. But we must not lift vp bristles after that maner. We knowe there is but one onely Iudge, and that wee must all come before his seate with reuerence, as sayeth Saint Paule. Sith it is so, let vs keepe vs from attempting any thing beyond that which belongeth vnto vs, and let vs not take vpon vs the authoritie of God, to put difference betwene good and euill after our owne fanisie; but let vs enquire after the thing which our Lord alloweth, & hold it for good without gainfaying. And looke what he condemneth, let vs hold it for euill, without asking question why, vnlesse God shew vs y<sup>e</sup> reason, and then must we accept thereof. For if hee once say the worde, wee must holde vs to it and keepe silence. To be short, let vs learne to glorifie God in all cases: and when hee hath once spoken a thing, let it suffice vs, and let vs all agree vnto it without any further adoe. For it shall not boote vs to stryue, wee shall but double our condemnation continually. What should it haue profited Moses to haue made long processe, and ro haue entred into particularities with God for the iustifying of himselfe, [& to haue said,] Why? What haue I said? Did any one word scape mee out of mye mouthe? And on the other side, I meant not to consent to the wickednesse of this people. Which thing I haue shewed as much as might be in all my dooinges. In so much y<sup>e</sup> euer when they asked water, I knewe not howe to doe better, than to consider myne owne weakenes, and therefore I confessed it with mine owne mouth, and therewithall called vpon thee. Moses had many allegations to make: but if he had entred into them, it had bin the next way to haue prouoked Gods vengeance so much the more against him. Seeing then that hee did willingly yeeld to his condemnation, to the intent to obtaine mercie for his faulte: let vs followe his example, and suffer God to vse his due authoritie ouer vs; and let all mouthes bee stopped before him as sayeth the scripture. Thus much for that one poynt.

Rom. 14. 12
2. Cor. 1. 12

Nowe by the way we see what charge they take vpon them, which ought to gouerne a people. For it is not ynough for them to be no partakers of the rebellions, mutinies, wicked compactes, & other offences that are committed against God. Although they protest that they be not attaynted with them, nor had any minde or intent that way; yet shall they not goe quit nor be counted guiltlesse for all that. For it behoueth them to withstand it with all stoutnesse of minde and force, and to be vtterly vnuincible. If they shoulde see, not onely two or three naughtipackes fet themselves against God; but also euen a whole people set vpon mischief: yet ought they to let themselves against them as open aduersaries, in the maintenance of Gods cause: and if they faile so to doe; their cowardlinesse will not be excusable. Oftentimes the Magistrats which haue Gods sword in their hand, and the Ministers of Gods woorde which are ordeyned to rebuke euill; thinke it ynough to be but onely grieued when men offende God. But wee see contrariwise, that although Moses and Aaron medled not with the wickednesse of the people, but did euen stunne it, and would with all their hearts that God had been honoured, & it was not long of them that things went no better forward: yet notwithstanding, God imputeth it to them for a fault, because they were not stout and freeharted in striuing against them, as they ought to haue bin. So then, they which are set in publique office, ought to desire God to giue them such constancie and stoutnesse of mind, as they may not yeelde for any thing that can happen, but keepe on their course continually, without striking their saile as they say. For surely as for vs, a small thing will shake vs, or rather throw vs downe at the first blow. Therefore must God be faile to worke in vs. Yet notwithstanding we shall not be discharged, except that euery of vs in his calling do put toorth himselfe in the maintenance of Gods quarrel, to restraine the euill as much as hee can, so as our mouths be open to rebuke vice, in somuch that if we see a whole people giuen to wickednesse, we cry out vnto them, & tel them of the vengeance that is prepared for them. Thus ye see what we haue to doe on our side.

Also let the magistrats straine themselves as much as is possible for them. For if we, considering what is happened to Moses and Aaron, doe step aside; let vs not thinke our selues to haue more priuledge than they. But yet we haue to note heere withall, that Gods punishing of Aaron and Moses was in such sorte, as he ceased not for all that to auow them for faithfull, and to allow their calling; and to yeelde them an excellent record euen after their deceasse, accordingly as we heare how it is sayde in the psalme, that Aaron and Moses were his true seruantes. Ye see heere how the holy ghost magnifieth Moses and Aaron; and yet for all that they sayled not to be punished too. Yea, but God vseth but temporall punishment towards them; and thereupon hee ceaseth not to be their father still. When God then punisheth our faults, although the corrections bee irksome to beare; yet let vs be contented therewith, so long as hee is mercifull to vs still, and that hee auowe vs to be of the number of his children. So long as that remaineth to vs, let vs go on still, and let it not grieue vs though GOD scourge vs with his rodde, for wee haue neede of them. Wee see how the greatest, euen those which haue most excelled in all vertue and holynesse, haue shewed vs the way in this behalfe. Shoulde GOD spare vs more than hee spared Moses and Aaron? Ye see then howe the saythfull ought to prepare themselves to receiue chastisement for the offences which they haue committed, and that they must not thinke that because they be GODS children, therefore they shoulde be exempted from all afflictions, and GOD shoulde doe away all their faults without making any countenance of misliking them. But rather they must be fully resolued, that God will visite them and put them in mynde of their sinnes; and thereupon submit themselves to him, and offer him their backs. Like as a child looketh for correction when he seeth his father angrie: so must wee haue the meeknesse in vs to submit our selues to God, and shame must not touch vs, neither we be ouermuch grieued when our Lord is minded to discouer our faultes, and to bring vs lowe before men. True it is that we ought to be touched therewith, but yet with such sorow as S. Paul speaketh of, which wee must not shun, because it tendeth to our welfare. For if our sorowing be after a worldly manner because wee be not honoured nor had in such reputation as we would be: it is a cursed and sinfull sorowing. But if wee be forie that we haue offended God, and all our griefe is for the euill which we haue done: that sorow is a sacrifice which God alloweth and well lyketh of. Howsoever the world goe, if GOD list to lay any note of infamie vpon vs; let vs not thinke it ouerstrange, sich wee see that Moses who had bin exalted as a figure of our Lorde Iesus Christ, who had deliuered the people of Israel out of bondage, and vpon whom GOD had shedde out his power; was faile for all that to be fet as vpon a scafolde, and to be put to reprove, and to haue it made knowne that God did solemnly bereaue him of the land that was promised to the lineage of Abraham, when a great sort of Rasfals and a great many of people of none account entered into it, and in the meane while Moses was fayne to be shutt out. Sith wee see this, shoulde wee thinke our punishment ouer harde and grieuous, when God will haue our sinnes laide open, specially when it may serue for example & instruction? Nay, we ought not to haue so great regard of our owne honour, but that we ought to esteeme the saluation of our neighbors much more. Moses for his part knew y this thold serue for a good president to the worldes ende, because that whensoever we compare our selues with him, we must needs hang downe our heads (as I haide afore) and put our selues into the handes of GOD. At the sight heereof Moses was contented. For he sought the welfare of the whole Church; and so that God were glorified, he made no further reckening; but vterly forgetting himselfe, he was not so chare of his owne renoune and good reputation in this behalf, but that hee did patiently beare the chastisement which it pleased God to denounce against him. That is the thing which wee haue in effect to remember in this place, where it is shewed vs againe, that Moses was shut out from the possessio of the land which had bene promised for an inheritance, as well to him, as to all the rest of Abrahams ofspring.

And herewithall we ought also to marke well, that whereas God sendeth him vp into Mount Nebo, and telleth him that hee shall dye there; he (as we shall see in the end) resisteth it not, but prepareth himselfe to it. True it is that he pronounceth the blessings which shalbe seene hereafter in order, and which we wil go in hand withall to morowe if it please God. Also hee maketh as it were his last Will to all the people. And yet for all this he is not dismayed; but putteth himselfe into Gods hand, and prepareth himselfe willingly to dye. Nowe heerein wee see, how the faithfull ought to be alwayes willing to goe whither soeuer God calleth them, and how they ought to ouerleape al the difficulties of this world; in so much that although they meete with neuer so many thornes, and neuer so many encounters; yet ought they to thrust forward still, & not to be druen aside, nor to be put out of hart for all that. Also when God taketh them out of the world, it behoueth them to haue alwayes one foote onward on the way; as if they should say, lo heere I am Lord, I am ready to come vnto thee. But this cannot be done, except a man haue profited well in Gods schoole, and specially that we know there is a better life prepared for vs. For without that, we can neuer feele truly that we be but straungers in this world. For they which beleue there is none other life than this which we inioy heere, and think to make their rest in this world; are so wedded to it, y<sup>e</sup> a man cannot plucke them from it but by force and spite of their teeth. But when we once know that our inheritance is in heauen; we conclude y<sup>e</sup> this world is but a pilgrimage, and that we must passe apace through it. And he that passeth it so, shall finde it no hard matter to go through with his iourney, when he seeth that his saluation is on the other side, and that God calleth him thereunto. The thing then whereunto it behoueth vs to put our whole induour, is the minding of the heavenly lyfe, and to consider that God allureth vs dayly to come to the immorall glory which he hath prepared for vs, to the intent that when we be to depart out of this world, we may not goe vnto him against our wils, nor make complaints, nor say after the maner of vnbeleeuers, What shall I doe, or what shall become of me? For (as S. Paule sheweth vs,) he that hath our gage in his handes, is faithfull. Our saluation is named a gage, so as God byndeth himselfe lyke a man that receyuech moneye or some other thing that hee is put in trust with to keepe. Nowe if a man haue taken a thing to keepe, it behoueth him to shewe his honestie and truth. And thinke we that God will deceyue vs, hauing promysed vs to be the keeper of saluation? Seeyng then that hee hath vouchsafed to take it into his handes, and to vndertake the safe custodie thereof; let vs bee bold to trust vnto him, and let vs goe yeelde our selues into his handes when soeuer hee shall call vs. Thus yee see howe wee bee to put this text in vre.

Yet must wee note further, that there is lesse excuse for vs noweadayes, than there was for Moses, or for all the fathers that lyued vnder the Lawe. For had they the promyses that are made vnto vs at this day in the Gospell? They dyd but see them a farre off, and vnder verie darke shadowes. Or did they see Iesus Christ rayfed from the dead? In deede they knewe it, howbeit but by hope, as whereby they comprehended in a figure the things that were absent. But noweadayes, forasmuch as wee haue the Gospell, which openeth to vs the gates of heauen: GOD allureth vs to him as familiarly as can bee, wee bee already entered into it in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ: in so much that his going vp on high, is to drawe vs thither to him. For in as much as he is our head; he will drawe vs vp to him into the glory whereinto hee himselfe is entred already, so wee bee not separated from him. Let vs beware then that wee disapoynt not that grace of GOD. But let vs bee so stablished in the fayth, that when soeuer GOD shal call vs out of the world; wee may not sticke to goe willingly vnto him, and to doe that which wee see heere in Moses. When GOD tolde him that hee shoulde dye, hee strayned nor courtesie to goe vp into the Mounraine, although that place were appoynted vnto him, as it were to offer vp himselfe in sacrifice to GOD. Moreouer, his sinne was layde afore him againe: and yet did not that discomfirt him neither. And that is a poynt more which wee ought to marke well, for it importeth a verie good lesson. See heere, Moses is at deaithes doore: it may seeme that at that tyme hee ought to haue had some comfort wherewith to asswage his sorowe. And yet for all that, God reneweth the remembrance of the fault which hee had committed: and hee telleth him againe, that hee must take in good worth the punishment which hee had heard spoken of afore. Wee see then that Gods threatenings whereby hee layeth our sinnes before vs, ought not to trouble vs so much, but that wee ought to take occasion and matter to reioyce in them; by cause wee knowe (as I haue sayde already,) that GOD doeth so temper his rigour, as that euen in his punishing of vs, hee ceaseth not to doe the office of a father still, so as the principall (that is to say the saluation of our soules) is referred vnto vs, yea and the temporall chastisements are beneficiall to vs, as by the meanes whereof GOD cleanseth vs, and maketh vs to taste the better how greatly it is for our behoofe to haue his fauour. That then is a thing which wee haue to marke in the person of Moses.

So then, if any man be blamed for his faultes, though it were when he is sicke, yea or at the last gasp when Gods iudgements are set afore him to make him sory and to lame: yet must he not thinke it straunge. For as we see, there are many which haue neede to bee so touched, and to be as it were touched with a launcer, that they may bee brought to God with such reuerence as is requisite. And although such corrections bee bitter at the first sight; yet must not men fall into despaire, but alwayes haue recourse to Gods goodnes, assuring themselues that his blaming of them after that manner, is not an vtter condemning of them, but is done to the end that they should be their owne Iudges, and that hee therewithall is minded to receiue them to mercy. Therefore let vs suffer our Lord to deale after that manner with vs, and whensoever we haue any heartbiting, so as God toucheth vs inwardly with the remembraunce of our sinnes, or we see them in reading his word, or we heare them spoken of in sermons, or wee be warned of them priuately: let vs learne that the setting of them before vs is not to make vs conceiue any hartburning, or to cast vs in despayre, so as we should bee kept backe from God: but that wee should therewithall imbrace his promises, and not feare to bee disappointed of the things which hee hath beightened vs: for his proceeding after that manner, is to the ende we should set the more store by his grace, and accept it the better, and bee prouoked to seeke it, and also receiue it with the earnest desire. To that ende are his threatnings and iudgements set afore vs. And after that manner ought we to practise the text that was treated of yesterday, and also that which remaineth yet stil thereof. For it was sayd that the Lawe was the lyfe of all the people, and that it should maintaine the in the land which God had promised them, and whereinto he led them to put them in possession thereof. And yet neuertheless we see that in the lawe are many hard and sharpe threatnes: there bee the curses, which ought to make the haire to stand vp stille vpon mens heades: and there bee so many presidents wherein God bewrayeth and vttereth the iniquities of the people: that at the first it may seeme that they should bee vtterly confounded, and that the law serued but to smite them with maine blowes like a beetle, and to daunt them and feare them in such wise, as they might not approach vnto God: but yet haue wee neede to bee so mortified. For let vs consider well the pride of our nature, and the false ouerweening and vaine selfestrutt wherewith wee be puffed vp, and how stubborne wee be against God: and wee shall finde that if hee will doe vs good, he must bee faine to beate vs downe after that manner, and his worde must be as a two edged sword, so as there be neither thought nor affection in vs which is not searched by it, and it must enter into y very marrow of the bones, as the Apostle treateth thereof in the Epistle to the Hebrewes. Therefore let vs not thinke it straunge that God dooth here tell Moses againe of his fault, notwithstanding that it was forgiuen him. For although hee ought to be glad of it, because God did it in such wise as he was nothing hindred thereby to call vpon him quietly, and to cast himselfe as it were into his fatherly lap: yet was it good for him to thinke vpon the fault which he had committed. And why? To humble him, to the intent hee should yeelde the more honor to the infinite goodnes of God, and say, Alas, I might iustly haue bin sunken to the bottom of hell for one only deede that beset me in lesse than the turning of a hand: though I was grieued at the manifold grudgings of the people, yet intended I not to haue offended my God, but it happened vnto me through ouersight for want of thinking thereon. And now if this onely one fault was enough to cast me into endlesse curses; Alas what is due to my whole lyfe? I should haue committed a thousand thousand offences, yea and I should neuer haue ceased to augment Gods vengeance vpon me still, if I had not bin restrained and helde backe. And yet must I nowe beare the punishment of my fault, which in the sight of the worlde seemeth very light; but God knoweth what maner a one it is, seeing that for it I must bee forestalled of the land of Canaan, and haue deserued to be banished, not onely from thence, but also fro the heauenly lyfe. Thus ye see how it was good for Moses to bee taught humilitie after that fashioe: And what is the to be thought of vs?

Nowe moreouer our Lorde sayth vnto him, that he should beholde the land: and that was to shew him (as I haue sayd already) that he is not so fonded of going thither, but y God taketh him stil as one of the number & cōpany of his children. And his taking of possession of the land by eyesight, was also an admonition vnto him, that y land was not the cheefe heritage wherunto the children of Abraham were to attaine. Here therefore wee haue a sure record, that although the fathers which liued vnder the Lawe had not the heauenly lyfe so lightsomly & largely reuealed vnto them: yet did they grounde themselues thereupon, laboring to attaine therunto, and were not wedded to this world as if that had bin the marke they aimed at and that they had bin tyed to it to say; Well, God hath choien and adopted vs to possess a good and fatte land, to the intent wee should bee fostered therein. For if the people had but thought vpon that; what had become of Moses who was the excellentest prophet that cuer God rayfed vp vntill the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ, as wee shall see in the last Chapter? That is the cause why Moses beheld y land and viewed it a far off. And although hee neuer ate one graine of the corne thereof, nor tasted one drop of the wine: yet did it suffice him to see that God had not disappointed his people. It is to bee concluded then, that Moses had a further forelook, and stood not musing vpon the transitorie inheritance, but considered full well that when wee be made the children of God, it is to the ende wee should liue euerlastingly with him. Seeing then that Moses had that; let vs vnder-stand that the fathers were not without cause called the children of God; which thing they were not, vnlesse they were heires with vs. And forso much as they tended to the heauenly lyfe, (which notwithstanding was shewed to them but afar off) let vs take the more courage to vs, seeing that God is come nearer vnto vs after a more familiar maner, euen in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ. Therefore let all these things moue vs, that our faith may waken vs and withdrawe vs frō all the impedimentes of this world, so as we may keepe on our way to the euerlasting rest which cannot faile vs.

Now whereas it is sayd vnto Moses, that hee shall bee gathered up with his people: hereby our Lord meant, that hee was of necessitie to passe the common way (as they say,) of all mankinde, and that his case should be no better than of all the rest of Adams children. Truly this woulde trouble vs, if there were no more than so. But I haue spoken already of y special promise where-uppon Moses was grounded. Neuerthelesse, our Lord shewed him that forasmuch as he was descended of Adams race; it behooued him needes to dye. And this accordeth still with the matter which I speake of euen now, namely that we shall neuer take sufficient taste of Gods goodnes and promises, vntil we be brought low in ourselues, y we may know our own needes, and what y lyfe is which is promised vs, and which we obtain by Iesus Christ. We think not vpon any of all these things, except we first know the death y is purchased vnto vs by Adam, & that the same dwel- leth in vs, and holdeth vs prisoners in his bands. If we knowe not that wee bee cursed of God by nature, and that we haue no other hope but rottenesse as touching our bodies; and that as touching our soules we be reiectēd of God, & feele that he is against vs, and that he is our Iudge, y he will vter forth all his maiestie to our confusion: Vntil such tynie as we feele all these things, it is certeine that we will neuer seeke the remedie that is offered vs in our Lorde Iesus Christ, nor receiue him with such reuerence as to become lyke poore hungry soules. So then we see how we haue neede of this warning, that we must be gathered up. With whom? With those which haue gone before vs. And without that, what comfort shall wee haue? Lesse than the brute beasts haue. For if we thinke vpon nothing but death; we goe all into rottennes; our bodies be in no better plight than the bodies of Ases and Dogges. And againe as touching our soules, we must needes be separated and cut off from God, and feele him to be against vs. That then is our state.

And therefore whensoever we heare any speaking of death; let vs by and by bethinke vs of Adams sin, of the corruption of our nature, and of all the vices that dwell in vs; which serue all to cut vs off as rotten members from Gods house and kingdome. When wee haue bethought vs thereof, and that we be so dismayed as we know not where to become, for the terror that shall haue caught holde of vs: let vs repaire to Iesus Christ, and sith we knowe that hee is the resurrection and the lyfe; let vs take courage to offer our selues vnto death, and let it not grieue vs to be done away, seeing we haue promise that we shall be restored againe. And so, when wee haue bethought vs of all the nations of y world, and of all Adams offspring: let vs come to the people whom God hath sanctified and chosen to be his heritage. Seeing then that we shall be gathered vpp with the righteous, surely it is a good gathering, and therein lyeth all our rest & cōtentation, so as death shall be sweete vnto vs. And although wee must of necessitie passe that way, with all other creatures: yet dooth God take vs and keepe vs as his chosen children, and to be ioyned to our Lord Iesus Christ, who is named the first borne from among the dead. And to the intent we should bee the first frutes of the resurrection and of the quicke, hee hath gathered vs to himselfe, and matched vs with y holy Patriarkes, Prophets, and Apostles, That (say I) is the thing which sweeteneth all the sorrowes that we can conceiue.

Now in the end it is sayd yet again vnto Moses, That he sanctified not Gods name among the children of Israel, and therefore hee should see the Land, euen the Land which God had giuen to his people. Here we haue to marke, that it is not enough for vs to abstaine from doing euill: but that we must also sanctifie Gods name, when we see men misse it through their leawdnesse. And in very deepe, the chiefe thing that God requireth, is that his name should be sanctified: for it is the first petition which we make. And by that order, our Lord Iesus Christ sheweth vs full well, that we must begin at that point; as for example when he saith, First seeke yee the kingdome of God, what dooth that signify? That we should seeke to exalt God, that all the world should obey him, and that his maiestic should be knownen, to the end that all praye of wisdom, righteousnesse, goodnes, and power might bee attributed vnto him. That is the thing whereunto euery of vs ought to put his induour. True it is y we ought in deepe to sanctifie the name of God, that is to say, to dedicate our selues euery man for himselfe to his seruice, so as his glory may shine forth in vs: but yer is not that enough. For we shall see men vnhallowe the name of God, some by blaspheming him, and some by rushing out into all vices and enormities. Now therefore whē we see such things, our zeale ought to be kindled to withstand them to the vttermost of our power, & to shewe that we desire nothing more, than that God should bee honored, and abide vnappayred, so as men should not abridge him of any thing. When wee haue this zeale, then shall we sanctify Gods name, not onely in our owne soules and bodies, but also euen among those which doe so vnhallowe and defile it. And for that cause are we commaunded to be as burning Cressets in the midst of a froward & crooked generation. When wee dwell among the vnbeleeuers and enemies of Gods word, or among such as despise it and make no account of it: then in stead of our accustomed seeking of vaine excuses, with, I would faine serue God, but there are so many corruptions, that I must needs howle among woolues as they say: then (say I) is the time for vs to streyne our selues so much the more, and to enforce our selues to sanctifie y<sup>e</sup> name of God. And where? Euen in y<sup>e</sup> midst of those among whom we be conuerfant. That is y<sup>e</sup> thing which is shewed vs in this place.

True it is that Moses was most bound thereto, because God had chosen him about the rest. Yet neuertheless it behoued euery other man also to streine himselfe thereunto. And let vs vnderstand, that seeing hee taketh vs for his children, wee ought at the least to maintain his honor as much as wee would doe the honor of our earthly fathers. And for that cause it is sayd, that he and Aaron had transgressed. Whereby we see, that men may well acquit themselves, and besprinkle themselves with holywater as they say, but yet must they passe by the sentence which God hath pronounced; for only he is the competent Iudge. Although then y<sup>e</sup> Moses was not ware that he had offended, and although also y<sup>e</sup> wee cannot discouer his offence; yet doeth our Lord say y<sup>e</sup> he had offended, so as it was not ynough for him not to haue done any euill deede, nor to haue abstained from murmuring, nor also to haue withheld his consent from the murmurings of the people: but he was a transgressor in that he was too cowardly & had not y<sup>e</sup> foresayd inuincible courage that I spake of, to set himselfe against the mischiefe, and to stoppe it as he ought to haue done.

Nowe for a conclusion we haue yet to marke this saying which is added: Thou shalt not goe in shether, but thou shalt see it, euen the land which I giue to the children of Israell to possesse. For here Moses had occasion to bee further out of patience, whē our Lord exempted him alone, saying, All y<sup>e</sup> rest of this people shall inioy y<sup>e</sup> land, but thou shalt bee set beside it. If we be driuen to indure any common aduersitie, we make y<sup>e</sup> lighter of it. But if a man be cut off alone, & see that God leueleth at none but him; y<sup>e</sup> is much harder and heauier. And at the same point was Moses. But it was Gods will to trye his obedience and subiection. Also hee meant to set vs a faire lookingglasse before our eyes, to the intent we should not be prouoked to rebel, though hee deale more roughly with vs than with our fellows and neighbors. For we be wont alwayes to alledge; How now? Haue I offended more than others? I see God dealeth full roughly with me; and yet there are others which are no better than I: and what fault findeth he in me? Such complaints shall a man oftentimes heare. But it is not for vs to looke how God handleth others. Let vs content our selues that he knoweth what is meete for vs; and let euery of vs beare his owne burden patiently, and not fall to vsing of such replies: for we shall win nothing thereby. Thus ye see what is set downe here in the person of Moses, in that he was faine to bee banished out of y<sup>e</sup> land, when all the children of Israell and all the rest of the people went in; among whom neuertheless there were many despisers of God, and many hypocrites, to bee short, they were as a clowepatched together of many peeces. Yet notwithstanding, as in respect of possessing the land, they were to be preferred before Moses. And therefore let vs vnderstand, that when God hath once made vs to enter into the way of saluation, it is not enough for vs except wee attaine vnto it, and that for the bringing thereof to passe, we hold out to the end.

I haue told you heretofore, that the land of Canaan was as a common Pawne which GOD gaue to all the children of Israell, of his calling of them to the inheritance of the heauely kingdom, namely to as many as entered into the land, that is to say, to those which were newe sprong vp in y<sup>e</sup> wilder nesse. For as for those which came out of Egypt, none of them all but onely two, did enter into y<sup>e</sup> land of Canaan. But those which were then litle children, as it were about a foure or fīue yeeres old, all those entered in. Neuertheless there were many of them which serued not GOD faithfully, but played the nauighripackes and backsliders. Whereby we be done to vnderstand, that seeing God hath once reached vs his hand, it behooueth vs to līue in such sorte, as we quaille not ne turne not our backs vpon him, but continue still in his obedience, so as faith may euermore reigne in vs, to withdrawe vs from the līstes and cares of this world. And although we haue not the land of Canaan at this day for a visible signe: let vs resort to our Lord Iesus Christ, who is much more woorth without all comparison, than the outward inheritance which was giuen to the people of olde time. And seeing we be entered into the trace of Iesus Christ, that is to say, be put as it were into his body, and he accounteth vs as of his flocke, and is become our shepherd: let vs looke that we bechaue our selues to wardes him as sheepe, hearkening to his voyce, and following him whither soeuer he calleth vs. And in y<sup>e</sup> meane while let vs pray this good God, to holde vs so vnited to him in the person of his onely Sonne, as wee may continually hold out to the end in all holynesse and all goodnes, and that at the last wee may be gathered vp by him, inor as children of Adam in the generall curse, but [as children of Abraham] in the promise of saluation which was made to vs in our Lord Iesus Christ.

Now let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God, praying him to make vs feele our faultes and offences more and more, and that for the more mislikyng of them, wee may exercise our selues continually in calling them to our remembrance, and in mourning for them, so as hee may haue pitie vpon vs, and not onely forgive vs all our sinnes, whereby wee haue offended him, but also rid vs cleane of them, and redresse vs in such wise by his holy spirite, as our whole seeking may be to dedicate our selues vnto him, and that his name may be so sanctified among vs, as that in the end wee may come to his glorie as he hath prepared it for all such as doe here yeeld and submit themselves to his yoke. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

The CXC1. Sermon which is the first vpon the three & thirtieth Chapter.

Here followeth the blessing wherewith Moses the man of God blessed the children of Israel before his death, and sayde:

2 The Lorde came from Sinai, and rose vp from Seir vnto them. He appeared brightly on mount Pharan, and came with ten thousands of Sainctes, hauing at his right hand the Lawe giuen in fire for them.

3 Yet loueth he the people, and all the Sainctes are in thy hands, and they bow downe to thy feete to receiue of thy wordes.

Ee knowe that Gods word is ordaind chiefly to this vsc, that we should be assured of y good wil & loue which he beareth vs. For without that also there is no hope of saluation, wee be vndone, and to be shorte, there is no religion. For how shall we feare God, vnlesse wee knowe that all our welfare lies in him, and that we dare seeke him with a right faith? But that is vnpossible, vnlesse he call vs vnto him, and that wee haue assurance that if wee come vnto him we shall be receiued. That is the cause why God in all ages ordained, that those which are the teachers of the people, should blesse them in his name, that is to say, assure them that God receiued them and was mercifull to them. For so dooth y worde Blesing import. True it is that wee blesse one another by prayer. And when it is sayd of a priuate person, that he blesseth his neighbor; it betokeneth that he wisheth him all good. But there is a speciall kinde of prerogative in those whom God hath appointed as in his owne person to beare abroad his worde and to preach it. For they in blesing are as witnesses of God and agentes in his behalfe. And in very deede (as we haue seene heretofore) as oft as Gods word is preached, it is a solemne act whereby he covenanteth with vs. and lyke as he will haue vs to professe our selues to be his children, and to giue our selues to his seruice; so dooth hee bind himselfe to be our father and saour. That is the cause why we haue now here y blesinges of Moses, which he made before his death. And it is lykely that this was the done when he was ready to yeelde vp his spirit vnto God. For he had bin commaunded afore to go vp into the mountaine, where he had nothing else to doe but to go seeke his graue, which notwithstanding remained vnknown, as we shall see hereafter. At such time as he was to take his leaue of the people, he pronounced these blesinges here present. By what authoritie? As one appointed to yeelde record of Gods good wil. Also he ratified that which, had bin done before by Iacob, to whome God had giuen the lyke charge & commission. For wee reade of the blesinges which Iacob made ouer his children, how they were not as a household prayer when a father making his last will beseecheth God to be mercifull to his fatherles children; Iacob went not that way to worke; but being a Patriarke, and knowing whereto God had called him, hee vttered what was to come, accordingly also as wee see how hee speaketh by the spirit of Prophecie. And in good sooth, yee see he was a poore man, such a one as was constreyned by famine to goe into Egypt; he possessed not a foot of land in y whole world, and yet hee assigned inheritances to his children. Thou shalt haue such a portion by the sea-coast; Thou shalt haue the pasture grounds; Thou shalt haue a delicate soyle for kinges; so as y bread which shall be made there, and y sweete fruits of thee shall be their strength; thou shalt haue y royall scepter; thou shalt be aduanced, & thou shalt reigne among thine enemies; As for thee, thou shalt be scatterd, but yet shalt thou haue ease of body, although thou be faine to remove here and there. Seeing then that hee tooke order after that maner for the land of Canaan, that although he was driuen thence by famine, yet he allotted it out by portions to his children: spake he as a mortall man? Let vs knowethen that God gouerned him by his holy spirit, and there came not that worde out of his mouth, which was not as a heauenly oracle. Now hereby the people were edifyed, so as they knew that God had chosen them with condition that they should enter into the inheritance which he had promised them. When the children of Israell were in Egypt after the deceafe of their father, they were by this means certified y God had not forgotten his promise, but that hee woulde performe it when the tyme came. They were fed with y hope; and to hold them thereunto, God had giuen the occasion enough, if their own vnthankfulnes had not letted the. This being done, after that they had bin deliuered out of the land of Egypt, and were to inioy the Land which had bin assigned them long afore: God made Moses to speake, and draue him to vtter that which he had determined to doe as touching the childre of Israell. And in veric deede, wee see that the things which had bin spoken afore by Iacob, are partly rehearsed here againe for the larger confirmation of them. And againe, the things which were not reuealed at that time, are set downe here; so as the people of Israell might here behold their owne state to come, whereby they were taught that God had a speciall care of the. For seeing hee declared, first by the mouth of Iacob, and secondly by the mouth of Moses, all that hee meant to doe to the people of Israell: did hee not shewe that hee was nere them, and that hee rooke them to bee as of his flocke, and that hee preferred them before the rest of the whole worlde? For it was not with them as with those which are straungers to God. Although hee held and accounted those for his creatures; yet did hee not take them for his Children, to gouerne them and to direct all their steppes; so as nothing shoulde befall them but they might know howe it was God that wrought it, who did also tell them of it aforehande. Therefore let vs wel remeōer what is conteyned here, as things that proceeded not from a mortall creature, but from God, who witnessed that he was the father and defendour of his church.

Nowe this concerneth vs. For although wee haue not the like propheties; yet hath God declared vnto vs, that we be euer vnder his charge, and that he watcheth for our welfare. And wee for our part haue no neede to bee trayned on in knowledge by such meanes, because God hath brought vs alreadye to an other manner of perfection. Therefore let vs holde vs contented with the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ, in whose person the thing is performed which was hoped for vnder the lawe. And therewithall let vs bee fullie resoluēd that G O D guideth our steppes, and that euen in the midst of all the disorders and troubles which are seene in the worlde, his Church is still deare and pretious vnto him. And in good sooth wee see that before Iesus Christ came into the worlde, Daniell discovered all the chaunges which shoulde bee made, because it might elie haue seemed, that God had gone from his couenaunt a hundred times within the space of foure hundred yeares, and that all shoulde haue gone in such wise to wrecke, as if God had forsaken that people, and been minded to haue no more to do with them. It was requisite therefore that these things should bee foretolde, that the faithfull might knowe that although they were shaken and tossed to and fro; yet were they still in the hande of God; and that when they sawe the kingdomes chaunged rounde about them, and the worlde so turned vpside downe as a man coulde not discernie anie thing in it; yet they shoulde alwayes be assured of that which God had promised them, namely of his sending of his sonne to redeeme them, and y they should by that meanes be restored, euen after y vtter desolation of all things among them. Thus see wee now the vse of this Song.

Now whereas it is saide That it was Moses the man of God that blessed the children of Israell: that title was giuen to Moses as in respect that hee was the instrument of the holie Ghost. Then speake hee not of his owne motion, there is no anie thing spoken here after the fleshe, but as proceeding from a man of God. And hereby wee be the better taught, to embrace the record that is giuen vs here, as if God protested with his owne mouth that hee had a care of his people, and that he would euermore continue his goodnesse and gracious fauour towards them. For indeed there was a blessing made by the Priests in the time of the lawe, according to this saying, Blesse yee, you that bee of the house of the Lorde. And it is the same thing which is written in the sixth Chapter of the booke of Numbers [ where it is saide ] that they which doe sacrifice to G O D, shall blesse the people in his name. And truly, where the Priests and the tribe of Leuie are spoken of, this also is added, To whom the Lorde hath giuen the charge of blessing the people. And this thing is not abolished at this day. For our Lorde Iesus Christ had in his person the things that were figured in olde time vnder the Lawe. Let vs knowe then that nowadayes there is one euermore lasting blessing of God, which is much better witnessed vnto vs, than all the blessings that were so often repeated vnder the law; in somuch that as nowe God telleth vs by his onely sonne that hee raketh vs into his fauour, and that wee be as his children, and that the preaching of the Gospell serueth vs to that ende, and wee must applye it to that vse. So then, whensoever wee come to heare the worde of God, let vs call to minde howe our Lorde Iesus Christ at his going vp into heauen, did lift vp his handes ouer his disciples and blesse them as is reported by Saint Luke. And that was done to make vs knowe what his office is, and to doe vs to vnderstande that at this day, when the Gospell is preached in his name, it is all one as if hee shoulde say, Beholde, my father accepteth you, you be in his fauour. Nowe then, seeing we haue this, ought it not to make vs to loue the Gospell, considering that therein wee be blessed by the mouth of our Lorde Iesus Christ, as in whose name and by whose authoritie that doctrine is created of? Let vs vnderstande therefore, that if it behoued the fathers vnder the Lawe to be contented with the blessing that was giuen them by Moses, by the Priests, and by Iacob: if wee nowadayes be faithlesse, and admit not the recorde with full certaintie which is giuen vs in the Gospell; wee be worse than vexcusable, because wee deface the truth of Gods sonne, and (as much as in vs lyeth) accuse him of lying, as though hee were not a sure and infallible witness of the will of G O D his father. And when wee compare Moses who is called a man of God, with our Lord Iesus Christ who hath y whole souerainie of Gods house, as the Apostle saith: wee may bee yet the better assured that he hath blessed vs at this day, and that he vttereth vnto vs the loue of God his father; and therefore let our faith be so much the better certified, seeing it behoued this title of Moses to content the people of olde time.

Nowe it is added, That he did it a little before his death. The worde which he vseth, is as much to say, as hee did it before his death. So then, by these wordes, Before his death, is not meant a yeare or two, nor yet a moneth, but at his death time; euen when hee was to die. And these blessinges are therefore of so much the more authoritie. For wee knowe that when a man maketh his last will, it shall bee better receyued than the things which he spake during his life. Although then y Moses setued God as a Prophet and teacher all his life long, and had discharged his duetie faithfully: yet neuertheless his minde was to vtter these blessinges at the time of his death, to the ende they should be the better receiued, and men consider thus: Beholde Moses being readie to departe out of the world, hath told vs of the things that are to come: hee hath not doone it at aladuenture nor vnadvisedly; but hee hath fully and wholly performed that which was inioyned him. To the intent therefore that the people shoulde receiue those blessinges the better; this circumstance is expressly added, That he did it at the houre of his death. But wo at this day haue a farre better and more excellent confirmation, in that we be blessed by the mouth of our Lorde Iesus Christ. For he hath not onely doone it at his death, but also hath sealed Gods fatherly loue and adoption towards vs; I say sealed them with his precious bloude, and also with his rising againe from the dead. Seeing then that our Lord Iesus Christ hath blessed his disciples, to the end we should know that his office is to do the same to vs; and that his Church shall be blessed by his power euen to the worlds end, and that he hath done it by ratifying it with his owne death and passion, and by his rising againe to get vs victorie against the duell, to the intent that all the cursednesse which we take as it were by inheritance by reason of our father Adam, shoulde be abolished: seeing that our Lorde Iesus Christ hath so ratified all things: let vs learne to magnifie the fatherly goodness of our God so much the more; and seeing he hath told vs that we shal be blessed, let vs be the better assured thereof by all these circumstances.

And because it behoued the people of olde time to knowe that Moses spake not in his owne person but by the authoritie of God: he addeth, God came from Synai; his coming forth was from Seir; hee shewed himselfe vpon Mount Pharan. Here Moses setteth Gods presence before the eyes of the people, after the same maner that it had bin knowne vpon Mount Sinay, at the time of the publishing of the law. For he speaketh not of the Wonders which had bene wrought in Egypt, neither speaketh he of y Miracles that had bin wrought by the space of fortie yeares in the wilderness: but his meaning is to bring them backe againe to the Law, to make them stay and rest there. For surely when the doctrine thereof slipeth from vs, all Gods miracles will doe vs no good. We may well muse vpon him; but all shall be but confused imagination, so as euerie of vs shal turne away to superstition and Idolatric. To be short, it will be vnpossible to be truly vnited vnto God, and to sticke vnto him stedfastlie, otherwise, than by the bonde of his worde, so as wee be restrained by his teaching of vs, & that we hearken to his talke. And why? For we be full of lying; and therefore it behoueth vs to receiue the truth of him. That is the cause why Moses saith nowe, That God came from Sinay, that he shewed himselfe vpon Mount Pharan, and that for his people, hee came forth from Mount Seir. For mount Pharan and mount Seir were neere to mount Sinay. Therefore hee meaneth one and the selfe same thing: but yet it ser ueth to imprint y woonderfull comming forth, the better in the remembrance of the people, & to make them to thinke continually after what maner God appeared vnto them, and shewed them his maiestie visible. Not that they sawe him in his being, for that is vnpossible: but that they sawe the signes and tokens whereby they knewe howe it was God that caused the lawe to bee set forth by Moses. And indeed we cannot see God as he is, but he sheweth himselfe to vs according to our abilitie and grossenesse. Yet notwithstanding, the people of Israell did easily perceiue at that time, that God was there, and that it was his will to haue the power of his glorie knowne. And truelie we see howe the Prophets made their benefite of this text of Moses. For when they sawe the people variable and statting too and fro, so as they were not sufficiently settled in the true religion: they did euer put them in minde of those signes and wonders which were wrought at the publishing of the lawe. And the Prophet Abacucke doeth in his song expressly borrowe these wordes of Moses. For he saith that God came from mount Theman, and appeared vpon mount Pharan. No doubt but hee had respect to that which Moses saith here, as though he shoulde haue spoken thus to the people which were then scattered asunder. Yee wretched people, why holde you not yourselues vnder the protectiõ of your God seeing he hath once called you, and shewed himselfe to bee your heade, and woulde haue you to bee his bodie: Ye haue seene him vpon mount Pharan, that is to say, vpon mount Sinay. There his glorie shone forth in such wise, as yee could not but know that he hath authorized the lawe, and made a cõuenaunt with you to knit you vnto himselfe. And why then shoulde yee now start away, and become as members rent a sunder?

Nowe seeing that the Prophets vsed this doctrine after that maner; it ought well to serue to reach vs likewise nowadayes. Therefore where-as it is said that God came from mount Sinay; let vs vnderstand that seeing he hath approued and authorized his law by the visible signes and miracles which were seene at y time: we at this day ought to receiue the law with like reuerence as if god were before our eyes: & whensoever his word is preached vnto vs, it is all one as if he opened pened his hart, & shewed vs his wil, & that there were mutuall and (as they terme it) interchaungeable communication betwixt vs. The end (say I) whereunto Gods word should serue vs, is that he might common with vs and we with him, yea and that so familiarlie, as if hee came downe to vs because we cannot mount vp to him, so as hee is faine to shewe that his comming foorth is for our sakes. True it is that we shall not see the aire on fire, we shall not see the fire burning on the mountaine, we shall nor heare the thunder roaring nor the trumpets ringing in the aire: but it must suffice vs that those things were once done to the intent that the lawe shoulde haue his authoritie euen to the worldes ende, and that all the miracles which were seene at that time, shoulde be ingraued in the lawe of God. Againe, it ought to suffice vs that God moued both heauen and earth at the publishing of the Gospell: in so much that as then his power was yet better vttered; and moreover his maiestie hath bene seene in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ, whereby hee was proued to be the onely son of God. Seeing that all these things are knowne vnto vs; let not our vnbeleefe keepe vs from receiuing his worde with feare and lowlinesse at this day, which is so well warranted vnto vs. Thus yee see what we haue to gather vpon this text, where it is said that God shewed himselfe from Mount Seir. And truly after the warninges of Moses did once beare sway; the children of Israel did not then any more see the mountaines of Seir, Theman, and Sinay; neither was it lawfull for them to returne into the wilderness; but the remembrance of those things ought to serue their turne for euer. And sothly, it was not enough for those which had seene those things, to be able to speake of them: but it behoued the fathers to teach their children, that they also might vnderstand that G O D had appeared vnto them, and that by that meanes the law might alwayes be ratified. Sith it is so, let vs vnderstande that we also at this day ought to occupie our selues in the minding of the same things.

Nowe it is sayde expressly, That Gods comming foorth is for the People. This serueth to expresse the mutuall communion whereof I haue spoken. For it is not enough for God to shewe himselfe or to come foorth: but his comming foorth must be for vs; that is to say, to make vs to knowe that hee calleth vs vnto him, and that it is his will to be knit vnto vs in mutual bonde. And that ought well to touch vs yet further. For the worde which is giuen vnto vs, serueth not onely to make vs vnderstande that there is a G O D in heauen, and that hee hath the fouercintie ouer all his creatures: but also is a pledge that hee will dwell with vs. And forasmuch as God is inuisible, so as wee comprehend not any thing of him, because it is too high and hidden a thing: when wee haue his worde, wee may beholde him there as in his huelle image, and see him as hee sheweth himselfe. And therefore let vs learne; that when our Lorde sendeth vs his word, hee not onely intendeth to aduance his maiestie, but also doeth verily renewe his couenaunt to the intent that wee also on our side might approche vnto him. And thereby wee be doone to vnderstande that if wee endeouour to profite in Gods worde, wee will come vnto it with a right meaning and pure minde, so that when God sheweth himselfe, we must not be afraide as the Papistes are, which thinke it to be too darke a thing. Such doubtles must not keepe vs from profiting in the schoole of our God, assuring our selues y he for his part will not fayle vs, but that hee will make vs to perceiue y he speaketh not in vaine, but in such wise as we may know y hee is neere vs, and that his countenance shall shine vpon vs. It is said, That he appeared with ten thousand of saintes.

Some haue taken this for the children of Israel as that God came thither with them. And they call them Saintes, because God had shouled them out to himselfe, notwithstanding that the greater number of them was wicked and vnholie. But there is no reason in that, that so great a multitude as seuen hundred thousande men or there aboutes, shoulde be termed ten thousande. No doubt therefore but Moses speaketh here of Angels. And truly when the holy scripture intendeth to set Gods maiestie before our eyes; it doth alwayes ad y he is garded with his heauenly hostes, and y he hath his angels with him, which are thousandes of thousandes. For wee must not stand altogether vpon the certaine number, because y scripture speaketh sparsely of the things that are inuisible. And so a number certaine shall be put for an infinite number, as if it had bin said y God appeared euen with his heauenly Angels which serued to testifie his glory y better. True it is y if the maiestie of God be set single before vs, it ought wel to suffice vs: and in good sooth, can the creatures ad any thing vnto it? No surely: but y is spoken for our infirmities sake. For when God saith, Here am I; it toucheth vs not yet sufficiently, and therefore it behoueth him to set himselfe foorth as in his fouercintie, & to shewe by his angels y he hath a dreadfull dominion, & that he hath his vertues & powers shied foorth euerwhere. For we know y his Angels are created to execute whatsoeuer he hath ordeined; so y they be as his hands, whereby hee worketh and performeth whatsoeuer he listeth. To y end then doth Moses expressly say, y God appeared here, euen with a ten thousand of Saintes. And wee see also how the law was giuen by y hands of Angels, as S. Stephen declareth in y teuenth of the Acts. Likewise when S. Paul in y Epistle to the Galatians, intendeth to shew y God appeared to authorize his law the better; he setteth downe that the Angels were witnesses therunto. Were there then thousand witnesses present at the publishing of the law: What a thing is it then, if me belieue it not, ne receiue it not without gainsaying? If a bargaine be passed before three witnesses, and signed by a Notarie: it is of authoritie, and there is no pleading against it. And how was the lawe giuen? God appeared thereat in his maiestie, yea and Iesus Christ who was the heade of the Angels, was he that gaue y law, as Saint Paul sheweth in the place which I alledged euen now. Looke me vpon Moses on the other side. Hee was glorified after such a sort, as hee seemed not to be anie more of the number of men. God made his face to shine as if there had been well Sunnebeames thereon, so that hee was well seene to be a man sent of God. Againe it skilled not for two or three witnesses: for there were tenn thousand Angels, there was an infinite number, there were Gods armies to maintaine the authoritie of the Lawe. And what account is to be made of men which are but dung, when they will needes deface it, and come to quarrell against it? Howe shall they be conuicted? So then, let vs make all things auaylable to the confirmation of our faith, and let vs assure our selues that in receyuing the doctrine which is conteyned in the law of God, we shall agree with all the Angels of heauen, and they will aunswere Amen to our faith, and be faithful witnesses before God, that we haue not beleueed at aduerture, but that wee haue bin wel grounded. Thus ye see to what purpose this text ought to serue vs. And so we see y<sup>e</sup> Moses had here good cause, to make mention of the infinite multitude of Angels, which were witnesses vnto God at such time as hee shewed himselfe to be the author of the Law.

Now it is added afterwarde, That the Lawe of fire, (or the fire of the lawe) was in his right hand. Wee see here: againe the thing which I haue declared already; namely that al y<sup>e</sup>uer Moses hath spoken concerning the maiestie of God, is done to the ende that the Lawe shoulde not be receyued as a doctrine deuised by Moses; but that wee shoulde consider that God auoweth it, and that hee hath shewed that it proceeded from him. And Moses doeth purposely terme it a law of fire, because the aire was then all on a flame. The burning of the fire then, was as a marke wherewith God sealed his lawe, as though hee had rauished the people, and shewed them that they were not anie more as vpon the earth beneath; but that they were lifted vp above the corruptible things of the worlde. Therefore let vs beare well in minde, that the Lawe is termed Fire, because that by that meanes GOD made the presence of his maiestie the better knownen. And herewithall let vs also marke wel what is saide concerning the nature of the lawe and of the whole worde of God: howe it is a consuming fire. For it must needes be aunswereable to the nature of him from whom it cometh. When the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrewes sheweth vs what the nature of Gods worde is, after hee hath declared that it ransacketh mens heartes, that it sifteth their thoughts and affections, and that it tryeth men to the quick: he saith y<sup>e</sup> there is nothing hidden therefro. And why? For it is Gods will that it shoulde haue as it were his office. Seeing then that our Lorde is termed a consuming fire; let vs note that his worde also must needes be as fire. And that was shewed by a visible token, when it was giuen forth vpon Mount Sinay: and it behooueth vs also to be prepared and readie to receiue the same. Moreover wee must suffer GOD to purge vs and cleanse vs by the fire of his worde; and if we will not suffer our selues to be so purged; surely God will worke after an other fashion towards vs, according to this saying of his by his Prophete Esay, Is not my worde as a consuming fire, and this people as stubble? Let vs mark wel then, that seeing Gods word is called a consuming fire; if we be as stubble or chaffe, wee shall incontinently be consumed thereby. And therefore let vs pray God that wee may be as golde and siluer, that we may abide the firing, and be put to the vse of his owne seruice. Howe soeuer we fare, let vs alwayes marke that the Lawe is not a deade letter, otherw ise than that men do quench it through their vnthankfulnessse: and yet for all that, it is not named a lawe of fire without cause. For it serueth to shew that if wee receiue it not with such reuerence & authoritie as is due vnto it; it shall not fayle to doe the office of fire towards vs, to consume vs. And therefore let vs learne to bowe in such wise vnder the worde of God, and to yeelde such subiection vnto it, as wee may without anie replying, receiue whatsoeuer is conteyned in it, and not open our mouthes but to say Amen, and to giue our consent to all that euer our Lorde appointeth.

Nowe Moses addeth immediately, That GOD loneth the people, and that the Saintes are in his hand. True it is that heere is some change. For, worde for worde it is sayde, Yes notwithstanding God loneth the People. Or, The true God loneth the people. For the word which Moses vseth, importeth both. His Saintes are in thy hands. Here hee altereth the person. For when as he saith, his Saintes; no doubt but hee referreth it vnto God. Therefore hee shoulde say, Are in his hande. But this maner of speaking is rife enough in the scripture, so as we ought not to thinke it strange. The meaning of Moses then is easie enough, namely that albeit God loue all people, yet that his Saintes are in his charge or protection, yea euen those whome hee hath chosen. Vnlesse a man will refer these wordes, the People, to the twelue tribes: but that were harde and constrained, Moses then doeth here compare all men and all the Nations of the earth with the linage of Abraham which God had chosen: as if hee shoulde say, that Gods grace is spreade out euerie where, as wee our selues see, and as the scripture also witnesseth in other places. And not onely men are partakers of this goodnesse of God, and are fed and maintayned by his liberalitie: but he doeth also shew himselfe bountifull euen to the brute beastes. Euen thither doeth his mercie extend according to this saying of the Psalme, Who maketh the fieldes and mountaines to bring forth grasse for the feeding of Cattell, but God who hath a care of them? Seeing then that GOD vouchsafeth to haue so mercifull regarde of the beastes which hee hath created, as to giue them foode; it is much more to be thought that he will be a foster father to men, whom hee hath made and shap ed after his owne image, which 3 They bowe downe to thy feete, to receiue of thy wordes .

4 Moses hath commaunded vs the Lawe for an inheritaunce, vnto the congregation of Iacob.

5 And was as a king among the righteous, when they gathered the heades of the people together, together with the tribes of Israel .

6 Let Ruben liue and not die, and let his people be fewe in number.

7 As touching Iuda he sayde, O Lorde God, hearken to the voyce of Iuda, and bring him in to his people: let his handes suffice him, because thou wilt bee his helpe against his enemies.

Ereretofore Moses had exhorted the people to receiue the Lawe with all obedience: for he hadde sayde that they did cast themfelues downe at Gods feete. And it is a kind of speeche that is verie rise in the Hebrewe tongue, because the man that is a learner sitteth downe at his maisters feete to receiue learning at his hande. Nowe we haue scene howe it behooued the people to bee as it were at Gods feete. To what ende? To heare the wordes of his mouth. And heereby we see that GOD hath the whole fouereintie in his Church, and that although he speake by the mouthes of mortall men, yet doth not that abate any whitte of his right, that men should therefore vsurpe his authoritie, or thrust themfelues into his place; but that they ought to deliuer the things faithfully which they haue receiued of him. To be short, heere it is shewed vs that the Church of God is to be guyded alonely by his worde, and not by the things which men shall haue dreamed and deuised of their owne heades. And heere with all we be also exhorted to obey God, and not to strue against him when he speaketh to vs, but to stoope and to yeelde ourselues wholly to that which he sayeth. At a worde, heere wee bee brought backe from the bondage of men, to the ende that our sayth should not depende vpon this man or y man, but be grounded vpon God. And by the way it is shewed vs, that it is our dutie to humble ourselues vnto God, and to profit vnder his worde and in his schoole, so as wee may suffer our selues to be gouerned by his doctrine.

Nowe heere vpon it followeth, That Moses gaue the Lawe for an inheritaunce to the Congregation of Israel. This serueth to expresse better what worde it is whereof he had made mention. For every man can well ynough graunt that GOD deserueth well to be heard and obeyed; and the wickedest folke in the worlde will magnifie Gods worde; but to the meane while there are very fewe which by their deedes doe shewe themselues throughly willing to doe that which they say. And why? They woulde haue God to come downe from heauen, and to sende vs his Angelles to tell vs his will. But he will trie our fayth after another fashion. True it is that he ratified his Lawe in olde time, and shewed that it came from heauen, and that it was not deuised by men. But nowe hee will haue his Lawe preached vnto vs by meanes of men, and that the same shalbe of as great force, as if hee himselfe were present in his own being and maieestic. As for the Gospell, wee knowe it hath had his confirmation, and that it is not for vs to dout whether it be Gods trueth or no. But now, what are they that bring vs the Gospell? They be mortall creatures, so as this treasure (as sayth Saint Paule) is in brittle vesselles; like as if a man should put a two or three thousande Crownes into a pottle that is not woorth aboute a cupple of pence, euen so is it in that our Lorde will haue the doctrine of saluation which is an inestimable benefite, to be declared vnto vs by men like our selues, which beare no great shoue, nor are of any estimation to the worldewarde: and yet notwithstanding he will haue his worde to be of as great estimation among vs, as if he himselfe were personally present with vs. And for that cause he sayeth, He that heareth you, heareth me, and he that refuseth you, refuseth me. For in that place, our Lorde Iesus Christ ment not to exalt men: but to shewe that Gods worde ought not to be the lesse esteemed, although there bee no man to giue estimation thereto. For we must not haue an eie to the messenger, but to him that sendeth him. So then, we see how Moses hauing spoken of Gods worde, and hauing shewed that they which call themselues faithfull, ought to submit themfelues thereto; addeth, Moses gaue the Lawe, meaning thereby that we neede not to goe to the newfounde Iles to seeke Gods worde, nor to passe ouer the sea (as we haue scene already,) nor to goe downe into the bottoome of the earth; but that Gods worde is in our mouth and in our heart, at leastwise if GOD worke there by his holy spirite. For well might we haue our eares beateu therewith, but our heartes should not be touched at all, vnlesse God gaue force thereto. But when our Lord inlighteneth vs, and maketh vs to feele that it is he that speaketh; then haue we his word in our heart; and againe, we haue it also in our mouth, to confesse it to be the infallible trueth. And if we fet our delight therein, wee shall no more stand in doubt whether it were best for vs to receiue it or not, but wee shall be fully resolu'd thereof. Wherefore let vs learne by this text, that if we will honor God and obey him, and quietly receiue both his lawe and his Gospell when they bee preached vnto vs by the mouths of men: we must not forbear to doe him the honor to submit our selues vnto him, although hee appeare not after a visible maner, ne send vs his Angels from heauen. For it is a true tryall of our faith, when for the honor of him, we forbear not to accept of men which eary nor any great countenance, nor haue any estimation at all. That is the thing which we haue to beare away hie in the first place.

Now immediatly he saith that the lawe belongeth vnto vs, because it serueth for the whole congregation of israel. For we knowe that God hath gathered vs together with the Iewes, and that in the end when they had shut our and banished themselues from the promise of saluation, we succeeded in their place. Seeing it is so, looke what was spoken concerning the children of israel, which were come of the race of Abraham as in respect of the flesh: y same ought to be apply'd vnto vs at this day. And therefore it is no superfluous speech, when it is sayde that the law was giuen. Let vs learne then, y seeing our Lord will haue vs to receiue his word, assuring our selues that it is spoken to vs, and dedicated to vs for the health of our soules, it is not as a seed that is thrown into the ayre; but that God speaketh in such wise, as he sheweth that it is for our profit to be so taught, and that he will so approach vnto vs, as we may be knit vnto him. Now then whereas we haue heard, that folke must cast themselues downe at Gods feete to heare his word: let vs vnderstand y wee be those folke. Sith we know that Gods word lyeth and consisteth in his lawe; let vs assure ourselues that it is the treasure & benefite which God hath prepared for y food and sustenance of his children accordingly also as he speaketh thereof to the woman of Chanaan, where he saith y men must not giue the bread of children vnto dogs. True it is that at y time we were as dogs, y is to say, al the heathen men of y world were reiecte'd. And our Lord Iesus Christ sheweth, y as in respect of our first state, we be no more worthy to be partakers of this benefite; than a dogge is to go to a mans table. None but the children are to take their sustenance and refection there. Howbeit forasmuch as at this day God hath called vs, & we be his true Church & flocke; this bread is therewithal giuen vs for our sustenance. And therefore let vs not suffer Gods word to slip away, whē it is preached vnto vs, but let euery of vs apply it to our vse.

And Moses declareth expressly that it is for an inheritance to the Church of israel, to do the to vnder-

stand y it was not giuen for a time, but to the intent it should be receiued fro age to age, and y al men should giue the thanks to it, so as there might be one content of faith betweene the fathers and the children, accordingly as it is saide thereof in the song of Zacharie, & as the Prophet Malachie also had sayde thereof afore. Let vs marke then, that this worde Inheritance, or Heritage importeth a perpetuities of Gods word, so as it must not be receiued alonely by such as liue at some one time, and afterward be buryed; but the fathers must haue a care to make their children agree thereunto after their decease, that all men may obey God and honor him to the ende. If a man haue goods, he will keepe them with great care for his children; and when he dyeth he is well apayd that he leaueh them not vnprovided for, but that they may haue some inheritance. But in the meane while we consider not which is the principal good thing which ought to be left to those which come after vs: which is that they may be partakers of Gods adoption, and accounted among the company of his children. That is the cause why Moses warneth here y people which had bin duely trayned vp in Gods word, that they serued not for them alonely, but y God bound thū to leaue the same inheritance in possession to their posteritie, and would haue his Lawe to be knowne continually, & that it should abide fro age to age in full force and authoritie for euer. And therefore whēsoeuer we come to a Sermon; let vs vnderstand y our Lord calleth vs to him, to the intent that our childre should be drawn thither with vs. And forasmuch as he of his infinite goodnes receiueth them afore they be borne, and declareth that he will be their father and Sauour, and putteth them aforchand into the aray and company of his, accordingly also as they be baptised in y vertue of that promise: needs must we be worse than vnthankful, if we haue not a care to teach them, whē they come to discretion: and let vs assure our selues that this inheritance is oftē lost through the leawdnes of men, or through their carelesnes and coldnes, so as their childre are depriv'd thereof. We see what is happened to the world. We see the horrible disorder which hath bin euery where, and is yet still in a number of countries, which make great account of themselues, and deme themselves to be of great worthines. If a man should aske the Italians, the Frenchmen, and a great sort of the Almaines, of what worthines they be; they will set so great estimation vpon themselues in their pride, as ye would marvel: and yet are they all banished from the inheritance of God, they are all disherited, they be depriv'd of the foode of saluation which God hath ordain'd for his children. Seeing it is so, let vs see that we be more diligent in keeping this inheritance, & sith our Lord hath put it as a gage into our handes, let euery of vs inforce himselfe to teach the younger sort, that the trueth may be receiued continually from hand to hand, and that GOD may reigne among vs euerslastingly. And to the intent we may haue the more zeale and good will thereto, let vs call to minde that which I haue sayd afore, namely that if wee should compare all the goods in the world, and all the riches that fathers can leaue to their children, with this: they be nothing in comparison of this heauily treasure of Gods auowing of vs to be of his household, and of his declaring that he will dwell among vs, to make vs partakers of his glorie. Seeing then that our Lord assigneth vs so great a good thing; it is reason that he should be preferred before all the things which are to be desired in this world, and which rauish all our wits and willes from vs.

Now he addeth after ward, That he was a king among the vpright dealers; that is to say, in Israell. This sentence is commonly vnderstood concerning Moses, because he was spoken of in the last verse. For he had sayd, Moses gaue vs the Lawe: and now he addeth, he was a king in Israell. But we knowe it was not the custome of Moses to call himselfe king. For the time was not yet come wherein God should haue chosen and ordayned a king to haue preheminance.

1. Sam. 10. 1.

was the first: yea and that was through a rebellion of the people. But God chose Dauid, to the intent that the kingdome should be stablished in his person. And vntill that time, the people were at libertie, and God named himselfe their king, and called the people a royall priesthood. So then, no doubt but that here Moses continueth the matter which hee had begunne already; namely that the people should sit downe at the feete of God to heare his word. He declarerth after what maner wee should sit downe at Gods feete to be his scholers, and that hee may be our maister, and we be taught at his mouth: It is (saith he) by being our king therewithall. Hee sheweth that whereas God abaceth himselfe so farre as to be our teacher: his fo dooing ought not to cause vs to despise him, or to diminish his maiestie: but therewithal he must also be a king.

Let vs beare in minde then, that the doctrine which wee receiue of God, is as the speech of a king, and it behoueth vs to tremble vnder him: so as wee may not onely be as little children y record their lesson vnder a maister; but also that both great and small doe come to heare what God speaketh, and giue eare vnto it with all humilitie, and that his lawes may preuaile and haue their force amongest vs. The thing then in effect which Moses meant in this place, is that hauing shewed that God stoopeth so lowe vnto our meanesse, y he maketh himselfe as a scholemaister, and voutsafeth to haue vs sit at his feet, to the intent we should be familiarly taught at his hand; yet ceaseth he not therefore to be a king, and to keepe still his dominion and degree, so that what excellencie souer bee in men, they must not presume to skorne the doctrine that is preached vnto them, but euen the very kinges of the earth ought all of them to submit themselves to it, and hee as the onely head ought to haue all preheminance and soueraigne dominion ouer vs.

To be short, we haue two things to consider in Gods word, the one is his infinite goodnesse, in that he commeth downe to vs, and becometh familiar with vs, and (as yee would say) dandleth vs, and speaketh to vs as kindly as a nurse woulde speake to her babe. Seeing then that God doth so fashion himselfe to our small capacite; wee ought of right to loue well his worde. But yet therewithall let vs marke also, that hee will not bereaue himselfe of his right, that hee should not continue King for euer, and wee tremble vnder him, and be subiect to his lawes and commandements. Thus the thing which we haue in effect to beare in mind, is that Gods word ought to be as sweete to vs as honie, and as precious as Gold and Siluer, as Dauid speaketh thereof. And he doth expressly name the people of Israell by the terme of vpright persons, as he had done afore; to shewe vpon what condition wee be Gods Church; namely that vprightnesse and Iustice should reigne among vs. For we knowe that God wil not be intangled in our disorders, if we should rush out into any maner of euill; for in so doing it might seeme that wee would driue God farre from vs. So much the more then ought wee to marke well this text, that God was king among the vpright. For it serueth to the end that we should first vnderstand, that if wee obey Gods Lawe, his kingdome flourisheth. And againe, when wee serue him, he maketh vs to be righteous, & certesse, our true righteousnesse dependeth vpon our hearkening vnto God, & ought to be effected thereafter. As for those then which are disobedient to the lawe and the Gospell; doe well shewe that they cannot abyde that GOD should governe them; and that is all one as if they defied him, and would not admit him for their king and Prince. True it is that none of the wicked sort of this worlde will confesse that their intent is to alienate themselves from God after that maner; but yet is it so indeede, and it is not for them to pleade to the contrarie, because the foueraigne Iudge hath giuen definitive sentence thereof. Also let vs marke by the way, that God neuer reigneth among vs, except our conuerfation be conformable to his worde, so as wee forsake all our owne wicked affections to obey him. And therewithall let vs beare in mynde likewise that there will be no righteefnes when euery man wil needs serue God after his owne deuotion as we see y world doeth which museth vpon these pelting sonde toys; insomuch that the Papistes seeme to themselves to be halfe Angels, so long as they haue daunced their common trace, that is to say, haue played the brute beastes. But the very true righteefnes which God alloweth and accepteth, is to suffer our selues to be governed by his hand, & to haue none other leader than his single worde.

He sayeth immediately, in gathering the heads of the people, and the Tribes of Israell together. Heere hee expresseth the con corde which ought to be in Gods Church, euen from the greatest to the least. Whereas hee sayeth in gathering or assembling, hee sheweth that as soone as GOD hath spoken, there ought to be a conformitie and true vnion among vs.

Wee

We must not be at variaunce, one drawing one way and another another; but euery of vs must yeelde & assemble together, that none but God may haue any preheminnce ouer vs, and that we may be gathered together in one, as it were vnder his winges. That then is the gathering together which Moses speaketh of heere. And therefore we may conclude thereupon, that when Gods word is not preached, although mē agree together, yet their agreement is curied, & that is nothing but confusion in it. Will we the be so knit together, as God may allowe of the concord that is among vs? Let him be alwayes our head; let his word be the mean to fashion vs one like an other; let there be no brotherhoode but because there is one father cōmon to vs al, and y we be his children together by one common accord. And herein it is to be seene, that all the fond bragging of the Papists is but smoke & leasing, when they say that they agree among themselves. For it is alwayes to be considered what the bonde is. Now the Papistes agree in all disobedience, so as they must needes bee stubborn in refusing Gods worde, and trample his truth vnder their feete; or else we see that without that there is no access to be had vnto them. Seeing then that their linking in together is but to withdrawe themselves from God: wo worth that vnion. But if we will haue a holy and commendable concord, such as God may allowe of: Let vs begin at this point, namely that we hearken to his voyce, and y we followe it, shewing thereby that we bee his true sheepe, & that we take him for our sheepeheard. And in so doing let vs take him also for our king (as it is sayde in this text,) that he also may take vs for his people and Church; and then we may be bolde to desie all such as behaue themselves after their owne inuentions and fancies.

Nowe therewithall Moses sheweth that there is no man which ought not to submit himselfe to Gods worde, when he sayeth in gathering the heades and all the Tribes together. Heere then is no exception: neither ought y great ones to alleage either their authority or their power: for they be the folke which ought to shewe the way, and which ought by their exaple to induce the meaner people to obedience. Therefore when our Lord speaketh, let the heads be as lowely as the inferior sort, & let them lead the danee and reach their hands to all the residue. For in very deede when the great men and rich men of this worlde, and such as are in any estimation despite Gods worde & set light by it: it is a duble stumblingblocke, because men haue an eye to them, & they be as it were set vp on a hygh stage. The disorder therefore which they make is such, that they must yeelde duble account vnto God, for y they haue bin the cause of the backsliding of many simple & weakē soules. And therefore let vs learn y whensoever God speaketh, those to whō he hath giuen y greater gites of grace, & which haue any dignitie or excellency, must shewe that Gods prouoking of thē to come vnto him is not in vaine, & they must be the first that obey him. And on the other side the rude & vnskillful must not alleage, We be no Clerks, we be no men of great vnderstanding; for it is sayde that all the Tribes of Israell must liken iſe assemble together. Let vs conclude then, y as the great ones must shew the way to the litle ones; so all the people generally and without exception, must submit them selues to God, & al of vs must become his scholers, seeing he vouchsafeth to be our scholmaister; and al of vs must be his people, seeing he doth vs the honor to set his royall seate among vs. That is the effect of the thing which wee haue to remember vpon this place.

But let vs come to the blessings which Moses giueth to the Tribes of Israell. I haue tolde you afore that they be not single prayers, made as by a priuate man: but that forasmuch as God had appointed him to be his députie, he declareth that the state of the Church shalbe alwayes blessed, & that God will haue a care therof. Moses then speaketh heere, not in his owne person, nor of his owne authority; but as one gouerned by the holy Ghost, and as one whom God caused to shewe forth the fatherly care which he would alwayes haue of his Church. To be short, there is nothing heere which ought to be fathered vpon a mortall man: but by the mouth of Moses God sheweth that hee hath not chosen the children of Abraham in vaine, but that hee will continue his goodnesse towards them to the ende, and shew in very deede that they be a people whom he hath adoped to himselfe and dedicated to his owne seruice, and of whom he wilbe the defender. Howbeit, forasmuch as these things shalbe layd forth more at large; I doe but touch them shortly as nowe.

Let vs come to that which is spoken of Ruben. Let Ruben lute, and not dy. We know that Ruben was Iacobs eldest sonne, and ought to haue obreynd the right of the first begotten, and ought to haue had a double portion, and to haue reigned among his brothers: but he was bereft of it by his owne leaudeness. For he committed incest, which was a crime worthy of more than death: he defered to haue beene wyped out of the worlde, and to haue had his name reprochfull for euer. Neuertheless God pardoned him. Yea, but not without chastisement, as we see by the blessing which was giuen him: and he seemeth rather to haue bene accursed. For Iacob his father sayde vnto him, Ruben, thou wast my first borne, the beginning of my force and strength; but thou hast also bene the beginning of my sorrowes. And therefore thou must slippe away like water, and drie vp. For thou diddest loose the title of thy birthright, and committedst incest, which is a horrible crime. Forasmuch therefore as thou hast bene a greefe and sorrowe to me whereas I ought to haue receyued ioye and comfort of thee; thou must be banished and excluded from thy birthright, and from the dignitie which thou shouldst haue had. It shold seeme y Iacob taketh too great displeasure against his eldest son, when he ouerwhelmeth him so with insanie, & thundereth so against him. Howbeit, y is but a temporall correction. For notwithstanding this, yet he continueth still a Patriarke. And soothly it is a great honor, that a detestable villain having broken the whole order of nature, yea and committed aduoutrie with his own fathers wife, did yet for all y<sup>e</sup>, liue still vpon the earth. But God maketh him a Patriark in his Church, & he wil haue his name holy & his posteritie holy. Lo here a wonderful mercifulnes of God. Yet must he be faine to humble himselfe, & haue his fault knownen, y<sup>e</sup> hee may no more flatter himselfe. That is the cause why Iacob speaketh so roughly, and (as ye would say) thundereth against him being his eldest sonne as I sayd afore. Now the comfort which Moses setteth downe here, may seeme strange, as why he should say, Let Ruben liue and not dye. It was to the end that the tribe of Ruben, (that is to say, the people which came of him, for there were at that time a great number of heades of howses, as it were about a fiftie thousand men,) should thinke with theselues, we bee after a fort cut off frō gods house. For inasmuch as our father was after a fort banished & bereft of his byrthright, and wee be succeeded in his place; what is our inheritance now but vtter infamie? Thus ye see how y<sup>e</sup> Rubenites, (that is to say the people y<sup>e</sup> came of Rubens line,) might haue bin ashamed, if they had not bin vpheld, by putting their trust in God, to serue him with a pure and freehearted affection, or if their heartes had failed them so as they had not still embraced the promise of saluation which had bin made vnto them, and knowne themselves to be the children of Abraham, a linage which God had accepted and separated from the rest of the world. It behoued the Rubenites to haue that. And for that cause it is sayd, Let Ruben liue & not dye: as if Moses had sayd, true it is y<sup>e</sup> Ruben deserued to haue his lyfe thrust downe to the bottom of hell; but yet shall he liue; for his fault is forgiven; and God hath giuen him lyfe, & that not such a common lyfe as all the sonnes of Adam haue, but Ruben shall liue in the Church of God, he shall haue place among the Patriarkes, & the people which shall come of him shall be a member of Gods Church, and of the number of those people whom he hath chosen and sanctified. Thus then wee see now the meaning of Moses.

And here we be taught, that it ought to suffice vs when our Lord taketh vs to mercie, to serue vs to be of his people. When we haue offended him, so as we delerue to be cast off, & to be vtterly disclaymed at his hand: it ought well to suffice vs if wee may but haue a place still in his Church, & be taken & admitted for his childre. Moreover, if we be chastized for our faults, let vs take it in good worth & beare it patiently, & let vs not doe as they doe which grudge & grinde their teeth when God chastizeth the, & thinke they haue great wrong if they be not dāddled, when they haue more neede to be handled roughly. Let vs then beare all y<sup>e</sup> temporal correctiōs which God sendeth vs, with such mildnes & meeknes, as it may suffice vs to be cōforted, in y<sup>e</sup> he dooth not rase vs out of the register of lyfe, but are accounted still among his childre. Doth God then smite some with sicknesse, some with pouertie, and some after some other sortes, so as they pine away in this world, & wote not where to become? Well let all this bee easie for vs to beare, so long as we haue stil wherewith to sweeten our sorrowe: that is, when God sheweth vs y<sup>e</sup> notwithstanding our imperfections & miseries, yet he ceaseth not to be our father still. So long as we haue that; let vs ouergo all the temptations in the world. Well, I must bee heare as a wretched creature, skorned, an outcast of the world, shamed & despised; I shall see no end nor measure of miseries; but what for all this? Yet is it enough for me so I bee auowed for the childe of God. Thus ye see what we haue to gather vpon this place, when God doth continually put vs in minde of our desertes, and toucheth vs with the, & maketh vs to feeble them by prooffe and experience: For whereas he sayth: Let Ruben liue and not dye: it is to shewe them what he were worthie of, & that it was needefull in dede that God should haue pitie vpon him; inso much y<sup>e</sup> if he had listied to haue vsed rigor, hee deserued to haue bin vtterly rooted out. That then is the first poynt which wee haue to remember vpon this place.

Moses addeth, let his people be fewe in number. In dede a man might here repeat the former saying thus, let him not dye & let not his people be fewe in number. But that were constrained & forced. The naturall sense then is, that the Rubenites should be small in number: not that they should not be a great multitude of folke; for (as I tolde you afore) they were fise and fortie Thousand men besides women & children: and that is an incredible multitude to come of one man alone. But Moses meaneth small in number, because Ruben & all his offspring, which ought to haue had preheminence ouer all the children of Abraham, was basely & slenderly esteemed, and placed in a very lowe degree. Therefore it is all one as if he had sayd, Although Ruben be not restored to his honor, but doeth still beare the marke of his reproch, and is faine to holde himselfe among the common aray of the children of Israell, and to be subiect to his brother Iuda; & to yeelde reuerence to him as to his superior: yet notwithstanding, let him liue. To be shorte, Moses confirmeth that which I haue declared already, that is to wit, that although Ruben was put from his byrthright because of his wicked doings, and so became vnworthy of the honor which had bin done vnto him: yet notwithstanding his linage ought not therefore to bee dismaid, but rather take consist in that God held them still in the number of his people. And although they be not Capteines, ne haue y<sup>e</sup> kingdom in their trybe: yet ought they not therefore to fret & repine, but rather to abide in their degree, & to be glad that they haue God still to their father, & to set their whole felicitie & ioy there: & in the meane season to beare the correction patiently which God sendeth them as a medicine, and to make their benefite thereof. And moreouer they ought not to bee out of hope hope, as though God had disclaymed them; but assure themselves that they were still reteyned for the lineage of Abraham, which was blessed & had the promise of euerlasting saluation.

Immediately after hee setteth downe concerning Iuda, Les is be shus vnto Iuda, saith he. And he saith, Lord heare the voyce of Iuda. Moses magnifieth not the tribe of Iuda so greatly heere, as he did in Genesis in the person of Iacob. For there he is likened to a lyon whom no man daereth waken vp. And againe he saith he shal be Lorde of all his brethren, so as all of them must stoope vnto him, and bowe their knees to him: and finally that the scepter shall not depart from his house, nor the Lawgiuer frō betweene his knees, vntill God haue sent the Redeemer whom he had promised. Seing that these things were spoken of the tribe of Iuda; it is maruaile that Moses speaketh so shortly of them heere. And againe, hee maketh no mention of the fruitfulness which God promised him: As that his teeth should be whyted with milke, that is to say, that he shoulde haue good and fat grasinggrounde, so as hee might drinke milke his belly ful; that his eyes shoulde be red with wine, that is to say, that he should haue goodly vineyardes. Heereby he meant to shew, what should become of the tribe of Iuda, and of all his people. And why then doth Moses speake heere so sparsely thereof? It behooueth vs to marke, that by the blessings which Moses vttereth heere, hee meant not to deface the remembrance of the things which he had written afore concerning the state of Iuda, in the testament or last will of Iacob: but to make as it were a Codicill vnto it, as men terme that which is added to a last will that is made afore. And when there is such a Codicill, it serueth not to impeach the former last will, nor yet to burie it so as it should not be knowen. For it is but an appendant, and the Codicill it selfe were nothing worth without the will, and that it were added to it. Truly a man may well make a will alone by it selfe: but as for the Codicill, it is but as a thing belonging thereto or as a short matter that is added to the will. After that manner doeth Moses deale heere. For hauing set downe there the last will of Iacob, as an authentick matter, and such as ought to haue his full force and effect: nowe for the larger confirmation thereof, hee addeth this comfort which we haue seene concerning Ruben, and the comfort which wee shall see to morrow concerning Leui and such like. Nowe his speaking of the tribe of Iuda, is to confirme the thing which had bene spoken afore by the mouth of Iacob. True it is that they be two fundrie persons which speake: but yet is all done in the name of God, and by his authoritie. Iacob was not a priuate person when he blessed his children: but he was Gods deputie. As much is to be saide of Moses. Therefore hee represented alwayes the person of God, who declareth that he hath chosen his people, and will maintaine them to the end, and haue a fatherly care of them. To be short, this shornes serueth not to abate the dignitie that was giuen to the tribe of Iuda: but to continue the thing which he had said afore, to the intent we should knowe that God ment not to disappoint Iuda of the promise which he had made vnto him, but that it shoulde bee performed in his children. And therefore hee saith, Lord heare the voyce of Iuda.

Heereby Moses sheweth, that the tribe of Iuda shoulde not attaine to the kingdome without impediment. True it is that Iacob had said, that the scepter shoulde not depart from the tribe of Iuda. And where is this king? Yee see that the tribe of Iuda surmounted all the rest of the tribes at such time as God deliuered his people out of the lande of Egypt. It is true that Nahasson had the preheminece, when the offerings were made in the sanctuarie. It is true that when God distributed his host among the fower captaines of his people, Iuda was the foremost. Howbeit, that was but a very darke shadowe, he had neither kingdome nor principallie. It should seeme then that the things which are spoken here concerning the scepter and the kingdome, are to no purpose. For those things were not yet seene. Againe, let vs consider what happened to the people after the decease of Moses. Iosua ruled them, and the Iudges succeeded him. The came Saul of the tribe of Benjamin, who was made king. And what shall become of Iuda? The things that Iacob had spoken seemed to be but a iest. And yet it is God that saide that the kingdome should come from thence. Nowe Moses sheweth beere, that Iuda must bee faine to call vpon God, that is to say that the tribe of Iuda must sigh and grone and indure much hardnesse, ere it attained to the degree of honour, and vnto the things which God had promised them. Wee see then that things shall not [alwayes] come to passe out of hande, immediately after that God hath promised them. Beholde, Iacob appointeth Iuda to haue the birthing in his house, by reason whereof hee hath the right of the first begotten ouer all his brethren, and it seemeth that all should bee subiect to him. And yet for a time there was no whit of it seene, but rather Iacob seemed to haue doted, and that these things serued to no purpose. Afterward at the end of fower hundred yeares or thereabouts, (for there were not full fower hundred yeares,) came Moses. But at the end of three hundred and fiftie yeares or thereabouts he came and said, Iuda, pray to God, hee will heare thy voyce, and herken vnto thee. As if he should say, My friendes, ye haue a promise of the kingdome in the tribe of Iuda, and trouble not your selues though it be not performed presently before your eyes, but tarie till God worke, and he in the end will performe that which he hath promised. Be of good hope therefore and possesse the kingdome now by faith, vntill God shewe openly by the effect, that it was hee that spake by the mouth of your father Iacob. Thus we see now in effect, what the meaning of Moses was. The residue we must referre vntill to morrow.

Nowe let vs kneele downe before the maie-stie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to forbear to haue respect of the multitude and greatnes of them, & but onely to correct them by his holy spirit, and so to increase his strength in vs from day to day as we may fight against all temptations, and be reformed in such wise to his obedience, as nothing may let him to reigne as king ouer vs, nor vs to doe him homage by dedicating our selues to him in all iustice, holinesse, and righte-ouesnesse, but that they may bee the true marke whereby we may be known to be his children, and that we may seele him to reigne among vs, and we more and more finde fauour in his promises; so as we may be drawn to the kingdome of heauen, and drawn away from this world, and not helde backe to it any more as wee haue benee too much afore. ## On Tewsdai the last day of Iune, 1556.

The CXCIII. Sermon, which is the third vpon the xxxiiij. Chapter.

7 As touching Iuda, O Lord God, &c.

8 Also hee saide of Leui, Thy Thumim and Vrim belong to him towardes whom thou diddest shewe thy selfe gracious, whom thou diddest trie in Massa, where ye had debate for the waters of strife.

Tolde you yesterday that the things which are contained in Genesis as touching the blessing of Iuda, are comprehended briefly heere. For where as

Moses desireth that Iuda may be hearde, it is to the end hee should obtaine that which had benee promised vnto him, that is to wit, the setting vp of the kingdome there, accordingly also as he sheweth in that he saith, that he should be the leader of his people. For it belonged to none but the tribe of Iuda, to haue the people vnder them and at their guiding. We see then in effect, that Moses meant heere to confirme that which had benee spoken by the mouth of the Patriarke Iacob, to the end that God might be known to be stedfast in his worde. The kingdome was promised vnto Iuda, & that was a matter of great importance: for not onely the state of the people was ground- ed thereupon, but also the saluation of the whole worlde depended vpon the same. To what end was it Gods will to stablish the four- reintie in the tribe of Iuda, beginning it in the person of Dauid and continuing it in his house, but that the Redeemer of the worlde should come from thence? And that kingdome was to continue for euer, as it is said in the Psalme, that the Sunne and Moone shalbe good and faith- full witnesses thereof in heauen. Seeing it is so, it was very requisite that this promise should be certain, that it might be helde vnfalible of all the faithfull. Yet notwithstanding there passed a long time wherein the tribe of Iuda was mingled with the rest of the people, without ha- uing any authoritie. It was not perceiued what was the meaning of the things that had benee spoken, and therefore they might haue benee esteemed as a vaine thing. And therefore Mo- ses addeth now the confirmatiō thereof which is set downe heere, saying that in the end God would heare the voyce of Iuda, and that by that meanes he should haue the leading of his people, and obtaine the royall mace which had benee assign- ed vnto him.

Heere wee see how our Lorde exerciseth the faith of his children, in that he doth not out of hande performe the things which he had prom- ised them. And this thing ought specially to be applied to the reigne of our Lorde Iesus Christ. God had declared aforehande, that the Redemption of the worlde should be wrought by one that was to come of the tribe of Iuda. And yet hee deferreth and delayeth it so long, that it seemed to bee bur vaine to look for it. And why? Of purpose to trie the patience of them that hoped for him. Let vs learne then that to bee settled vpon our Lorde Iesus Christ, and to be well assured of the saluation which he hath purchased for vs; wee must not onely be- lieue the things that are tolde vs concerning the Gospel; but we must also euen linger in pa- tience, till God performe the things which we see not at the first sight. And we must not bee so hastie as to start away, when our Lorde answer- eth not our desires. If God passe ouer a day or a yeare, so as we perceiue not that he is minded to put the thing in execution which hee hath spoken, yet is it not for vs to giue ouer, but we must in the meane season pray, & not doubt but y<sup>e</sup> he heareth our voyce. We shall see oftentimes, that y<sup>e</sup> kingdome of our Lord Iesus Christ shall seeme to be abolished out of y<sup>e</sup> world. And euen at this day, although the Gospel be preached in some places; yet we see the power of the ene- mies to be such as is able to ouerwhelme it vt- terly. Wee see so little order as is pitie. As for vs which say we haue received the pure doctrine; we be yet farre off from hauing such policie & perfection among vs as were requisite. To be short, we heare of nothing but disorder; which might make vs to enuile; were it not that with calling vpon God we did patiently awayt that he will in the end set vp the kingdō of his sonne and maintaine it, though it seeme as now to be put out of order, and men see it not flourish and prosper. Were it not for that, surely a man would iudge that all Gods promises were vaine. It is not without cause then, that Moses speaketh here expressly of Iudaes prayers and supplications: as if he should say, that all they which belong to the kingdome of our Lord Iesus Christ ought to exercise themselves in calling vpon God, that he suffer not his kingdome wherein lyeth all our happinesse and welfare, to go to decay, and to fall to ruine; but rather that he set it vp, and preserve it, and defend it. And therewithall let vs assure our selues that we shall not lose our time, nor finde God deafe to our requests, so we resort to him for refuge, as we be warned to doe. To be short, this text declareth vnto vs, that the kingdome of our Lord Iesus Christ shall be stablished by miracle, and after a strange maner incomprehensible to the worlde; and that God will worke after such a fashion in that behalfe, that we shall knowe it to be his worke; and therefore that wee must not in that case bring the iudgement of our eyes; but continue from time to time in prayer and supplication, and rest vpon the promise thereof which is giuen vnto vs.

Also it is sayd, That God will succour Iuda against his enemies, and that his hands shall suffice him.

This was no more than needed, for so much as the kingdome of Iuda was to be diminished after the decease of Salomon. And from that time forth, he was to haue but one trybe and a halfe, so as a man would haue thought that all that euer had bene done in the person of Dauid, had bene but a puffe. True it is, that when Dauid was crowned king, God in one instant shewed there so great power, as all men wondered at it. In the time of Saul the people were extremely oppressed, and seemed like to haue bene altogether swallowed vp. But yet there were so excellent victories, as it appeared well that God was the author of that change. Dauid not onely draue away all those which had possessed any part of the lande of Canaan, and had subdued the people to their taxes and tributes, whereby he purchased libertie to those of whom hee had the charge; but also conquered all his neighbours, and made them tributarie vnto him. Therefore in that case wee see an open miracle of God. When Salomon succeeded him, gold and silver were of no more estimation than grauell, as the holy historie reporteth thereof. But what? As soone as Roboam succeeded, there was a backeslyding, so as almost all the people turned backe. There was no more but the trybe of Iuda with a piece of Benjamin, that abode in obedience to the house of Dauid. What was to be sayd hereupon, but that for aught that men did see, there was verie feeble hope to be had, when all passed so slightly away? Besides this, that small kingdome being so diminished, (as wherof remained but a peece) was so assayed on all sides, that it seemed to be as a sheep alone among a dozen wolues. A man then would haue thought that God had forgotten his promise. And therefore it was requisite that Moses should ad this for the comfort of the faithfull, to the intent they should not be shaken from their faith, when they saw that kingdome to be diminished.

That is the cause why he sayd, The hands of Iuda shall suffice him, and God will giue him succour against his enemies. And so let vs make well, that this kingdome was stablished with great difficultie in the person of Dauid; and that in the end it was diminished, and came to such decay, that to all seeming it should haue bene vnterly abolished: whereby it was Gods will to shewe in a figure, what was to befall to the spirituall kingdome of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And in deece wee see, that when the time drewe nigh wherein Iesus was to be shewed to the worlde; there was nothing but horrible disorder among that people. Who then would haue looked for the redemption at the coming of Iesus Christ? For the people were scattered abroad and vnterly cast downe. Yet notwithstanding, God wrought therein after a manner vnknown to men. In so much that although the Gospell was preached; yet was it not seene out of hand that the Church triumphed in this worlde; but cleane contrarywise that there was nothing but tormenting, persecuting and oppressing of it, so as the name of Christianitie seemed to be the irksomest thing that could be spoken of, & that all Gods children were but as the doung & filth of the world, as Saint Paul speaketh therof. To be short, that kingdome was to be set vp with fighting and forrowing; & it behooued the faithfull to pray vnto God, and yet notwithstanding, great was the grieft of minde wherewith they wayted for the setting abroad of the doctrine of the Gospell, to the intent that Iesus Christ might be worshipped of the world, and all men submit themselves to him to do him homage. And yet did not that continue any long time. For the vnthankfulness of the world deserued that God should haue withdrawn his hand and power; and we see howe the worlde strove to haue driuen Christ away. For on the one side there were hypocrites which scorned all religion, and abused it falsly. Also there were despisers and worldly folk, which tooke to them an vnbridled libertie (as we see still at this day) vnder pretence of the freedome that was preached vnto them. Againe, there were Sects, and Heresies, and rebellions, so as a great sort stepped vp and could not abide to beare the yoke which it was Gods will to lay vpon their necke. Yee see then that the reigning of our Lorde Iesus Christ was as it were brought to nothing. And therefore let vs mark well, that this text not onely serued for the Iewes, but also is profitable for vs at this day, as whereby we be done to vnderstand, that it behooueth vs to make earnest iure vnto GOD to set vp the kingdome of his only sonne; and to stablish it with his power euen in the the middes of the trubbles which wee see, notwithstanding that it seeme that all things should goe to wracke; & to succour vs against our enemies, because we see for many men intraged against vs; & to hyde vs vnder the shadowe of his hand, & to shewe vs his helpe when wee be in extremitie and euen at the last cast, and can no longer hold out. Againe, although the kingdom of our Lorde Iesus Christ seeme nothing to the world, & that the proud & the vnbeleeuers do scorne it & despise it yet wil God shewe that his own hand sustineth him, that is to say, that his power which is hidden & of no reputation to the worldward, shalbe of such force, that in the end the wicked shalbe drinen to confesse that they were too blockish & dulwitted, in that they tooke not hold of the grace wherof mention is made here. As for vs, let vs be stil more & more confirmed to trust in this great Sauour, & to put our selues into his protection, and to seeke all our succour at his hand. That is the thing which we be taught in this text.

Now let vs come to the trybe of Leuye. Thy Vrims & thy Thumim (sayeth he) belong vnto thy meeke one, or vnto the man of thy mercie. The Thumim and Vrims were a parcel of Aarons brestlap, and of the brestlap of the high priests. Besides their robe, there was another piece ioyned vnto it, which was of great pryce, beset with pearles & imbroydered. Moreover in this piece there was a tablet of precious stones hanging at litle cheynes, which was placed full vpon his brest; and this piece of the brestlap was called Judgement, that is to say rightfulness. Also there was another part, which a man cannot well distinguish, and that was named Thumim and Vrims. The former of these words signifieth perfection; as if a man should terme them perfections in the plural number. And the other cometh of light or flame; if yee referre it to doctrine. Then if a man list to take these words in common speech, he may say perfections and teachings [or instructions.] But [in reading of the text, haue kept still the verie wordes of Moses; because it is not to be doubted, but that he spealeth of that portion of the brestlap which was so termed as appeareth in the eyght & twentith of Exodus. And he directeth his speech vnto God. But some haue misexpounded this text, in saying, thy Thumim & Vrims belong to thee & to the Man, which is cleane contrary. For Moses saith; O Lord God, shon hast thy Thumim & Vrims in thy hand. That is to say, the things which thou hast giuen to thy high priest, are things holy & dedicated to thy name; they be thy perfections and teachings. To whom belong they? To thy meeke one, or to the man of thy mercie; for so is it word for word. But the word Meeke, may be taken after the same maner that the holy scripture calleth Gods children meeke ones; that is to say, such as ought to resemble him who is the fountaine of all mercie & goodnes. For if wee wilbe knowne & auowed to be Gods childre; it is good reason that we should resemble him, by hauing a meeke & myld spirit in vs, so as we indeuour to do men good. For it is the proprietie of God to be liberal to al men, yea eun to those which are not worthe thereof; inso much that he maketh his day Sunne to shine both vpon good & bad. After his example we ought to do our indeuer, & to strayne our selues to the vitermost of our power, to benefite al men, & to do al men good. And so it is the common stile of the holy scripture to name the faithfull meeke ones; & specially we see it is as ripe a thing as can be in the Psalms. But forasmuch as he sayth, to his meeke one; it may be taken for the man of thy mercie; that is to say, for the man whom thou Lord hast elected and chosen through thy goodnes. For Aaron attained not to the dignitie of y priesthood by his owne desertes; but because God vouchsafed to choose him. Now then the name that is attributed to him here, may be taken as if a man should say in the passive signification, that God vouchsafed to make him a mirrour of his free election; yea and that hauing so chosen him & exalted him to so high and excellent honour, he would haue him to shewe that wee depende wholly vpon his goodnes, so that of al y things which we haue, none proceedeth of our owne power or vertue, but of his pitying of vs, for that he is mynded to shewe his gracious goodnes towards vs. But howsoeuer the case stand, Moses ment to declare here, that the trybe of Leuye should alwayes serue God with the dignitie of priesthood, and that the high priest should be clothed with the ornaments that were giuen him to goe into the sanctuarie. And in that case hee was not as a mortall man, nor as one of the degree of creatures: but as the mediator betwene God and men, whereby he surmounteth the very Angels of Heauen. For the priest of the lawe was in his office more excellent than all the Angels of heauen. And why? Because he was to represent the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ, who is the head of the Angels as well as of men, and hath soueraigne dominion ouer all principalitie, not onely on earth, but also in heauen. Yee see then how the meaning of Moses is, that the priesthood should be in the trybe of Leuye.

And let vs marke nowe, that Moses magnifieth heere the trybe of Leuye, of purpose to wype away the dishonour that was there afore. For wee knowe howe Iacob had sayde, Yee Simcon and Leuye, yee be instruments of wickednesse, yee haue destroyed a towne, and yee haue slayne the men like murderers as yee be; I will not haue to doe with you, neyther in speech nor in heart, I refuse you. And thou Leuye shalt be dispersed among my people; for thou art not worthe to haue any heritage. Loe after howe terrible a fashion GOD speaketh against Leuye and all his offspring. Hee seemeth to bee quite rased out, as one that was not worthe to haue any place or degree in the Church. But what reuerence nowe had there been in the priesthood, if the trybe of Leuye had continued in that reproch? For seeing that their father was disgraced by Iacob, who was Gods deputie as I haue declared afore: what should haue becom of al those which were descended of his race? Nowe then it was requisite that this tribe of Leuie should bee re-established, to the intent that the order of priesthood might not be despised, least it might keepe men backe from hearkening to the doctrine of their mouth. What will become of it if they which haue the charge of teaching the people, be pointed at with mens fingers, set light by, scorned or blemished with any marke of reproch in themselves, so as men disdain them? Surely they shall neuer profite men, they shall not be able to edifie them, men will vterly mislike of them. Nowe we knowe, and it shall be declared more fully heereafter, that the Leuites were ordeined of God to teach all the people. Then if they had bene reputed as men of no valour, it woulde haue caried great prejudice with it, so as the lawe it selfe should haue had no great reuerence, men would haue made no account of it, and the very common people would haue shrinke away from the expounders thereof. Therefore it is not causelesse that Moses telleth them, that The Thumim and Vrim of god, that is to say, his perfections and teachings are in that tribe, and God will haue it known, that there remaineth not nowe any such reproch there, as there did before, but rather that hee setteth his ansignes there. For in Aarons Mytre, was Gods name, euen the name of the Euerlasting: and that was a thing exempted from all the world. Also there was the iudgement, as I saide afore. And for what cause was Aaron apparessed after that manner, but to shewe that in him there was a myrrour of Gods glory? Sith it was so, it behooued the people to forget Leuies fault, and the punishment thereof which had bene laide vpon him and his offspring, and to receiue Gods Lawe at the mouth of the Leuites, and to haue them in estimation, and to honour them as Gods messengers, or rather as Angels as they be termed in the Prophet Malachie. True it is that Moses was of the same tribe: but yet did God so prouide, that the skorners could not alledge that he had fauored his owne linage or house. And why? Who is hee that pronounced that sentence against Leue? Euen Moses himselfe: for it was he that compyled the booke of Genesis, wherein hee spared not the fault of his own auncutor. For it behoued him to be as Gods notarie, to set downe sentence both vpon Leuie and vpon all that came of his race. Heere then wee see that Moses behaued not himselfe after the manner of men; but executed faithfully the charge that was committed vnto him. Again, the highpriesthood was not in his owne house, though it were in his owne tribe. He was a greater man than his brother Aaron, and hee had children which might haue succeeded in his place. And yet for all that, hee made none of them prince of the people, he made none of them a gouernour, neither had they any preheminence about the others: nay, they had not so much as any portion of inheritance, but were faine to be contented with the first fruits, Tythes, and Offerings, after the custome [of the rest] of the tribe of Leuie, Moses then gaue not the Highpriesthood to his owne children, neither tooke he it to himselfe. What were Moses his children then, and all his successours? They were but vnder seruants of the meanest in the Temple, and they were faine to serue there, euen without being in any degree of honour. God (say I) ment to prouide, that Moses should not bee subiect to any slander. And therefore the things which hee speaketh now of the tribe of Leuie, are not spoken in respect of his owne auncetrie: for (as we see) he is not led by fleshly affection, and that doth the verie thing it selfe shewe, in somuch that all the malicious sort and all the skorners of God must needs haue their mouthes stopped heere, considering his wonderful prouidence in cutting off occasion of all slander as I saide afore. Moses then had none other respect, but that God should he honoured, that the doctrine of the Lawe should be receiued with al reuerence, and that forsonuch as Leuie was chosen thereunto, and the Priesthood was to continue in his house; those which were so set in office should not be hindered in their proceedings for the building vp of the Church, nor haue any blemish in their persons, which might diminish the authoritie of the doctrine which they brought. That is the thing in effect whereat God aimed.

But nowe let vs lay forth the whole by percellmeale. He saith first of all, Thy Thumim & thy Vrim. I haue tolde you already that these two words betoken Gods perfections, and his lights or doctrines. Now in effect we be done to vnderstande heere, that Aarons apparess was no vaine thing; it was not an atyre to giue a glittering shewe to mens eyes; but God intended to figure a greater and more excellent thing thereby; which is, that the Priest should not be as a common man, but should haue in him things which could not be comprehended. And in very deed, his bearing of Gods essential name in his Mytre, Exod. 28. 36 serued to shewe that hee surmounted all the worlde and all the creatures therein. There was in his Mytre, The Euerlasting: and that name agreed to none but to God himselfe. Needs then must it bee, that the highpriest was a figure of our Lorde Iesus Christ, who is God manifested in flesh. God therefore intended to shewe, that none of all the Ceremonies of the Lawe, were as toyes for babes to play withall like the trash of the Papistes, who haue a great sort of pelting gewgawes, and in all their Ceremonies doe nothing but make as it were maygames or stage-plays; after which manner the heathen folke also haue store of murlymewes and trilles, and yet all is but a hotchpotch. And why? For there is no doctrine, there is nothing but dafeling of mens eyes, it cannot bee saide vpon knowledge that God hath commaunded them, or that hee hath appointed them to such ende or such vse. I graunt that the Papistes contriue good store of gay things in their Masse, as who would say, this figureth such a thing, and this such a thing. And yet for all that, all is but leasing: for they haue forged them of their owne heads. But God had as it were his lampe lighted in all the Ceremonies monies of the Lawe, to the intent that the people shoulde be furthered by the helpe of them: insonuch that they knewe wherefore Aarons Brethap was named Rightfulnesse, and why these parts [of Thumim and Vrim] were named Perfections and light. It was to doe vs to wit, that God tooke no pleasure in outward things; for hee is not like men, which are rauished with the outward appearance and gay shew of things. God hath no such thing in his nature. But by those Ceremonies, he meant to betoken farre greater things, vntill the truth of them appeared in Iesus Christ. Likewise all the things that were done in the Lawe, had a respect to the paterne which Moses had seene in the mountaine, and so consequently all things were spirituall, as is saide of them in the 25. of Exodus. Let that then serue for one point.

Much more reason is it that we nowadayes shoulde abstaine from all trifling Ceremonies, because our Lorde Iesus Christ is come, & hath brought vs the truth of the things which were set downe in shadowes vnder the lawe. In the time of the Lawe, it behoued the highpriest to be appareled [after his peculiar manner,] yea and all the whole lynne of the priestes had certaine markes to be knowne by, as who woulde say, We be sanctified to God. But specially when the highpriest was to go into the sanctuary, hee was then as it were to bee altogether disguised, there were not the things to be perceiued in him which had beene in men afore: and that order was to be obserued in the absence of our Lorde Iesus Christ. But nowe all those things are abolished. Nowe if men inuent things of their owne fancie, (as we see there is an infinite gulfe of gewgawes in the popedome): what will become of it? The things which God inioyned with his owne mouth tooke their ende at the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And why? For we haue no mo lightes, or teachings in pictures; wee haue them not any more in Aarons brethap, but wee haue them in our Lorde Iesus Christ, who is the lutey image of God his father, in beholding of whom face to face, we bee there as it were transfigured into the glorie of God. As saint Paul saith, there is no more any veyle in the Gospel, as there was in the Lawe. Moses was to haue his face couered with a veile to shewe that the Lawe did not yet discover things so plainly as the Gospel doth at this day. If men the take vpon them to inuent figures of their owne braine, what can they be but illusions from Satan? Wherefore let vs conclude, that when the Priestes do apparell themselves [with their trinkets] in the popedome, they be but masking toyes; and whereas in so doing they will needes resemble the Iewes, it is all one as if they trode Iesus Christ vnderfoot, or else would burie him, that men might no more looke him in the face, nor he be neere vnto vs, nor wee any more perceiue the worthines that is in him and in his office. That is the thing which wee haue to remember vpon this text where Aarons ornamentes are termed perfections and teachings.

And it is saide that his perfections and teachings are of God, to shewe that in the gouernement of the Church, it is not for vs to inuent what seemeth good vnto vs; but that that matter lyeth simply in the will of God, and that whatsoever he ordeyneth ought to bee held, and that it is not lawfull for men to attempt any thing in that behalfe, yea and that such additions and minglings are mere corruptions. Therefore when Moses sayeth, Lord God thy Thumim and thy Vrim, thereby he openly witnesseth, that when men do so farre passe their boundes, as to frame a gouernement after their owne fancie, and to ordaine laws and statutes in the church, to say this is good, for it liketh me well; It is but a tradition that commeth from some one man; and when men do so presume of themselves, it is a taking away of Gods right; and a committing of diuclish trecherie. And why? Because the Thumim and Vrim belong to none but God. If the figures of the law, which seemed to be small things, were reserued vnto God, so as it was not lawfull for the world to adde any thing, no nor so much as a pins point vnto them; but that the builders of the sanctuarie and the makers of the priestly garments, were to bee gouerned by the holy Ghost: seing that God declarerh thereby that he will haue all things grounded vpon his authoritie: What is to be saide to it, if they will nowe binde mens consciences, and set vp a newe seruice of God, as if they woulde say, Thus shall God be honoured, and so men become lawgiuers, insonuch that God shall not be heard, nor any account bee made of his sayings, but that euery man may be his owne ruler, or else say after the common manner, Our mother the holy Church hath so decreed? In what plight shoulde we be then? And yet we see this horrible disorder throughout all the Popedome. Therefore wee may well conclude that there is nothing but vtter defiling of Gods seruice; and that all that euer is so intytled there, is but meere ydolatrie; and that Gods name is altogether vnhalloved in that behalfe. That is one thing more which we haue to beare in mind concerning the saying of Moses in that he attributerh the matter concerning the priestly apparell vnto God alone.

And as we haue seene afore, hee calleth Aarons Gods meeke one, or rather the man of his piitie: & this latter interpretation is the fittest. Yee see then how Aaron was exalted to high dignities. And why? To the intent men should not seeke any reason thereof in Aarons owne person, Moses setteth downe Gods freegoodnesse aforehande, after which manner we see how saint Paul also speaketh. He confesseth that hee was sometime a murderer a persecuter, a blasphemers; for he had consented to the shading of guiltlesse bloude: hee was a deadly enemy to the Gospel; hee was full of bitterness, full of rage, and hee enforced the weakelings to blaspheme the name of God. Nowe if hee were a rauencing wolfe, was hee worthy to bee made a sheepherde in the Church? Verily hee confesseth him self vnworthy, yea and that he was the least of all others . But yet in the meane while hee throwdeth himselfe vnder the grace of God, saying, Paul an Apostle . As howe? According to the wil of god the father, according to the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, according to the euertlasting purpose of God. Heere hee stoppeth the mouthes of all such as would enter into contention with him , to abate the dignitie of his Apostleship ; protesting that it is not grounded vpon his owne meritis, nor gotten by his owne purchase, and therefore he cannot boast thereof, but that all cometh of God. As much doth Moses heere , saying that the Thummim & Urim, of God belonged vnto him , because God had chosen him, yea euen mererely of his owne gracious goodnesse . Although Aaron had neuer obtained so excellent a state, if God had respect to the things that were in him : yet neuertheless he was placed in the degree of Priesthood. And why lo? Because it was Gods good pleasure, and further men must not dispute thereof . And heereby wee see that when God giueth his gracious giftes to men to serue him in any honourable office , his so doing is euermore of his owne louing kindnesse, for hee is not any whit bounde to vs. And specially when the case concerneth the preaching of Gods worde , who is hee that shalbe found meete for it (saith Saint Paul) ? The things are so high that hee crieth out, who is he that can be able thereto? There is none but God (saith he ) that giueth abilitie. For without him we should not haue so much as one good thought . And so wee be doone to vnderstande , that we on our side are vnprofitable, vntill God haue chosen vs , and disposed vs to serue him. That being done, we be good, we be readie, we be fit for y purpose. Not for any worthinesse that is in vs , but that euerywhit of it proceedeth of Gods freegoodnesse & merety.

By the way , heere is an exception taken against Aaron , that God tried him in Massa , and that hee stroode in contention at the waters of strife. True it is that this may be taken as though Aarons faith had not failed, when God rebuked him. And it is certaine, that at that time, in the deede which is reported heere , Aaron shewed a commendable stoutnesse : and yet for all that hee swarued aside, for God condemned him. The place was named Massa , that is to say, sensation or triall, and after Meriba , which signifieth strife, contention, debate. It was the place where the people required water, yea and they required it with grudging and repynning against God. There Moses & Aarō were as it were, overcome : after y sustaining of so many incounters, they wist not what to say or what to do. Ah lord, what shall we do to this people ? Now surely there was some faultie infirmitie in them , and God who is the competent Iudge thereof , declareth that it was so . Yee see then that Moses and Aaron overshoot themselves, so as they fell: insomuch that they were in verie deede banished out of the Lande of Chanaan: they might not enter into it , God excluded them from it: they sawe it a faire off, but they might not let their feete in it . And the reason is added expressly, because (saith hee) yee sanctified mee not before the people ; for there ought to haue bene a faire greater constancie in them than there was . And although Moses and Aaron were sore grieued, and were toughed with zeale to the quicke when they sawe the spitefull dealings of the people, and although they laboured to cause them to honour God ; yet were they not couragious ynough. This would be counted no fault at all in the iudgement of men , as wee haue seene heretofore : but God looketh more deeply and cleerely into things, and wee must holde our selues to the things which he telleth vs with his owne mouth. Yee see then how Moses and Aaron are condemned , and yet was there courage in them. For Moses rebuked the people, saying: Come on yee faithlesse folke, is not God able to make water to come out of this Rocke ? Yes, and that shall you see in despite of you. The people were at that time on a great rore, insomuch that they would euen haue stoned him . Yet notwithstanding hee behaueth him still as Gods professor to maintaine his quality, he entereth into the case in Gods behalfe, and hee hazardeth his life for it . So then there was excellent corage and stoutnesse in Moses and Aaron . But yet were they put to their triall, so as on the one side the weaknesse of their faith bewrayed it selfe, that there was some default in it; and they were faine to acknowledge it with humilitie , and patiently to beare such chastisement as God sent them for it : howbeit, on the other side also they shewed y they were not so greatly dismayed , but that they had still an affection to serue God. And soothly we shal diuers times see Gods seruantes sore shaken, and y foras much as they be men they be moued when there cometh any great tempest: but yet for all that they do not vterly quail . Euen so stooode the case with Moses and Aaron.

And for that cause it is saide in this place, Thou trieddest him in Massa , thou madest him to strive [or contend] at the waters of Meriba. And in that respect did I say , that this might be taken as though Aaron were taunted for not being obedient ynough vnto God at Meriba, and for that hee sanctified him not by indeuouring himselfe as he ought to haue done . Neuertheless, it may also be noted, (as truth is), that Aaron was tryed as in respect of men, and that being so tried [or tempted] by men, he was found faithfull, in that hee stroode so in contention with them. For wee see not that he for his part murmured against God , neither escaped there any worde of grudging from him. Was hee carried with so diuclish rage as to say, Shall we die heere for thirst? No: he would rather haue died a hundred thousand times , than once haue opened his mouth to cast forth one word of murmuring against God. What befel him then ? By reaso of the spitefulness of the people, there was a fault committed. For Aaron himselfe held alwayes on Gods side: and therefore although hee did amisse, yet the same proceeded not of himselfe . And it is the very same thing wherewith we haue seene Moses vpbraide the people, saying that he himfelfe was punished for their rebellions fake. You be the caufe (faith he) that God hath difappointed me of going into the land of Chanaan. Hee faith not, I am fhut out of it for mine offence; but hee cafteth the people in the teeth with it, faying, you were the caufe of it. And fo it is declared yet once againe in this place, that Moles and Aaron ought not to be the leffe eſteemed of the people, nor the priſthood the leffe honoured for that there was ſome infirmity in them which was faultie before God. For therewithall they had alſo a wonderfull ſtoutneſſe of minde, which is ynough to ſtoppe the mouthes of all the worlde, whereby Moles and Aaron ſhewed themſelves faithfull at the ſame time, ſo as a man might well ſee that what feebleneſſe ſo euer was in them, it could not caufe them to be corrupted and caried away by the leawdneſſe of the people, or make them to forſake their charge; but they continued in weldo-ing, and ſtoutly withſtoode all temptations and incounters, ſhewing that their deſire was nothing elle but that God ſhould haue his due deſerued authoritie among the people, and bee obeyed of all men.

2. Cor. 3. 5. 6

Exod. 17.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the maieſtic of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchſafe to make vs perceiue them more and more, and that hauing rid vs of all our wicked luſts, he drawe vs fully to himſelfe, and that we may dayly profite and increaſe in his grace, vntil y being departed out of this world, we be come to his heavenly glorie: & y forasmuch as we be now a prielly kingdome, it may pleaſe him to cloth vs with y righteouſneſſe & vncorruptnes of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt; not in figure as the prieſtes of the Law were; but by renewing vs in ſuch wiſe by his holy ſpिरite, that although wee bee not perfect at the firſt day, yet we may at leaſt wiſe attaine to that perfection which he calleth vs vnto. That ic may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but alſo to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

1. Pet. 2. 9.

On Wednesday the firſt of Iuly, 1556.

The CXCIII. ſermon, which is the fourth vpon the xxxij. Chapter.

9 Which hath ſaide of his father and of his mother, I haue not ſeene them, nor hath knowen his owne brethren, nor alſo hath knowen his owne children. For they ſhall keepe thy ſayings, and obſerue thy couenants.

10 They ſhal teach thy iudgements vnto Iacob, and thy Law vnto Iſrael. They ſhal ſend vp perfunies to thy noſethrills, and lay whole burnt offerings vpon thine Altar.

11 O Lorde, bleſſe his ſubſtance, and make the worke of his hands pleaſant vnto thee. Breake the backebones of ſuch as hate him, that they may not riſe vp againſt him.

Be to proceed with the bleſſing of the tribe of Leuy, which I began to declare yeſterday. I tolde you in fewe wordes, that there Moles intended to ſtabliſh thoſe whom God had choſen to be his prieſtes, becauſe it was verie needefull to keepe them from contempt of the people, leaſt men might haue made none account of the doctrine which they were to deliuer vnto them: and therefore it behoued them to be in good eſtimation as Gods ſeruaunts and repreſenters of his perſon. And that is the cauſe why Moles declareth that although Aaron was tried in Maſſa, and ſuffered ſome trouble: yet notwithstanding God ceaſed not to retaine him ſtill in his ſeruiſe, yea euen him and all his offspring. And nowe Moles ſheweth whereunto God had called the houſe of Leuie, and what was the office of the highpriſt. He ſaith firſt of al, That they knew neither father nor mother, that they had forſaken their owne Children, and that they tolde their brothers they wiſt not who they were. And that is to ſhewe, that forasmuch as God had choſen them, it behoued them to forget all things, that they might giue themſelves wholly vnto him. Nowe wee knowe that when the Prieſtes were preſented as all other oblations were, men laide either their one hande or both their hands vpon them; to betoken that they were no more at their owne libertie, but that they were ſacriſied to ſuch a uſe, as it behoued euery one of them to imploy themſelves wholly to their office, and to be altogether at the appointment of God. True it is that the ſame condition is required of all the faithfull, for we ought to be dedicated vnto God in ſacrifice. Rom. 12. 1. But yet muſt the preachers of the worde leade the daunce, and conſider themſelves to be double bounde, yea and more ſtraitly. The thing then which Moles meant to betoken in this text, is that ſeeing God had ſo highly honored noured the tribe of Leuie, as to haue them all to be his Priests: it behoued them to forget both father and mother, & to be vnadicted to their fleshly affections, yea and to giue ouer euē their owne children. Nor that God intended to alter the order of nature, but to shewe that when the case standeth vpon the performance of their charge, they must not bee turned from it by any worldly respect, neither must any thing withhold them from executing thoroughly & faithfully whatsoever God commaundeth them. Now then, he that will serue God must not forget his father & mother by forbearing to do his natural duetie towards them: but he must preferre God before all men, according to this generall saying, that we cannot be the disciples of our Lord Iesus Christ, except we haue both father and mother. The word haue is yet somewhat harder than that which is conteyned heere in Moses: but the meaning is not darke at all. For our Lord Iesus doth vs to vnderstand, that we must make such account of him, that both father & mother must be as nothing in comparison of him, that the husbande must leaue y<sup>e</sup> loue which hee beareth to his wife, and the father must set aside the care of his children, that we may keepe on our way roundly: inso much that when the case standeth vpon yeelding record to the Gospell, and of cleauing to our Lord Iesus Christ, all worldly things must be quite and cleane wyped out of our hearts. And so we see nowe the meaning of Moses. And in very deed, the same appeared as well in himselfe as in his brother Aaron. At such time as the Calfe was made and the people had defiled themselves with ydolatrie, we see with what zeale Moses was carried, and likewise all the tribe of Leuie. For hee willed every man to take his sword in his hande. Let vs goe (saith hee) and sanctifie you your handes to the Lorde. For in so doing yee shall shewe your selues to be rightly zealous of Gods seruice, in that yee kill your owne brethren without sparing, so as in this case the order of nature be put vnder foote, to shewe that God is aboue all, and ought to beare chiefest sway. Seeing then that Moses maketh such an execution, that hee carieth with him the whole tribe of Leuie: wee see it is not saide both on father and mother, that they did shut their eyes against al that euer might coole them or restraine them; and that God had so rauished them, as they fought nothing but the maintenance of his honour, and the executing of his vengeance vpon such abomination as had bin committed against him for to deface his honor in Israel. Neuerthelesse we must note that no one deede is spoken of heere alone: but Moses meant to shewe in fewe wordes, that God had chosen that tribe, with condition that it should be holy vnto him, and that they all should shewe the way to all the rest of the people. But wee know it is vnpossible to please God, so long as wee bee too much affectioned towards men. And therefore we haue heere a rule, that if wee intende to walke aright, and not to halt before

God; we must not be intangled in our fleshly affections, no not euen in those which are most commendable, or at leastwise which may haue most excuse. Men cannot condemne him which honoureth his father and mother, for it is a vertue, and wee knowe that God hath commaunded it with a promise. The man that loueth his wife, shall not bee the lesse esteemed for it; but what shall be saide of the man which hath not a care of his children? He were worse than a brute beast. And Saint Paul saith that such folk shall be condemned by the vnbeleueers, because the vnbeleueers do shewe them their lesion. Then is it a commendable vertue for a man to loue his father and his mother and his neighbours: but yet must all these bee forgotten when God cometh in place, and when his honour is put into the balance to be compared with the duty which wee owe to all creatures. For then, (as I saide afore) God must goe foremost, and al the residue must follow. Inso much that if we shoulde be turned quite away from them for the doing of such things as God commaundeth to be done for his honour, the order of nature ought to beare no sway in that behalfe, but rather to bee vtterly ouerthrowen.

True it is that here he speaketh of the Leuits which were in olde time: yet notwithstanding, they which at this day do preach Gods worde are bound to the like, and ought to vnderstande that Gods putting of them in that office & degree, is to the intent they shoulde so giue themselves vnto him, as that they should not be turned away from him, neither for regard of their owne persons, nor for any earthly affection, nor for any loue of the world. Then must they fight against those thinges; and although there bee great hardnes in it; yet must they enforce themselves neuerthelesse. For we shall not so fully ouermaster our selues at y<sup>e</sup> first, that we shall be able to forget both our wiuues and children. But yet is it no excuse to alledge that we be weak, and y<sup>e</sup> things which we haue by kind cannot be so soone forgotten: we must fight against the neuerthelesse. For if we be rechelesse, heere our condemnation is giuen vpon vs. How then shall the ministers of Gods word performe their duty faithfully? Euen by hauing the one foote continually lifted vp to depart out of the world, so as neither household nor any thing else do hold them backe from dedicating themselves wholly vnto God, be it to liue or die. That is the end whereto we must begin. Now in very deepe that cannot be done thoroughly; but yet must wee in deuour and enforce our selues to that ende, and daily labour and take paines to profite, & to go forward in that behalfe. Morcouer forasmuch as nowadayes al of vs are Leuits & a kingly priesthood, as the people of Israel were: let vs note y<sup>e</sup> this matter belongeth partly vnto vs all. For we heare how it is saide by the Prophet, that in the reigne of our Lord Iesus Christ, those which afore were but Leuits, to be porters of y<sup>e</sup> temple, or to make cleane the vessels, or to doe the residue of the base seruices; shall be high priests: and that the common people which durst not enter into the Temple afore, shalbe of the order and degree of Leuites. And in very deede, at this day the sanctuarie of God is set open vnto vs by the bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ, the veile is rent asunder, and wee goe in vnto the maiestie of God, as the high priestes did of olde time vnder the Lawe. Seeing that God hath so greatly in-honoured the faithfull vnder the Gospell, that hee hath set then in equall degree with those which were Leuites in the materiall tabernacle which was but a figure: it behooueth vs well to consider what hath bene said concerning the Priestes of old time; and all of vs from the highest to the lowest, ought to know that we cannot serue God without forgetting our father and mother, according to the forealleged saying of our Lorde Iesus Christ, who speaketh there not of his disciples onely. True it is that it behooued them to be the foreleaders, and by their example to induce the faithfull to the restraining and dispatching of their owne affection, and of all that euer they haue of nature; but yet our Lord Iesus sheweth that no man can followe him, nor come vnto him to continue stedfastly in y<sup>e</sup> Gospell, but with condition of forgetting his father and mother, and of forsaking his wife, and of giuing ouer his own children. After what manner? Not that we do it of our owne head, for euery man ought to discharge his dutie as much as he can. But if a man bee called to forsake his wife and household for witnessing of y<sup>e</sup> Gospell, he must be turned from them as if he had his bowels plucked from him; and yet for all y<sup>e</sup> hee must rather choose to haue the one halfe of himselfe taken from him, than in any wise to shrink away or to estraunge himselfe from Iesus Christ. That is the thing which we haue to gather vpon that text.

Nowe hee adderth therunto, That they shall keepe the sayings of the Lorde, and holde fast his commandments. True it is, that forasmuch as the Law was giuen to all the children of Abraham without exception, the thing that is spoken here belongeth alike to all the other tribes. And wee haue seene already, that the Leuites were not the onely folke which were commaunded to keepe the doctrine contained therein; but it was saide [indifferently to all the rest,] Yee shall keepe my Statutes. When God said so, hee directed his speech to all the children of Israel. Yet notwithstanding (as I saide afore) it behooued the priests who had the charge of drawing the people, and of holding them vnder the obedience of God, to shewe them the way, and to haue a more ardent zeale to keepe the lawe faithfully. That is the cause why Moses giueth them that title. But wee must note that these wordes keepe and maintaine, import two things; that is to wit, that the Leuites shoulde teach the people the Lawe (as shalbe shewed more at large); and also holde them in awe, that the religion might be preferred pure, so as the people might not stait away to ydolatrie and superstition, nor leade a wicked and loose life; but that God might be honoured and serued. That is the first keeping which wee haue of the doctrine. And for the same cause doeth Moses adde, They shall teach thy Lawe vnto Israel, and thy Commandmentes vnto Iacob. Then was it not ynough for the children of Leuie to walke vndefiledly and according to the doctrine of the Lawe; but also it behooued them all to haue the doctrine in their mouth, to giue instruction to their brethren, & to bring them alwayes to the knowledge of God, and to make them continue therein to the end.

The seconde manner of keeping was in good life, by shewing example and by being zealous to holde the people still in order when they sawe them start aside, as we knowe that the worlde is ouer fraile, yea and that we be so inclined to naughtinesse and vice, that it is a great matter to vs if we be not vterly dissolute. Therefore it stood the children of Leuie in hande to employ themselves therabouts. And here we see, first that God meant not to make ydols in his Church, when he ordeined Shepherds and other men to haue some oversight and authoritie there. And if it were so in the time of the Lawe; much more ought it to bee so at this day. For (as wee shall see againe anon) the Priestes had the Ceremonies and manie like thinges, so as they were sufficiently occupied about them, although they had not medled at all with teaching. But nowadays all those thinges are ceased, and there remaineth no more but y<sup>e</sup> preaching of the Gospell, and the ministring of the sacraments, which are but few in number, and haue not so much adoe as was vnder the figures of old time. That is the cause why I saide, that if the Priestes which were before the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ were bound to be Gods messengers in preaching his word and in giuing good instruction to the people, or else they were after a sort disgraded from their office: what shall become of it nowadays, when such as are ordained shepherds in the Church, haue none other charge but to teach folke publicly and privately, and therewithall to minister the sacraments? Seeing it is so, then is there no excuse for such as say they haue any charge or spirituall gouernement in the Church, if therewithall they haue not the doctrine in their mouth. Whereby it is apparat, that in the Popedom there is nothing but confused disorder, and that all those which nowadays doe name themselves Bishops and Prelates, are but scare-bugs set vp by the diuell to bleare the eyes of the ignorant, and are folkes vnworthy to bee counted of y<sup>e</sup> flock, forasmuch as they haue peruerued Gods order, and made such a bottomles pit, that a man cannot discern any remnant of that which our Lord Iesus Christ had ordained among the faithfull. Seeing they haue altered and imbecad all thinges after that fashion, they bee not worthy to bee of the number of Gods people, but rather of his deadly foes, and much lesse ought they to be reputed for Shepherds. But forasmuch as this deserueth to be laid forth more at length; let vs begin at those which are spoken of heere.

Deut. 17. 1.

no. They haue no sure grounde, For as it is saide in the fifth Chapter to the Hebrewes, No man ought to take authoritie vpon him in the Church, for it is not for any man to intrude himselfe, but it behooueth vs to be called. Certaine it is that our Lorde Iesus Christ declaring the will of God his father, and his owne will also, ordeined not dumbe folke thereunto, which shoulde but vaunt themselues with a two-horned Myter and such other gewgawes. Hee meant not to play a pageant, that men shoulde disguise themselues, and in the meane while no man know to what purpose those things serued.
 Hee intended not that men shoulde play murli-mewes, as one that coulde wel skill to mocke at God and all his doctrine by making of Crosses and blessing of Altars. Our Lorde Iesus Christ did not put forth any such desleimentes in his Church: but Satan corrupted all things. And therefore they which at this day doe terme themselues Prelates in the Popedome, cannot alledge that they be sent of God, nor that they ought to haue any authoritie or credite in the name of Iesus Christ. For hee disclaimeth them because they haue not any likenesse to his institution. Sith it is so, we may boldly conclude, that in Popery there is no Church at al, but a hellish Synagogue; and that whosoever medleth there or thrusteth himselfe in among them, forsaketh Iesus Christ, and cutteth himselfe off as a rotten member from his Church. Loe at what point the Papistes are. It may bee that they will call vs heretikes and Schismatikes as they doe indeede. Yea, but they be not our Iudges, and wee may boldly laugh at the sentence which they giue vpon vs, as vaine. For wee haue our warrant in heauen, who alloweth vs, and holdeth them as accursed. For we know that the true marke of sheepherds is to preach Gods worde, that men may inquire at their mouth howe to behaue themselues according to Gods will, knowing that it is hee which sendeth them vnto vs. And therefore whensoeuer wee haue the Gospell purely preached vnto vs, and that wee agree in vnitie of faith: God doeth vs to vnderstande that hee dwelleth among vs, and our Lorde Iesus Christ doeth then shewe himselfe to bee the heade of that whole bodie. That is the thing which wee haue to gather vpon this text, where it is saide that the children of Leuie shall keepe Gods couenant. And why? For else it might perish in the worlde; according whereunto 1. Tim. 3. 15. Saint Paul saith, that the Church is the Arch, the Pillar, and the vpholder of Gods trueth.
 And howe is that? Because that men (as I haue saide afore) are so inclined to vauitie and lea-sings, that they shoulde bee alienated out of hande from the pure Religion, if they were held still by that meane. The Church then is as a Gardian to Gods trueth, to the intent it shoulde not bee done away, but that we should alwayes haue that light among vs, and that wee might vnderstand that where preaching is, there Gods voice tingeth in our eares, so as if wee were neuer to soue thaken too and fro, yet doeth God giue vs a sure stay wherewith to resist all temptations. Yee see then howe the keeping of Gods couenant is committed to the Leuites, and generally to all such as haue the office of sheepshers among Gods people.

Moreouer, for the better maintaining of the pure Religion, it behooueth them to haue a zeale of Gods honour; they must all their life long indeuour to maintaine the doctrine, and therewithall they must haue their mouthes open to preach the worde that is committed vnto them, to the ende that that treasure bee not lost nor buried, but that all men may bee made partakers thereof. They shall preach thy lawe then vnto Iacob, and thy doctrine vnto Israel: so as Gods worde must needes be published if we will shew our selues to be a people dedicated vnto him. Againe, let vs marke also that heere is speciall mention made of Gods worde and of his lawe, to doe vs to wit, that God will not haue mens inuentions to reigne among his people, but will haue men to hold themselues wholly vnto him, and (as yee woulde say) to hang altogether vpon his mouth. Now then, the children of Leuie haue not here a libertie giuen them to forge lawes after their owne liking, and to set forth whatsoeuer they list as the Pope and al his haue done. And it is to be seene yet still at this day howe the same tyrannie reigneth in such sort, that whatsoeuer is termed by the name of Gods seruice in Popery, is but a confusid heape of all manner of dorages, whereunto euery man hath put to his peece, and yet they cannot alledge one syllable of holy scripture to shew that God alloweth their doings. But men haue stepped forth through their owne diuelish rashnes, & haue made Lawes and Statutes to binde mens consciences vnder paine of deadly sinne; and moreouer haue coyned articles of faith at their owne pleasure. From whence then hath all the doctrine of poperie bene taken? Not from the fountaine of y truth; but from the hellish & stinking puddle of Satan, where there is nothing but confusion. Where haue they founde their praying vnto Sainctes, but in their owne braine, or rather that Satan hauing forged it in his shoppe, hath besotted them therewith? Againe, where finde they any of the things which they speak concerning works of supererogation, Merits, the Apes toys of their Masse, and all their Ceremonies in generall? It is certaine that al these things were set forth by men. But contrariwise our Lorde hath tolde vs here, that hee meaneth not to haue those to put forth any thing of their owne, whom hee hath appointed to beate abroad his woide. For the commission which hee gaue to the Leuites, was to set those things abroad which they had receiued of him, and to deale them forth plainly and rightly to the people, taking good heede that they did not alter or falsifie any thing. And therefore let vs marke, that wee shall then bee allowed for Gods people, when our faith flattereth not, after the lure of mortall men, without knowing why wee beleeue, but that wee rest wholly vpon God; and and that when wee knowe that wee haue his worde to rule vs by; then will wee vpholde and auowe vs to bee his Church. But yett must wee alwayes come backe to this, that it is not ynough for vs to haue the lawe written, and to haue Gods worde in our handes; and to make a priuate reading thereof at home in our houses: but the same worde must alsoe bee preached and expounded vnto vs. And why so? Because Gods will is that it should be so, and therefore wee must not dispute vpon it. For why? The order which God hath set among vs, is not to bee broken. Neither hath hee doone it without cause and iust reason (as I haue saide already) considering the frailtie that is in vs, and how easily wee be led to swarue aside.

Moses addeth heereunto, That they shall put vp the perfume vnto the noses of the Lord, and lay the whole burnt offerings vpon his Altar. This concerneth the Ceremonies. For vnder the Lawe they had things which we haue not nowadayes, namely the figures of the things which were fulfilled in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ. For the Priestthoode did vs to vnderstande, that the people coulde not haue any access vnto GOD, without some meane. And when the people came to worshippe God, and to offer sacrifices; they helde themselves in y<sup>e</sup> outmost court. There was the first part wherein they all held themselues and it was not lawfull for them to preace any further. There was also y<sup>e</sup> sanctuarie for the priests, and lodgings for the tribe of Leuie. Also there was the great Sanctuarie wherinto the high-priest entered all alone with great solemnitie. And all this serued to shewe yett more liuely the death and passion of our Lord Iesus Christ. But nowe all those things are come to an end. For there is no more shadowing, the veile (as it is said) is broken asunder, and we haue the heauily sanctuarie wherunto we be called right forth, and Iesus Christ hath set it open for vs. And so there needeth nowe no more burnt offering, there needeth no more sacrificing for sinnes: for our Lord Iesus Christ hath by his one only sacrifice wiped away the sins of the world, & made an euerlasting attonement, the vertue whereof can neuer be diminished. As often then as we will preace vnto God, it is not for vs to bring thither either calfe or sheep, but we must resort to the bloudshed of our Lord Iesus Christ, because that thereby the euerlasting redemption is purchased vnto vs. Nowe we see wherein the Priestes of the olde lawe differed from vs. Yett notwithstanding, those which are ordeined at this day to preach Gods worde ought to knowe that God will haue them to shewe the way in praying to him. And to that ende serued the perfumes that were made in the Temple. Let vs not thinke that God taketh pleasure in any sweete scents, though mention bee made of his nolethrilles after that manner: for wee knowe hee hath no bodie, and therefore wee must not imagine him to bee like our selues: but the holy scripture speaketh after that fashion, because we comprehend him not in his maicstie. As for the perfumes then which were vnder the lawe; they signifie nothing else but the fauour that is in our prayers and petitions, when wee come to offer our selues into the presence of our God. True it is that all of vs both great and small, may blesse the name of our God and yelde him thanks. True it is that wee may with full libertie and open mouth call vpon him as our father, because that in Iesus Christ hee auoweth vs for his children. But howsoever the case stande, yett was that charge committed specially to the ministers of Gods worde, as is saide thereof in the sixth Chapter of the Actes of the Apostles. It is saide that wee must giue our selues to preaching and praying. And howe? Belongs it not to the whole bodie to doe so too? Yes verily. But (as I haue saide) it is requisite that those to whom GOD hath committed the charge of his Church, and ought to warche ouer it, should bee careful to praye, as who should say, yea Lord, This is a charge which I were neuer able to beare, except I were vphelde by thy power: wherefore I pray thee vouchsafe to direct mee and strengthen mee; and therewithall vouchsafe also to maintaine those who thou hast already gathered together vnder thy banner, and to drawe those thither which are away from it. Yea and shewing other men the way to pray, wee ought to frame our wordes after such a sort, as other men may take them as at our mouth. When the Minister is in the pulpit, hee is to vtterforth the common prayer, and all the residue are to say Amen, accordingly as Sainct Paul speaking thereof in the fourteenth Chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians, saith that when prayer is made in the name of the whole congregation, there ought no moe but one to speake, and all the rest ought to aunswere Amen; because that they which ought to teach in Gods name, ought also to rule the rest, and to prouoke them to prayer and supplication, by their example. And therefore let vs marke, that whereas heere is mention made of perfumes and sacrifices: let vs (say I) mark the thing y<sup>e</sup> was peculiar to the Priestes, namely how God would haue the to guide the people to hope that there should be a redemption wrought by the blessed seede of Abraham; and that the people were to be inured thereunto. As for vs, we haue not that office, y<sup>e</sup> is to wit, to be as in y<sup>e</sup> person of our Lord Iesus Christ to make sacrifices. But we haue the Sacramentes; we haue Baptisme, which serueth to shewe howe we be made cleane before God: and wee haue the Lordes supper, wherein it is shewed vs that wee bee nourished with the substance of our Lord Iesus Christ. Nowe then let vs vnderstande, that as the Priestes were ordeined to represent in the Temple the Mediator which was to come; so we at this day doe represent him after another manner. Not by doing as y<sup>e</sup> Papissts do who haue plaid y<sup>e</sup> Apes: For in their Masse (say they) they make a sacrifice: but it is an abomination which serueth to abolish the death and passion of our Lord Iesus Christ. Nowe the vse of the Sacramentes is cleane repugnant thereunto: For they serue vs to shewe in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, that we haue bin once washed & made cleane, and that by meanes thereof men are reconciled by the sacrifice of his death which was offered vp for them. Also when wee minister the Lords supper, we rehearse what was said by our Lorde Iesus Christ: This is my body which is decluered for you: this my bloude which is shed for the saluation of the world. Seeing then that we nowadayes do minister the Sacraments after that manner; we take not vpon vs the thing that belongeth to our Lorde Iesus Christ or to his office: but rather we sende the people to the euerlasting sacrifice whereby we be reconcyled vnto God, so as we neede not any other meane or helpe than that. Moreover in steede of the materiall perfumes which were in the Temple, at this day wee offer vp prayers vnto God, as things that cast a sweete smell vnto him.

Furthermore whereas it is saide that God blessed the substance of Leuite, & accepted the worke of his handes, and that hee breaketh the backebones of all shee that set themselves against him. therby Moses doth vs to vnderstande that wee haue neede to pray our Lord Iesus Christ to maintaine those whom hee hath chofen and shoulded out to preach his worde. For all Satans seeking is to plucke vp all the seede, as wee see is come to passe. For the diuell hath founde out futtle shifts to make many sorts of shepherds, Churchmen, and Clergimen. Wee knowe that the number of the Popish Clergie is infinite. There are such a sort of offices, and so many lueries of men of the Church as they terme them, that a man cannot tell at what point to bee. If a man should reckon vp the orders of Friers, hee should bee at his wittes end, there is such a rabble of them as woulde amase a man. Yee shall see their gray Fryers, white Friers, blacke Friers, and Friers of all sortes. Againe there is such a howge heape of states and offices in the Popedome: as Patriarks, Archbishops, Bishops, Archdeacons, Deanes, and other inferiour offices; as woulde make a man to wonder. Besides this, there are a sort of Sacramentes, to deceiue men the better, and to giue a pompe and maiestie to al their gewgawes, which are but slights to serue Satan withall. For they bee all illusions framed in his workehouse. And of all this rout there is not so much as any one taile that doth his due tie in reaching Gods worde. Wee see then howe Satans wyllynesse is such, that hee will bring in maskingtoyes ynowe, and iuggling-trickes ynowe to holde still the worlde in error and superstition, vnder pretence that they may say, wee haue prelates, wee haue men of the Church, wee haue Clergimen. And in the meane while the things which our Lorde Iesus Christ ordained are abolished.

For this cause Moses saith, That God maintaineth Leuities substance, and that hee breaketh and enfresheth all such as set themselves against him. They that intende to serue God faithfully and to preach his worde, shall neuer want enemies to make warre against them, according as it is tolde vnto Ieremie, Go thy wayes, I haue appointed thee to fight. Insomuch that the man which serueth God in bearing his worde abroad faithfully shall neuer haue peace, nor goe vnpinched and vnuxed, nor bee without good store of enemies. But what? Heere Moses comforteth all such as employe themselves that way. Although the worlde bee against them, and it seme that they should bee ouerwhelmed euery day: yet will G O D maintaine them, and breake the heades of all their enemies; according to this which is saide vnto Ieremie, Go thy way, thou must fight: but thou shalt haue the vpper hand. Thou must bee faine to haue a foreheade of brasie, that thou maist set thy selfe against the whole worlde and withstande them. For in the ende they shall be all broken and ouerthrowen before thee. Seeing wee haue this promise, let vs hold our owne & be stedfast, though wee see the whole worlde steppe vp against vs, knowing that God will beate downe all that set themselves after that fashion against them which in deuour to serue him faithfully. Moreover let vs knowe also that this is spoken for all the faithfull, to the ende they should bee desirous to haue Gods worde maintained, and men to preach it, and that they should all reach their handes vnto them. Let euerie man in his degree doe the best he can, that such as do the duetie of Shepherds, (such as doe it, I say, and not such as bragge and boast of it), may be stablished and helped, so as there may bee an accorde betweene such as report themselves to bee the Children of God, and such as feede them with the foode that God giueth them. That then is the thing whereat Moses aimed. Let vs note further, how it is not without cause that Moses exhortheth the people to make such inreataunce for the blessing of Leuite and of his substance. For why? If wee bee desirous that God should continually prouide for his church: it behooueth vs to haue a care to pray for those to whom he hath committed the charge thereof. And if wee through our vnthankfulnesse cause not God to becaue vs of so great a benefite; let vs assure our selues that wee shall neuer want good Shepherds. Nowe then if our vnthankfulnesse cause not the contrarie, let vs knowe that our Lord will alwayes prouide vs of fit and able men, and that he will hold them vnder his safekeeping, and maintaine them in spite of Satan and all the force of the worlde.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchsafe to make vs to seele them more and more, that wee may mislike them: and therewithall to worke so mightily as we may not be turned away from him as wee haue beene, but that wee may proceede still in the renewment which he hath commanded vs, vntill we haue thoroughly attained the re-vnto, & that our Lord Iesus Christ do so reigne among among vs, as we may bee true priests vnto him, because that by his meanes wee also doe obtaine that grace and dignitie before God his father. And so let vs all say; Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

On Thursday the second of Iuly, 1556.

The CXCv. sermon, which is the fifth vpon the xxxij. Chapter.

12 Also he saide of Benjamin, The beloued of the Lorde shall dwell safelie by him. He shalbe a shadowe ouer him all the day, and he shall dwell betwixt his shoulders.

13 Also he said of Ioseph, His Land is blessed of the Lorde, through the heauenly sweetenesse of the dew, and of the watersprings lying beneath, 14 And through the sweetnesse of the fruits of the Sunne, and the sweetnesse of the influence of the Moone, 15 And through the toppe of the auncient mountaine, & through the sweetnesse of the euerlasting hilles, 16 And through the sweetnesse of the earth, and the plentifulnesse therof. And the good fauour of him that dwelt in the bush, shall come plentifully vpon the heade of Ioseph, and vpon the Crowne of the Nazarits head among his brethren.

17 His beawtie is as the first borne of a bull, and his hornes are as the hornes of an Vnicorne. With them shall hee dash the people together vnto the ends of the earth. These are the thousands of Ephraim and the thousands of Manasses.

Yesterday in the blessing of Leuie, we sawe this promise, that God will maintaine such as preach his worde faithfully, in-40 somuch that although they haue many enemies in this world, and bee assailed on all sides; yet are they sure that God will shewe himselfe on their side, and strengthen them when he seeth that Satan streyneth himself by all meanes to make cleane riddance of them. And therein he hath an eye to y welfare of all his people. For Gods Church shoulde perish, if it were not preferued by good and pure doctrine. God then must bee iaine to reach out his mightie hande ouer all those which preach his word, to the intent they may 50 be maintained though all the world striue to ouerthrow them.

Nowe he speaketh of Benjamin; and he saith, That he shall dwell safely by God, and be his welbeloued; and that God will shelter him and dwell betwixt his shoulders. I haue told you already that heere Moses confirmeth and warranteth the promises which God had vttered afore by the mouth of Iacob; or else that where there was any hardnesse in them, Moses mitigateth the same, to the intent that the faithfull should not bee troubled out of measure. As touching the tribe of Benjamin, Iacob had saide that it shoulde bee like a 60 woofe that snareth vp his pray in the morning, and diuideth the spoile at night. For that is the natue fenic. Benjamin then shalbe as a rauening woofe, alwayes giuen to the pray: in somuch that when hee hath robbed in the morning, he shall diuide the spoile at night also. It is a harde condition that a people shoulde liue vpon robbing and rauening: and it might seeme by that meanes that they were disgraded. For we knowe that all men will hate them that vse such violence and liue vpon the spoile of other men by doing them harme and annoyance. To be short, it seemeth that the tribe of Benjamin shoulde become as robbers. Truly this was spoken in respect that in the end they shoulde bee placed in the borders or marches of two kingdomes; which thing came to passe when the kingdome of Israel was departed from the tribe of Iuda. For then the one halfe of the tribe of Benjamin abode on the one side, and the other halfe on the other side; by reason whereof they were as members rent in peeces. And because the first brunts lighted vpon them, so as they were faine to beare the first blowes; it behooued them also to be men of warre. That was the thing which Iacob had an eye vnto. Yet coulde it not bee but that the Beniamits must bee grieued, seeing that 60 God did set them there, to maintaine themselves by violence, and to bee alwayes with sworde in hande. It was a verie harde case, whereat the faithfull might be fore grieued and disquieted. Heere therefore Moses qualifieth the thing which might seeme ouer sharpe in y Prophetic of Iacob; in respect wherof he saith y

Benjamin shall be Gods dwelling, and that he shall dwell safely by him. Soothly it was requisite that the Beniamits, (at leastwise the faithfull sort of the) should be comforted, because there besel horrible enormities, so as it might have seemed that God had appointed that house to bee as a looking-glasse of his wrath. At one time all the people of Israel were faine to set themselves against them to roote them out. And in very deepe there was a solemne othe taken to haue slaine them all so as one man of them should not have beene left aliue: and they were driuen to deuiſe meanes howe to saue fower hundred men which were not in the battell, but were by chance in a Towne neere by. Ye see then how the tribe of Benjamin should haue beene rooted out of the world.

Now it might seeme that by this meanes Satan had made a breach which God foresawe not before it was come to passe, or else that hee had failed of his promise in maintaining the offspring of Abraham. This (say I) was a great temptation. And therefore not without cause doth Moses preuent it, and giue a good remedy to such as could patiently beare the punishment that God sent vpon them: and he saith that yet for all that, that tribe should not cease to be beloved of God, and to dwell by him in safetie as vnder his hande. But wee must note that this profited not al of them in general. For the tribe of Benjamin was great, and wee see there went a great armie of them to the fielde: And needes must it bee that they were of great force, when all the people of Israel were faine to go to battell to punish the cursed deepe which had bene committed in murdering the Leuites wife, and the abominable sinne of Sodome which had reigned in the Citie of Gaba; which had bene suffered by all the Beniamits; insomuch that to mans seeming, God was minded to haue thundred downe vpon them, to shewe the like vengeance as he had done afore in Sodome & Ghomorre. It was not therefore for any small number to haue done this. And so wee haue to gather, that when God maketh any promise to a Nation, a great number of them shal not faile to perish; but yet those which call vpon his name purely shall be preserved, as it is saide in Ioe1. Although there seeme to be some water-floude to ouerflowe all; yet will God finde incomprehensible meanes to drawe his seruantes out of it, so as they shall not perish with the multitude. And therefore when wee haue any promise, let vs bethinke our selues, and receiue it with purenesse of faith: and then let vs not doubt but it shal be performed. But if we thinke that God should be bound vnto vs, because we haue heard his promise; and in the meane while bee disordred and carelesse of him, so as it may rather seeme that we would haue nothing at all to doe with him: surely hee can well shewe himselfe to be faithfull and performe his saying, & yet wee notwithstanding shall perish, so as the same shall stande vs in no steade. And indeede, we see how God worketh after that manner for the preservation of the state of his Church. He faith generally y he is our defender: & yet notwithstanding we see y the greatest number goes to wrecke, and that the number which remaineth is very small. Yea, but yet doth God continually bring to passe, that his Church abyedeth vnquenched, and that there is still some remnant left, according to this saying of Esay, Esay 1. 9. that he will reserue still some little seede. And therefore let vs beware that we be of the seede which God reserueth to himselfe, when hee punisheth those which turne away from him, notwithstanding that they did erst beare the name and title to bee of his house, and in deepe God did direct the promises of saluation vnto them, but they receiued them not. Wherefore let vs take heede that wee run not into disorder with the greater number.

And it is saide expressly, that God will shrowde him, dwelling beseeue his shoulders. Heere Moses sheweth why God will maintaine the tribe of Benjamin, which notwithstanding might seeme to be vtterly perished: namely for y hee would dwell vpon his shoulders. For the temple was builded in the tribe of Benjamin. Although the kingdome was in the tribe of Iuda, and that the kings house also was set there: yet in the parting of their inheritances, the mountaine of Sion fell to the lot of the Beniamits. God then dwelt vpon his shoulders or betweene his shoulders; as if a man should beare some burthen vpon his necke, so doeth God declare that Benjamin did partly beare him as I haue tolde you, because it was his will to dwell vpon him and to haue his Temple there. And he speaketh of his shoulders as in respect of mount Sion. And so forasmuch as Benjamin did beare God vpon his shoulders, that is to say, because the Temple wherein it was Gods will to be serued, was builded in the tribe of Benjamin, and the people were to assemble on Sion to doe homage vnto God, and Benjamin serued to that purpose: therefore it is saide that God was (after a sort) vpon his shoulders. That then is the reason why Benjamin was well beloved of God. Nor that he had any whit deserued it: for wherof came it y God chose mount Sion for his dwellingplace? Euen of his owne free loue, which hee bare to Benjamin. So then let vs not dreame that Benjamin prevented Gods grace with any worthinesse: but Moses declareth, that Gods wttirng of his loue and fauour towards the tribe of Benjamin, & that there should be a manifest recorde and token thereof in the building of the Temple there, and that the tribe of Benjamin should euer continue vnder Gods protection; are things linked together. Insomuch that although that tribe seemed to bee left vp to the spoile, and that their enemies had gotten the ouerhande of them: yet woulde God shewe himselfe pitifull to maintaine them still. True it is that in the ende all that Countrie was harried, and wee see how the Prophet Ieremie saith thereof, that Rachel mourned for her children (for Benjamin came of her) and sorrowed to see such desolation & wast made, & could not be comforted because all were destroy.

destroyed, and notydings coulde be brought vnto her of any residue that remained, but these sawe that all her bloude was shed, wherupon shee was in anguish and as a woman forlorne. Surely Rachel was at that time deade: but the Prophet Ieremie speaketh of her in way of a similitude, and setteth her as a mother vpon a scaffold weeping and lamenting to see one cut the throats of all her children. Thus ye see what befell; but that was an vtter extremitie. Yet for all this, God ceased not to performe his promises; but at the ende euē in the middes of Babylon, euē in that gulf, he rescued a remnāt of Benjamin, which returned home with the tribe of Iuda. They that were much more excellent in dignitie became as banished folk, and God forsooke them as rotten members, so as they returned not any more into the inheritance of y<sup>e</sup> land of Chanaan, & the restingplace which god had foreappointed to their fathers. Ye see then how God continued still his grace towards the tribe of Benjamin; not that they had not horrible punishments, as it fell out afterwarde, but that God by his infinite goodnes ouercame the naughtinesse of men.

To bee short, let vs note, that when God giueth vs his promises after that maner; they shal seeme to be disappointed of their effect and performāce through the vnthankfulness of y<sup>e</sup> world, for y<sup>e</sup> there are a great many which refuse Gods goodnes & shut the gate against him, so as they be not partakers thereof. That is the cause why God sheweth not himselfe liberal towards vs any more. For if we could skill to inioy his goodnes; surely he would alwayes ougo our expectation, & all our wishes. But what? We will haue him to content vs, and to please vs in all cases: and in the meane while it should seeme that wee haue conspired against him, to keepe him back from doing vs good. Therefore let vs not thinke it strange if God perform not his promises which he hath made vnto vs with his owne mouth; for we our selues be y<sup>e</sup> cause thereof. Neuer the later, although the world be so malicious and froward, that (to all seeming) men would wilfully disappoint all Gods gracious dealings: yet notwithstanding let vs not doubt but that there shall euer be some smal number whom God wil maintaine. Onely let vs inuēour to lue vnder Gods wings, that we may be preferred by him, & suffer him to dwell betwene our shoulders. Wee heare what warning S. Paul giueth vs thereof, how he saith y<sup>e</sup> we must beare the Lorde both in our bodies & in our soules. True it is that there is not now any material temple builded any where, wherein to do sacrifice: but euery of vs is y<sup>e</sup> temple of God, and that is with condition that wee shoulde beare him, according to S. Pauls saying, who vseth the same word, And how do we beare him? In knowing that it belongeth to him to be the soueraine & to raigne ouer vs, and to haue al preheminence; & that it behooueth vs to bow downe our neckes to receiue his yoke, and to obey him in al respects. And if we do so, let vs not doubt but that God watcheth for vs continually, so as all the assaults and temptations of the world shal not preuaile any thing at all against vs. Inson much that although we be like to perish a hundred times, yea and to bee ouerwhelmed; yet will he vtter forth his power to preferre vs, and we shalbe saued in the mids of death, so as we may keepe on our course stil. When thunder seemeth to come downe from aboue, & nothing is to bee seene vpon earth but confusion euerywhere, then let vs not doubt but God giueth vs incomprehensible safetie. Thus much concerning the tribe of Benjamin.

Now cometh Moses to the tribe of Ioseph and saith; That his lande shalbe blessed of God with the delectable fruires of the Sunne, with the fruires of the Moone, with the pleasures of the Dew from aboue, and of the depths from beneath, that is to say, of fountaines and watersprings which giue moisture and nourishment to the earth. That his honour should be as the first borne of a bull; that he shall haue excellent hornes, wherewith to push against his enemies; that hee shall haue the aide mountaines, and the pleasant hilles, where shalbe nothing but sweetene. And afterward in the end it is laide, That all these things shall come vpon the heade of Ioseph, & vpon the Crowne of the heade of the Nazarite of his brothers. Here we may see how the intent of Moses was to confirme the things that Iacob had spoken afore: for he vseth many of the same words which are in the nine and fortieth Chapter of Genesis. Partly then Moses doeth but make a rehearfall of the things which had bene written in the person of Iacob: and that is not superfluous: but God reneweth and facifieth his promises, to the ende they shoulde be the more assured. And such confirmation also was needfull, to the intent that the other tribes shoulde not grudge against the tribes of Ioseph. Wee knowe that the people of Israel were verie full of quareling and rebellion, and that it was a verie harde matter to holde them in awe. Nowe Iacob had giuen double portion to his sonne Ioseph, because hee had two children, Ephraim and Manasse. Hee had saide that Ioseph shoulde represent two heades in the house, because the tribe of Leuie was excluded and had no portion in the Lande, but onely rooke the tenthes and Offerings. Their successours therefore might haue saide, In deece it was the will of our father Iacob to giue this aduantage to his sonne Ioseph, howbeit that was vpon our earnest affection, because Ioseph had succoured him in his neede, and sedde our fathers in the time of famine. But what? Shoulde they therefore haue two heads here, and wee be so much abated? Because the people might still haue pleaded for the partition which had bin assigned, and haue striven when they had bin come into the Land of Chanaan; Moses confirmeth the thing which had bene declared afore; that is to wit, that Ioseph should hold still the portion y<sup>e</sup> had bin giuen vnto him, & represent two chiefe houses in y<sup>e</sup> lineage of Iacob, & that there shoulde be ten thousands of Ephraim & thousand of Manasse. We see now to what purpose Moses rehearsed y<sup>e</sup> words of Iacob.

And let vs make also that wheras he saith, what he is the Nazarine among his brethren, the word which he vlieth may bee taken for a Crowne, as if he should say, Hee shall be the glorie of his brethren. True it is that this continued not for euer; it was but a temporall dignitie, because that in the end it behooued the tribe of Iuda to attaine to the royall scepter, and to haue the soueraintie ouer all the whole bodie. And then was Ioseph also brought vnder obedience. But yet for a time hee was the crowne of his brethren. Yet notwithstanding, he fettereth downe the worde of Separation. So then, he was separated from among his brethren; not in that hee was solde into Egypt as some haue expounded it, for that is cleane contrarie. But rather hee is termed a Nazarine in way of honour, for that God had chosen him and shouled him out by himselfe, so as hee was not of the common sort, but had as it were a first begottenship, in respect whereof he tooke double portion of inheritance. That is the cause why hee was called a Nazarite.

And here we haue to marke first of all, that al that euer hath bene rehearsed by Moses, or said before by Iacob, was a very prophesie that came from God, so as it could not haue bin vttered by the mouth of mā, except God had gouerned him by his holy spirite. And why? For Moses neuer came in the land of Chanaan, as we knowe. And as for Iacob, he dyed more than three hundred yeares before the partitiō of the Land was made. How then coulde he make it? And euen hereby wee see, that there was no casualtie or chaunce in the matter. For Iacob (as wee shall see againe in due place,) assigneth vnto Nephthalim the countrie on the seacoast, and pointeth out euery man his portion there. And howe is it possible that he should hit so right vpon it? Surely he did it not of his owne imagination; but God who holdeth the lottes in his hand (as saith Salomon,) and who by his wonderfull prouidence which is hidden from vs, disposeth of the things which seeme to come by chaunce; vttered by Iacobs mouth what he intended to do. And nowe he sheweth that when the people are come into the lande, nothing shall happen but by his direction. Nowe wee know that the tribe of Ephraim and Manasies were planted in so fat and fertile a soile, that it was the very storehouse of the Lande. True it is that other of the tribes, as the tribe of Aser, had great Corne countries; but these countries were stored with all kinde of commodities besides: they were the pleasantest and plentifullest Countries of all the lande of Iurie. Nowe then we may easily gather, that in this case Moses hath not set forth any thing of his owne braine; but that the holy Ghost did in very deede gouerne his tongue. And therefore we haue a great warrant of all his doctrine, in that we see that vnder the name and authoritie of God, hee fettereth such order in things to come which a man would neuer haue thought of. Sith we heare this, it is all one as if God reached out his hand from heauen, and came to authorise y<sup>e</sup> doctrine which Moses deliuered, and to shew that he is y<sup>e</sup> author therof; and that it proceedeth from him, neither ought men to doubt thereof as though it came from some creature. And let vs marke that well. For we knowe that by nature we be inclined to distrust: and were it not that we be helde vp, we should continually be shakē downe, & we should not neede any thing to turne vs aside from the right way, & from the certaintie of our faith. For this caule therefore let vs marke well howe it is told vs heere, that God in these Propheesies hath shewed vndoubtedly, howe it was hee that was the guider of Moses; and that he vlied his seruice in such wise, as we may well say that we receiue his doctrine from God, and that it is grounded vpon his vnchangeable power, & y<sup>e</sup> it is the vnfallible truth. And why? For it was not inuented by man.

But nowe let vs come to the contents of this blessing. It is said that Iosephs Land shall be blessed of God, as well with the dew from above, as with fountaines and wel springs from beneath; that is to say, that God would so water the land both from above and beneath, that it should be fat & fruitefull. Nowe here we see howe it is not for nought y<sup>e</sup> we be commaunded to seeke our dayly breade at Gods hande. For howe commeth it to passe that y<sup>e</sup> earth bringeth forth frutes for our sustenance? It is because God moyiteneth it. It is not said y<sup>e</sup> the earth hath substance in it self, neither is it said that y<sup>e</sup> heauen or the fountaines do giue it simply of themselves: but it is God that sendeth the dew, it is God that maketh the water springs to shedd out; so y<sup>e</sup> he is to haue the praise of all the substance which we haue, whensoever we be fed and nourished therewith. Ye see then how God hath such a care of our bodies, and of this corruptible life, that we cannot eate one bit of bread which commeth not from him & of his mere liberality. And indeede it standeth vs in hande to acquaint our selues well herewith. For sith it is told vs y<sup>e</sup> we canot haue so much as one silic mite of these goods, no not euen of these transitory goods, but we must receiue it at gods hand: What shal befall in the things y<sup>e</sup> are much more excellent? If I want but a bit of breade, I ought of duty to aske it of God, & to acknowledge y<sup>e</sup> it is his peculiar office to feede me. And when y<sup>e</sup> case concerneth the attainmet of y<sup>e</sup> heauenly life & the euerlasting saluation; shal I the go seek it elsewhere than at Gods hand? Or shall I thinke to haue it in my selfe? What an ouerweening were that? We see then how the bread and the bodily soode which is giuen vs, ought to be as a meane to lift vs vp higher, to make vs to thinke our selues beholden to God and to his bountifullnes for all y<sup>e</sup> we haue, both of body and soule and all. Marke that for one point.

Again, where as in this place Ioseph is called A Nazarite among his brethren; we see howe God bestoweth his gracious goodnes where hee listeth, euen contrary to the opinion of men, yea & cleane contrary to al expectation. Ioseph was indeede separated from his brothers; yea and y<sup>e</sup> was as by being appointed vnto death, they had conspired against him to kill him. And where as he was yet saued, it was but to bee cast into a pit and and there to pyne away , which was a crueller death than if they had cut his throte out of hād. In the end, the greatest fauour that hee founde, was that he was sold into a barbarous nation to strange & vnknown persons. Againe, when he came into Egypt, he was thrust into the bottom of a dungeon, & he was put into the stockes, according to this saying of the Psalm. Y the iron wounded him & nipped him to the heart. Yee see then how Ioseph is separated not only from his fathers house, but also from y whole world; he is cut off from mankind as a dead person; he is like to rot in a dungeon. But God separated him after another maner in his wunderful coušel. And therefore it is sayd, that hee was as a starre which was to be worshipped of y Sunne & of the Moone, and of all the rest of the stars. Which was as much to say, as that all his house should stoop to him & be subiect to him, so as his sheafe should haue preheminance, and all the other sheaues fall downe: euen because god had decreed it in his own counsaile. And so we see that when all the worlde thought to haue thrust Ioseph downe into the pit: then God exalted him in spite of men. Thus yee see howe God succoureth his seruantes after a wonderfull fashion. If we looke vpon our state as it appeareth to the viewe of men: we may seeme as it were reiectēd, death seemeth to threaten vs, and we seeme to be beseged with it on all sides, it seemeth that we should be ouerwhelmed euey minute of an houre, & that we should be eaten vp quyte & cleane. Lo at what point wee be! But God who hath sanctified vs, & doeth as it were broode vs vnder the shadow of his wings, if we put our trust in him & flee to him for reuge; will shew that his blessing of vs is not in vaine; but that he hath so separated vs, y though all the earth were moued, & that we were afflicted as wel as the wicked, & wrapped with them in the same curse; yet notwithstanding hee will maintaine vs by his grace, & euen in the middes of death alway find meane to draw vs out to saluation. That is the thing which wee haue to marke in that Ioseph is called a Nazarite amōg his brethren. So that if we haue any advantage or priuilege, if we be exempted from any perill, if we be enriched w any goods be it of body or of soule; all those things proceed of Gods sanctifying & choosing of vs to himself, & we ought to yield y praise therof to his only free goodnes.

And to the intent these things may be taken to be y more certaine, it is said that they shall light vpon the head of Ioseph. Moses then declareth that these things are not a sound which vanisheth in the aire; but y God wil giue effect to his word so as his blessing shall be poured out vpon the lineage of Ioseph. For thereby he assureth vs as if he should say. No! speake nowe in the name of God, let no man think that I gesse at aduerture concerning things to come: for God will performe al things vpon Iosephs head; y is to say, either vpon Iosephs own person or cle vpon his children. For here the case concerneth those y come of his race. God therefore wil shewe by y effect, how it is he y hath spoken by my mouth,

Now in the ende, he doeth also compare his beautie to a yong Bull & an Vnicorne; to shewe that he shal not onely haue abundantly wherewith to liue, but also that he shall haue strength to withstand his toes & be preferred. For we know we haue neede of two things; the one is that we desire God to blesse vs & to giue vs sustenance; & againe that wee may be defended from our enemies which assaile vs. Both these things are here comprised in the image of Ioseph. For it is sayd that God will blesse him in his lande, so as it shal be verie fruitfull: and also that he will giue him strength, whereby hee shall haue the vpper hande of his enemies, yea and driue them away to the vttemost borders of the world.

For a conclusion Moses addeth that there shall be ten thousand of Ephraim, & thousand of Manasses. His meaning is that these two trybes shall come to be headhouses. For by this worde thousand, the Hebrewes are wont to betoke as it were Bayliwikes & Prouostships; like as when it is said, And thou Bethleem in the land of Ephraim, art of the least among the thousand of Iuda; that is to say, if a man consider thy Prouostships and Bayliwikes, thou art the least of all; but yet shall the redeemer come of thee. I alledge this text to shewe what this worde thousand importeth. Now then, when Moses speaketh here of [thousand] he meanceth briefly that Ephraim who was one of Iosephs children, should make a headhouse or trybe, so as he should haue his state of gouernement & officers by himself; and also that Manasses who was another of Iosephs sonnes, should likewise haue his order and state of gouernement with vnder officers as wel as Iuda, Benjamin, Issachar & the rest of y other trybes had. Let that serue for one point.

But by the way it is sayd, the thousand of Ephraim, & the thousand of Manasse. Here he maketh Ephraim tenfold greater than his brother: yet was Manasses in verie deede the elder sonne of Ioseph: but at such time as their grandfather [Iacob] blessed them, he declared that Ephraim should be greater than his brother Manasses. Thus was the order of nature quyte changed, in that God gaue the birthright of the firstbotten to the yonger sonne; to shew y we bring not any thing of our own vnto god, but y we receiue al things of his mere goodnes, & y he disposeth of vs at his pleasure, without being bound therunto. And this hath God shewed by a figure in y persons of Manasses & Ephraim. For it lay not in Iacobs power to make Ephraim greater than Manasses: the matter concerned not y inheriting of y countrey only, but also the hauing of a Trybe. And y same is called a special gift of God. Although riches also do come of him, yet wil he haue me to acknowledge, y to haue illue is a peculiar gift which cannot be gotte by cunning nor by any other meane. The scripture then in speaking so, doth wel shew that it lyeth not in the power of any creature, to say, This man shall growe into a great people, as Iacob

K k k k k sayd, said, & yet he could not then discern them a-funder by outward sight. For he was blinde for age. And when Ioseph came & brought him his Gen 48. 10. two children, he did set Manasses the elder to 13. his right hand, & Ephraim to his left; to the end that Iacob in blessing them (as the fashion and ceremonie then was) should lay his right hand vpon Manasses, & his left vpon Ephraim. But Iacob putting his hands croosely, did lay his right hand vpon the yonger, & his left hand vpon the elder. Whereat Ioseph sayd, Sir ye mistake them. No, no, sayd Iacob; let mee alone, I doe not through ignorance: for he that is the inferior by nature, must be the greater; God hath so ordeined it. Behold here a filie blind soule, an old man, such a one as seemeth to dote for age: he speaketh of things vnknown, & yet for all that, hee dealeth in that behalfe as if hee were God sitting in his seat. And in very deede (as I haue told you afore) He was Gods deputie and spake by his autoritie. So then, to confirme the prophesies which had bin vttered by the mouth of Iacob, Moses sayeth, these bee the ten thousands of Ephraim. Although he be the yonger brother, yet shall he exceede his elder brother in number of people, & in al other things: and according hereunto, in the end there was such prehemine gien to that trybe, that the other ten trybes of Israell were comprehended vnder it. When the Prophets name Ephraim, it is a comprehending of all the ten trybes together; in somuch that euen Ruben who was the eldest of all, lay hid vnder the wings of Ephraim. And who knew that? Our Lord did so vtter it by the mouth of those whom he had appointed in his place. And so we see againe the thing that I said afore, namely that in this case Moses was not a priuate person, ne spake at random, nor of his owne head; but was directed by God, to the intent it might be knowne, that that people was gouerned by speciall meanes as a people chosen and picked out by God from the rest of the world. True it is that God is the generall creator of all mankind, and that all people are his. Yet notwithstanding, forasmuch as he had chosen the linage of Abraham; it was his will to haue his power the better knowne there, & to holde them as his household folke, & nearer alyed vnto him. And therefore it was good reason that the things which are declared here, should be knowne of al y Jewes, & that by that meanes they should be prouoked to blesse the name of God, acknowledging howe greatly they were bound & tied vnto him, for that he had so withdrawn them from al other nations, & vouchsafed to make them feele him to be their father, seeing he had adopted them to be his children.

Now let vs come to the things that besell.
 True it is that God hath wel performed al that he had spoken. And thereby wee see that the children of Ioseph were not disapointed of their expectation, neither was any of al those promises void. But yet for al that; they tooke no great benefite by them, but rather it came to passe through their own lewdnes, that they were of necessitie turned to their harme and vndoing.

Wherin we see y men are so vntoward, y they change all y euer God had ordeyned for their welfare: in so much that when he blesseth them, they turne his blessing into a curse; when he of-fereth them life, they turne it into death; & they not only dim y light, but also turne it into darknes. But what besell to the Trybe of Ephraim?
 It was aduanced as it were by miracle, and against the order of nature, through the oocly blessing of God. And yet for all this, it caused y 10 body [of the common wealc] to be rent & torne afunder, Gods seruice to bee corrupted & peruerted, ydolatry to reigne in the holy land, God to be defrauded and bereft of his inheritance, and all manner of infections to be brought in.
 Whereupon infused forthwith all manner of mischiefe, so as they did eate vp one another like dogs and cartes, and there was such deadly enmitie betweene the two kingdoms of Iuda & Esay. 7. 1.
 Israell, that they went to seeke help of the Heathen & Infidels to ouerthrow one another: and was not y a duellish rage? & yet all this proceded from the trybe of Ephraim. If a man should say y Gods blessing was the cause thereof, then is there a double malice to be seene in y behalfe.
 For they ought the rather to haue bin incoura-ged to magnifie Gods name, & to walke in his feare, seeing he had so greatly bounde them to him. But they turned y benefite to the contrary, as I haue shewed already, & therefore it was of necessitie y all those blessings were taken from them, & moreover y they were vnto them an occasion of decay; I say they were the occasion, howbeit not the cause. Yea, but yet was y blame to be imputed vnto them, because they themselues were the alterers of Gods order. What is to be done then? Let vs vnderstand that when God shal haue fed vs farin this world, so as wee haue the fruits of the earth, yea & be as it were made drunken with the things that delight vs, yet if we haue not the chiefe poynt, the residue 40 shalbe sold vs ful deere. Then let vs not so gre-tly esteeme the temporall & transitory goods, that we should not euermore haue an eye to y chiefe poynt, which is y God receiues vs for his children, that we abide vnder his gouernement, that wee call vpon him as our father, howe-it truly and vnfaignedly, resorting rightly vnto him and submitting our selues wholly to his wil; knowing that as soone as wee be neuer so 50 liide separated from him, it cannot bee but that miserie and confusion must needes fall vpon vs.
 So then, let vs esteeme of the transitorie benefits which God bestoweth vpon vs in this world; but let vs esteem them in their degree, so as we be not tyed to them, ne set not our chiefe desire vpon them. If God giue vs of them, let vs enioy them with al sobrietie; and let vs not set our minds too much vpon them. Again, if he giue vs them not, let vs beare our pouertie patiently, & keepe on our way still. And in y meane while let vs take our cōtentment & rest in y spiritual goods which God granteth vs, in y he vouchsafeth to certifie vs y he is our father, in y he calleth vs vnto him daily, in y he telleth vs y we shal finde fauor at his hand for our lord Iesus Christs sake.

Let the hauing of these things suffice vs, and let vs not repyne at the aduersities, griefes, & troubles which we haue in this world: neither let vs enuye such as are here in better case than wee; but when we see the vnbeleeuers liue at ease, & haue all their pleasures, so as they want not any thing; let vs haue an eye to the trybe of Ephraim, & consider the great wealth both of the same, & also of the trybe of Manasses. They were fed at their pleasure; but what? They glutted themselves with Gods benefites, and were choked with them for their owne vnthankfulness. Now then, let this serue to restraine vs fro repnyng at those with whome God dealeth so liberally in this world, and to whom he sheweth himselfe so bountifull. Let not vs bee grieued thereat. For why? We haue the goods which are of farre greater value: that is to wit, the things that concerne our saluation. For seeing y<sup>e</sup> God hath begunne to worke after that fashion in vs by his holy spirit; let vs seeke for the heavenly riches wherunto he calleth vs from day to day till we haue the full fruition of them at the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ.

Now let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs perceiue them more & more, and that therewithall when wee enjoy here neuer so many benefites, and bee fedde by his hande, wee may not bee so rebellious and sleepe, as not to haue our myndes continually lifted vp to heauen, to giue thanks to him for all his benefites, and to serue him with the earnestest good will; and that by these transitorie benefites, we may be put to minde to seeke all things in him which belong to y<sup>e</sup> heavenly life, knowing that we shall be vterly destitute & barreine of them, vntill he youchesafe to impart them vnto vs, at leastwise according to the measure & portion of his meere goodnes, because that wee on our side deserue not any thing at all. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people & nations of the earth, &c;

18 Also he saide of Zabulon, Reioyce thou Zabulon in thy going out: and thou Isachar in thy Tents.

19 They shall call the people into the mountaine, where they shall sacrifice the sacrifice of righteousnes. For they shall sucke the abundance of the sea, and the hidden treasures of the sand.

Yesterday in the blessing of Ioseph, we saw how Moses referred all things to Gods grace, which men are comonly wont to attribute vnto fortune. And it is a doctrine well worthy to be marked because of our vnthankfulness. For vnlesse wee bee enforced to acknowledge Gods goodnes, it shall alwayes lye buried for vs, and wee seeke things here below to buse our wits vpon; in so much that when God shall haue giuen vs neuer so sufficient occasion to magnifie his grace; yet do wee make none account of it. Therefore it behooueth vs to be warned to lise vp our wits and mindes aloft, that wee may doe homage vnto God, for all the benefites which we receiue at his hand. Also we haue to marke herein the thing that is set downe by Moses. He sayeth that all the good which Ioseph and all his whole lineage shall haue, shall come of the free fauour of him which dwelt in the bush. And no dout but that thereby he meaneth God. Why then doeth hee mention the bush here? For at the first sight it seemeth a fond thing, & seruing to no purpose but to leade the ignorant and the weaklings into superstition. We knowe that the holy scripture speaking of God, sayth that hee dwelleth in heauen. Nor that his maiestie is inclosed there: for his beeing is infinite; it containeth all creatures, as is sayde in other textes. But this worde Heauen serueth to plucke vs from the worlde, when wee thinke vpon God, to the intent that when wee goe about to worship him, wee imagine not any earthlineesse in him, but consider that hee surmounteth all things, and that wee ought to thinke of him farre otherwise than we can conceiue. Nowe seeing that the holy Scripture pitcheth Gods tent in heauen, to the ende wee should be lifted vp aboue all the worlde & aboue all creatures when wee thinke vpon him: why doeth Moses in this place set him in the Bush? It is because God had there shewed himselfe vnto him. And it behooueth vs to note that ther are two dyuerse fashions of speaking in the holy scripture, when God calleth vs vnto him. Neuertheless, this diuersitie is not to draw vs into contrary opinions: they meete both in one. As how? Sometimes God sheweth vs what his glory is, to the intent wee shoulde bee fully resolued of this poynt, that hee is incomprehensible, and that wee ought to worship him with all humilitie, & that we must not looke to forge him after our fancie, or to make him like to our selues, by transforming after our own imagination. Therefore when the holy scripture setteth forth Gods maiestic so high as we be abashed at it, yea & euen y very Angels of heauen, accordingly as it is said that the Cherubins hyde their faces, because they cannot abyde to looke vpon the maiestic so great and infinite as it is in God: therein it is shewed vs that wee must needs stoop vnder such greatesse and highnesse. But yet therewithall God considereth how it is for our benefite to haue some familiaritie with him: & thereupon he yeeldeth to our rudenesse, and taketh vpon him as it were a newe shape, howbeit not which is contrarie ( as I said afore; ) but to the intent that wee shoulde not bee feared, nor take occasion to shrink from him. Now then, he allureth vs gently, and therewithal hee stoopeth to vs & maketh himself as it were meane vnto vs. And to that end haue the sacraments bin referred at all times. Like as at this day still in Baptisme we see the water; and in the Lorders supper we see the bread & the wine. And what is the cause that our Lorde Iesus Christ, who is the liuely image of God his father, & in whome dwelleth the whole fulnesse of the godhead bodily; what is the cause (say I) that hee sheweth himselfe to vs in corruptible things, and in the elements of the world? It is for our infirmities sake, because we cannot approach to his spiritual power. That is the very cause why he figureth his graces vnder the visible elements: & in them ought we to behold the heauenly power of his holy spirite. That is the seconde fashion which God vseth in reuealing himselfe vnto vs, the which is answerable to our rudenesse. But wee see howe hee shewed himselfe to the fathers of old time vnder certeine shapes. As for example when he talked with Iacob in Bethel, it was because Iacob needed such confirmation. True it is that he ceased not to looke vp to heauen stil when he worshipped God. But yet for all that, he had the more familiar access vnto God by his comming downe so lowe at that time. And for the same cause also, when Iacob was to remoue from one place to another, he offered sacrifice to the God of Bethel. Why to the God of Bethel? Was there a God shut vp there? No, for we see that euen they which would needs make a God in Bethel, that is to say, which would haue builded vp a temple there, & offered sacrifices there; were abominable vnto God. In so much that God sayth that it is Bethauen, the place of wickednes; and no more his house: he forsaketh & disclaimeh it vterly, eue because they abused the reuelation that was giuen to their father Iacob in that place. As for Iacob, he knewe howe to benefite himselfe by it. For he knewe that God had not changed his nature, ne was inclosed in any certaine place, but that by that meane he meant to draw him vnto him familiarly. Iacob then receiued the gage that was giuen vnto him, to the intent it might be knowne that he worshipped not some God at aduenture, as the Heathen did: but that his faith was sure and vnfallible. That is the cause why he expressly mentioneth Iacobs worshipping of the God of Bethel, that is to say, not a God which was vnknownen to him, nor a God that was forged of mortall mans braine, a God but in surmize & opinio: but the God of whom he was fully assured, because he had the truth whereof he was thoroughly sure. And euen so is it now in the case of Moses. He saith, the God which shewed himselfe to me in the bush, 10 God shew his fauour towards the trybe of Ioseph. In saying so, Moses protesteth that he setteth not downe some ydol that had bin forged of late time, ne bringeth in the superstitions of any heathen folke, Infidels, or ydolaters: after which maner we see the Papises & Turkes do, who speake much of God, but in the mean while they haue no assurance, all their fond dotages are grounded but vpon supposals, and all their Apes toys are founded but vpon their owne good intent as they terme it. For it is starke diuelishnes when men presume vpon their owne selfelikings, and it is an opening of helgates to them to plunge themselues in the bottomlesse pit. Lo what commeth of that which men terme good intent, & of the things which they haue imagined & dreamed in their own brayne. But as for vs, we must haue a sure leaning stocke, & such a one as wil not swaue, so as we may say, we haue a God which is not vnknownen nor hidden from vs. Now then in speaking of the God that had appeared to him in the bush, he meant here to certifie the promise yet so much y better: as if he should say, I speake not at random, my words are no flying tales: but it is God that hath ordeined mee, & at such time as it pleased him that I should deliuer his people out of the land of Egypt, he appeared to me in the bush, & there I knew his maiestic. So then, the certeinie which I haue of my calling, & of the things which I haue hitherto done by his commandement, ought to make mee continue stil, to shew that the same God wil performe his promises which are contained here, & specially his fauor & free goodnes shal rest vpo y trybe of Ioseph.

Now of this text we haue to gather, y when we speake of God we must not wander too and fro, but to the intent we may be thoroughly assured, & that we may hold our selues in awe, we must consider after what manner God hath reuealed himself vnto vs. But I haue told you already y our lord Iesus Christ is his liuely image; & therefore it behooueth vs to seeke him there. And the very cause why the wretched worlde hath bin beguyled by the deceites & illusions of Satan, is that they haue not held themselues simply to our Lord Iesus Christ. Whence spring so many disorders at this day in the popedom, but of this, that (as they themselues say in their proverbs) Iesus Christ is not knownen, nor can be discerned from among his Apostles. For they haue bereit him of the glory, power & grace which God his father had committed vnto him. To be short, forasmuch as our Lorde Iesus hath bin as it were buried, therefore superstitions haue increased more & more, so as ther hath bin no end nor measure of the, & therefore no maruel though though there haue bene so horrible a Babylon [that is to say confusion] there. Let vs learne then to know the liuing God as he sheweth him selfe vnto vs, & to imprison all our wits . And forasmuch as he hath most perfectly revealed himself in our Lord Iesus Christ; let vs not seeke any other knowledge than that, neither let vs swarue one way or other from the same.

But now let vs come to that which Moses addeth concerning Zabulon and Issachar. He saith of Zabulon, Be glad in thy going forth: and of Issa-char, Reioyce thou in thy tentes, or in thy courtets, or in thy houses. And thereupon he attributeth as common to them both, That they shall call folke into the mountaine (that is to say) of Sion, there to make sacrifice to the liuing God, and therefore that God wil blesse them, in so much that they shal skim off the fat of the sea, that is to say, they shalbe enriched by trade of marchandise. And that although their countrey was sandy (as the seashores comonly be) so as there was no fruite-fulness of corne & wine; yet should they not faile to be rich for all that: for the sand (that is to say the Sea) should giue them sufficient abundance. That is the summe of the thing that is spoken here. Now (as hath bene touched here-before) we see that Moses spake not of his owne head, but that God himselfe vttereth here the things which he had determined afore: for Moses could not haue guessed what was to befall in the portion of Zabulon. I haue told you afore, that the Israelites were not their owne earuers.
True it is that the trybe of Gad and a parte of Ephraim had their portion beyond Iordan as shalbe declared hereafter: but all the rest of the portions were made by lot, so as it was not for any man to say, Such a thing shall befall mee. It behooued God him selfe to be the whole doer, as we see he was in this text, so as he might be acknowledged about all his creatures. Therefore when Moses declareth that the trybe of Zabulon shalbe planted by the seas side, he doeth vs to vnderstande that God had revealed vnto him things vnknown, and that his speaking was by the holy Ghost. When he sayeth that traffike and merchandise shalbe in the trybe of Zabulon, and that Issachar also shal go by sea; no doubt but y therein God vttereth things which men would neuer haue thought.
And so wee haue an infallible prooffe, not onely of the promises that are set downe here, but also of all the doctrine of Moses. For to what ende did he so blesse the trybes of Israell; but to holde them vnder obedience of the lawe, and vnder the religion which he had taught them, not of himselfe, but as he had bene moynd from a-booue: Seeing it is so, let vs learne to apply all the testimonies to the setting of our selues in Gods truth, that wee swarue not aside one way nor other, ne be doubtful in faith, but imbrace the things with all reuerence which are contained in the lawe. For without that, we be miserable, as all they be which haue their fantasticall deuotions, of which sort wee see the Papistes are, and likewise the Turkes, and also all the Heathen of the world. For they be yetie willfull in the things which they haue once conceited. O (say they) I hold mee to this, because it is an ancient religion: but in the meane while they be nothing sure of it. And why? Because that as long as men rest vpon their own opinion, all is but vanitie and smoke. Then can wee haue no sure faith vntill wee be come vnto God, & know that it is he which guideth and governeth vs.

And therefore it standeth vs in hande to haue the lawe warranted vnto vs, so as wee may be able to say that it is no doctrine of man, but that God is author thereof. The like is to be saide of the propheties and of the Gospel. Thus ye see what wee haue to marke in the first part of this text.

Now here are two things set one against another in Zabulon and Issachar. Zabulon, (sayth he) Reioyce thou in thy going out: and vnto Issachar he sayeth, Reioyce thou in thy rest. Here the one goes abroad and seekes from place to place; & the other taries quietly and peasably at home: like a snudge as they say. And yet Moses saith that God will make them both to prosper, though their cases be nothing like. And by Za-bulon going out, he meaneth not his end (as some haue expounded it) but the voyages which the people of that trybe were to make, as folke that should traffike into farre countiees. His saying then is, God will prosper thee in thy going abroad. When thou goest in danger by sea, and makest long voyages; thou shalt be guyded & gouerned by God, and his blessing shall accompany thee. But as touching Issachar, because he was fearefull and cowardly, it is saide that God will yet haue piue vpon him, and blesse him though he loue his ease. And it is not without cause that he speaketh so to Issachar. We see howe it is saide of him in the nine and fourth Chapter of Genesis by Iacob, Issachar is as a strong Assie or a Mule of burthen which sleepeth (sayeth hee) betwene his packes. Hee saue that ease was good, and he bowed downe his shoulders, and choose rather to be a seruant and to pay taxes and tallages, than to trye his force in resisting his foes. Here wee see howe the nature of that people was strong and sturdie, but yet that they wanted heart, and were cowardly, so as they played the burdened Mule, which coucheth downe betwene his packes, and there falls asleepe, that is to say, Hee was like a great packehorse which ca-reth not for libertie: in so much that although men loade him with heauie and intollerable burthens, yet he ceaseth not to yeld to them still, as if a Mule should fall asleepe being lo-den with his packes. He bare then taxes & trybutes and passed not greatly for it: he was at a point for all other things, so he might eat and drink his fill; as ye shal see some lubberly loutes, which so they may always haue meat & drinke, do make no further reckning; neither can they any skil of freedome, they be in that behalfe as Oxen & Asses, so as they haue no care of any thing. And euen so was it with Issachar.

And Moses intent is not to sooth him in his vices when he sayeth, that God will blesse him in that rest of his; but it serueth to comfort the faithfull which were of that trybe; because that else they might haue been discouraged, as hath bin touched afore. For God might seeme to haue vprayed them saying, Yee be not worthie to enioy the common freedom which I giue to my children; for yee be of a flauish nature, yee be great lubbers, which suffer your selues to bee made vnderlings. It might seeme then y<sup>e</sup> God gaue them a marke of reproche, to cast them off from the aray of his children. Howbeit his intent was that the faithfull shoulde knowe, that although they had a hard burthen to beare as in respect of the worlde: yet notwithstanding, God would not cease to blesse them. That was the veric meaning of Moses.

And here wee haue to note in generall, that although men be able to trauell, and they haue skill also, so as they want nor any thing: yet must all their prosperitie come of God and of his meere grace. For it is not without cause y<sup>e</sup> Moses here fendeth the trybe of Zabulon vnto God. They were men that spared not themselves, they hazarded their liues, they trafficked into strange countreys; and therefore a man woulde say it is no wonder though they were riche, for they were men of courage, they were vigilant; they were painfull, they had all worldly meanes to helpe them selues withall. Yea, but when all comes to reckening, it is shewed vs here that without Gods blessing all were to no purpose. So then let vs learne, not to presume any thing vpon our owne trauel & skill, or any thing else; but let euery man referre him selfe to God, that he may guyde vs in all our doings, according to this saying which we haue heard heretofore, Thou shalt not say, it is mine owne hand that hath gotten mee my foode; but know thou that it is God, who fed thy fathers by the space of fourtie yeres in the wildernes; it is hee at whose hande thou receiuest thy foode at this day. Thus much concerning that point.

Furthermore, as touching the trybe of Isachar, wee haue to note that if it please God to bereaue vs of any earthly benefites for our imperfections sakes, we must not be greued out of measure therefore; but patiently beate the yoke, contenting our selues with this, that God in the meane season turneth y<sup>e</sup> things to a good end vnto vs, which of themselves were as a record that he reiecteth vs; and that he maketh them to serue as furtherances of our saluation. As for example, it falleth out that some folke haue some peculiar fault in them; as we see how some bee grossly wicked, so as they set not their mindes vpon a great sort of things which might be good and conuenient for them: Others are fainthearted and rechelesse, and other some, although they spare not them selues, yet haue they some other fault which is a let to them that they cannot thoroughly seeke their owne profit & commoditie. Wel, our Lord also becaueth them of many things which he giueth to others that take paines, & his hand is stretched out to blesse the labors of such as are painfull & employ their wittes about it. It may wel be then that our Lord wil punish those rechelesse tolke wth the want of some earthly commodities, for not doing their indeour as they ought to do. But yet doth it not followe that he taketh them not for his children still, although he make them feeble some temporal chastisement, which he causeth also to serue to their soulehealth. They shal then receiue chastisement for their infirmities, but yet shal they not cease to be Gods childre still. That is y<sup>e</sup> thing which we haue to gather where it is sayd of the trybe of Isachar, that through his cowardlines he shall keepe home, and bowe downe his shoulders to receiue the great burdens, tributes, & taxes that men lay vpon him, making no reckning at all of them. Well; and doth God see such rechelesnes in them? He suffereth them to smart for it to the worldwarde; but yet howsoeuer they fare, he telleth them y<sup>e</sup> he wil not cease to be merciful to them. Reioyce thou (saith he) in thy Tentis. Wee see nowe more clearly the thing that I said afore; namely that Moses intended not to flatter Isachar in y<sup>e</sup> thing for which he was to be condemned, that is to wit, for the cowardlines whereof I haue made mention. Neuerthelesse, because that fault was vnreformable, & in the meane whyle God was to chastice that people with bondage, with tributes, and with tallages; therefore Moses had a care to comfort them, specially the faithfull, which might fall into despaire when they sawe themselves so punished at Gods hand. Well (saith he) beare ye this burthen patiently, for yee be worthie of the punishment which God layeth vpon you. But howsoeuer the world go with you, be not out of hart, for he wil not faile to be a father to you still. Although yee seeme to be subiect to many burthens, & he seeme to haue with drawn his hand from you & vouchsafe not to succour you; yet notwithstanding he wil haue pitié vpon you stil. Therefore be glad in your wretchednes & distresses. Lo how the faithful ought always to assuage their sorowes when God chastiseth them in this world, forasmuch as his chastising of them is after such a sort, that yet neuertheles he estrangeth not himselfe vterly fr<sup>o</sup> the, but reseiue them stil as of his household & Church.

Moses hauing spoken so of those two trybes, addeth in cōmon, that they shal cal folke vp into the mountaine, to offer vnto God the sacrifice of righteousness. No doubt but Moses meant this of mount Sion; & that is yet one other prophesie. For no man could foresee that God would haue his temple to be builded in that place: & yet Moses setteth it downe expressly that it shalbe set vpon a hil. In deed he sayth, Thy God will choose him a place where his name shalbe called vpon; but yet it was a hundred yeres after, yea, four hundred or rather Six hundred yeres after, ere any man knewe where that place was. But Moses assigneth it to a mountaine, and that was by force of the spirite. For it must needs be that God guyded him thereto, seeing he could say, Vpon a mountaine shal my temple be builded. True it is, that hee nameth not mount Sion; but

but but yet we see there was a conformity between that which was revealed vnto Dauid, and that which had bene spoken so long aforehande by Moses. Heere therefore we haue yet againe an infallible prooffe, that Moses deuised not any thing of himselfe, but that the liuing God vsed him continually as his minister, and as the instrument of his holy spirite. Againe, heere the two tribes of Isachar and Zabulon are commended for exhorting folke to the seruice of God. And it is a praise well worth the noting. For thereby we be done to vnderstande, that it is not ynough for euery man to occupie himselfe in the seruice of God; but that our zeale must extend yet further, to the drawing of other men thereunto, accordingly also as is sayde thereof, specially when the prophet Esay treateth of the kingdome of our Lorde Iesus Christ, at which time euery man shall reach his hande vnto his neighbour, saying; Let vs goe vp into the Lordes hill to worshipp him. Heere Moses declareth that Isachar and Zabulon shall do the like, and draw their neighbours to the seruing of God. But in very deede it were to small purpose for vs to incourage our neighbours to yeeld God his deserued honour, vnlesse wee ourselues did beare them companie.

And for that cause it is expressly sayde, That they shall call folke, and offer Sacrifice with them. The thing then in effect which we haue to gather vpon this text is, that we must as much as in vs lyeth indouour to drawe all men on the earth vnto God, that all men may serue him and worship him with one accord. And in deede if we haue any kindnesse in vs, sith we see that men goe to destruction till God haue gotten them vnder his obedience: ought we not to be moued with pity, to drawe the silly soules out of hell, and to bring them into the way of saluation? Againe on the other side, sith we knowe that God is our father; should we not be desirous to haue him knowne to be the like to all men? And if we can not find in our heartes that all creatures should doe him homage; is it not a token that we haue no great regarde of his honour? Ye see then howe that one of the things whereunto we ought to apply our mindes and induours is, [ first ] to procure the silly ignorant soules to serue God: and secondly to be alwayes incouraging of such as are in the right trade. As for example, when we see blinde wretches runne astray; surely if we be able and can haue any accessse or meanes to doe it, we ought to giue them a tast of the true religion, that they may submit themselues to God. Againe, we knowe wherein the seruice of God consisteth, namely in learning his woorde that we may put our trust in him, and therewithall call vpon him, yeelding him thanks for all the benefites which he hath bestowed vpon vs, and dedicating ourselues vnto him all our life long. Nowe at this day his seruice is spirittual; it consisteth not in the shadowes and ceremonies of the Lawe. Therefore let vs prouoke ech other to resort to the hearing of Gods worde, let vs treat of it together to the edifying one of another, and let vs also giue good exaple of putting our trust in him, of being patient in our aduerstities, and of walking vnder his feare. Afterwarde let vs call vpon him, as which is the chiefe Sacrifice that hee requireth at our handes; let vs flee to him alone for refuge; let vs yeelde him the praye that is dewe to him for all his benefites, and let vs prouoke all others to do the like. That is the thing which is declared vnto vs in the exaple of Zabulon and Isachar.

But as I sayde afore, we must not teache our neighbours, and tarric behinde ourselues, but we must beare them companie. And for y cause is it sayde that they shall all worshipp. Now then, if we will discharge our duetie, we must not say to others, pray you vnto God, put your trust in him, giue him thanks for the great number of benefites which he hath bestowed vpon you, dedicate your liues vnto him with all purenesse: it is not for vs to shift off the matter in such sort. What then? We must ioyne with them, and say, let vs serue our God, let vs worship him, let vs call vpon him, yea and let vs shewe the way to such as haue neede to be prouoked by vs. That is the thing then, which in the seconde place we haue to practise out of this text.

But heere a man might demaunde wherefore Moses speaketh this of Zabulon & Isachar rather than of the other tribes. It is likely that it was because of the situation of the place. For first they were farre ynough from the Temple, and therefore it was the harder for them to offer Sacrifices, because the journey was painefull; or else they might easily haue grown out of kinde being so farre off & intermingled among the heathen, by reason whereof they might haue become hardehearted, and haue made no great account of Religion or of the Lawe. That is the cause why Moses doth purposely attribute vnto them the sayde title of zeale of prouoking folke to the seruing of God. True it is that the tribe of Gad (of whom mention shalbe made heereafter) and also a part of Ephraim should haue their portions allotted vnto them beyonde the Iordan, but although they were farre off from the temple, yet might they haue the Religion simple; they were not so mingled with the Heathen, they had not so great corruptions as were in the tribes of Zabulon and Isachar. For we knowe that these were nere vnto Galilee, and that a part thereof was called the Galily of the Gentiles. And when Salomon was in the greatest prosperitie of his kingdome, we see howe he gaue Cities in that Countrey vnto King Hiram, by meanes whereof it was like ynough that those people should be corrupted. And vnder the worde Folke, Moses comprehended not onely the Tribes of Israell; but also those which erst had no acquaintance with God but were vtterly separated from the true and pure Religion. Of them is it sayd that Zabulon and Isachar should doe their indouour to bring them into the right way, and to the doctrine of saluation.

Nowe by this exaple we be taught, that although the worlde and the flesh do diuers waies withdrawe vs and hinder vs from giuing ourselues to the seruice of God; yet is that no sufficient cient excuse for vs, but wee must fight against it. And it is a very profitable warning. For wee see that euery strawe (as they say) will stop vs, when we be towards the seruing of God. If a flye doe but whiske afore our eyes, wee take occasion to turne aside. O (say we,) I hadde good will, but there happened such a thing, and that disappointed mee: and so by that meanes we thinke ourselues quit and very well discharged. Then let vs consider, that although this worlde haue many lettes to plucke vs backe and to turne vs out of the right way; although wee haue many temptations; and although there be snares layd for vs by Satan, so that when we would goe one step forward, it seemeth that at euery pafe we should meete with a mountain: yet must we inforce ourselues, and howsoever we fare, we must not cocker ourselues in our delights nor thinke that if we haue some harde and trouble some incounter to ouercome, that that will serue to discharge vs: But that seeing it is sayde of Zabulon and isachar, who being placed in the borders or outleets of Iewry were mingled with the Gentils and heathenfolke, that they should not forbear to prouoke their neyhbours to serue God: we also ought to followe that which is sayd heere of them. And specially let vs put this in practise when we be among y vnbelecuers, which would faine infect vs with their corruptions, and bring vs into a mislyking of Gods seruice, to plunge vs in their ydolatrie. When we see such things, let vs followe the constancie and stoutnesse of those whō Moses cōmeneth & prayseth heere. For he setteth them as looking glasses before our eyes, to the intent that we should followe them. Be we then sometimes among the ydolaters? Let vs labour as much as in vs lyeth, to winne them to God and to the Gospell of our Lorde Iesus Christ. At leastwise when we shall haue done our indeuour, let vs continue still in the pure simplicitie which we holde of God and of our Lord Iesus Christ, and let vs not be turned from it by any maner of occasion. And in any wise when we goe about to win any ydolaters, let vs alwayes shewe them our good infamle; that so farforth as is possible for vs, we may drawe them to the fayth, euen by shewing them that our Religion is warranted by our conuersation. Thus ye see in effect what wee haue to gather vpon this text.

And heere is speciall mention made of the sacrifices of Righteousnesse, to shewe that euen in the time of the shadowes and figures, Gods will was not to be serued with countenaunces onely, but that he would haue men to come vnto him with truth and righteousnesse: for hee hath euer hated hypocrisie. Truly the diuersitie betwene the fathers of olde time and vs is this, that when they worshipped God it behoued them to ad sacrifices, and to set vp lightes, and to haue many other ceremonies, all which thinges are layde downe at this day. But yet it was Gods will in all ages that men shoulde offer themselues to him with purenesse of heart, according to this saying in Jeremy, Lord, thine eyes regard the thing that is right. And therefore we must not thinke that God did euer take pleasure in any of these outward things which are spoken of in the Lawe. For he commaunded them for mennes sakes. He did it not in respect of himselfe, but to keepe the people in order who were like to little children, vntill the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ. Nowe seeing that vnder the Lawe and ceremonies Gods will was to be serued in truth: let vs vnderstand, that as nowe when his seruice is altogether spirituall, (as our Lord Iesus Christ sheweth in the fourth of Saint Iohn where hee sayth to the woman of Samaria, that God would no more haue the things y were required vnder the Lawe, but would be serued altogether in spirit and truth:) if we will serue him duely, it is not for vs to haue any store of pelting gewawes before men, as who would say, wee woulde please him with murlymcwes, but we must offer him the sacrifices of righteousnesse. And this is a doctrine too much corrupted by the world. For we see what men doe commonly terne Gods seruice at this day. I ouerpasse the dooings of the papistes, they be but mens inuentions wherein there is not one syllable of Gods worde. But let vs put the case that GOD accepted the things which they doe; yet are they nothing worth, because there is nothing in them but contempt of God and hypocrisie. When the papistes haue babbled very much when they haue trotted on pilgrimages, when they haue lighted vp tapers, when they haue bedecked their puppets and ydols, they beare themselues in hande that God is well payd. And why? For they transforme him with their dotages, and thinke they may serue him after their owne fashion & pleasure. We see then that the wretched worlde is become brutish. And we haue so much the more neede to marke well this text, where mention is made of the sacrifices of righteousnesse, to shew that we doe but vnhalowe the name of God, when we bring not our heartes to him, to offer him a pure and cleane oblation. Yea and we see that Dauid also did practise the same doctrine in his time. For whereas he sayeth, Offer vnto God the sacrifice of righteousnesse, it is a rebuking of them that had peruerted the Religion. And because his enemies had their full scope at that time, and he himselfe was chased and banished in that while, & the wicked vaunted themselues as the papistes do at this day, with, What? We be the Catholike Church; we haue Gods temple; we haue all the titles which belong to the Church: therefore Dauid scorned all such abusers of Gods name, and tolde them that all their dealings were but leazings. And why? Offer vnto God the sacrifice of righteousnesse. He vseth the selfe same word which Moses hath set downe heere; to shewe that God neuer ment that men should discharge themselues towards him with Ceremonies and such like thinges, but that he intended to bring them to his spirituall seruice, that is to say, to put their trust in him, to call vpon him, and to yeelde him the glorie and praye of all good thinges. That is the thing which he requireth, and the marke whereat hee would haue vs to leuell,

And

And so we haue one good lesson more in this text, which shall serue for an ende and conclusion, because the time will not beare any more. Let vs marke well then, that Moses hauing spoken so of the zeale which should be in the tribes of Isachar & Zabulon; sayth that God will blesse them. True it is that nowe hauing the kingdome of heauen opened vnto vs by our Lorde Iesus Christ, by reason whereof it behoueth vs to looke vp higher; wee shall not alwayes be riche in this worlde; we shall not occupie the trade of marchandise by sea, we shall not stir off the fatte thereof: for it is euen good for vs that our Lorde should keepe vs vnder in lowe state: But yet shall we be blessed of him, if wee bee his children; according as Saint Paul declareth that the trewe Religion and feare of God haue promysed both of the present life and of the life to come. And therefore if we intend to be gouerned by Gods hande, and that he should sende vs prosperitie conuenient for our welfare: let vs learne to dedicate ourselues vnto him, let vs all indeuour to serue him, and let vs worshippe him with one accorde. If we doe so, surely wee shall finde that God hath not forgotten vs, and we shall also see what force there is in his grace, when it is vttered vpon vs. And that is the meaning of our Lorde Iesus Christ where hee sayeth, that we must first seeke the kingdome of God, <sup>30</sup> y is to say, we must first indeuor as much as is possible, that God may be honoured, & that the world may be gathered vnto him; and wee ourselues must come foremost. When we once haue this zeale, all other thinges shall be cast vnto vs. But if we beginne at the present life; if we be ouercarefull for our sustenance and food;

1. Tim. 4. 8.

Mat. 6. 33.

if we be so wedded to this worlde that we make none account of the kingdome of heauen: wee may take peynes and toyle ynough, yea euen till we breake our armes and legges asunder; but yet it shall so litle boote vs, that it shall rather turne all to our vtter confusion. Therefore let vs marke vpon this text, that first of all God must be knownen of all: and then thereupon wee may looke that he will haue a fatherly care of vs, not only in calling vs to the heauenly inheritance, but also in prouiding vs of thinges necessaric, euen while we be as pilgrims and wayfarers in this worlde.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our fautes, praying him to vouchsafe to touche vs more and more with them to the quicke, and to drawe vs to such repentance, that we mistaking our sinnes and being sorie for them, may obtaine the grace to be thoroughly reclaýmed vnto him; and that although we be estraunged from him, and doe dwell in the midst of so manie temptations, stumbling blockes & impediments, as long as wee bee compassed with our mortall fleshe: yet notwithstanding he may not faile to preferue vs, and to giue vs such strength as wee may maintaine battell against all thinges that may turne vs from him, vntill wee bee come to the heauenly rest, and that all our ioy and contentation may be there, and that in the midst of the miseries of this worlde, we may patiently beare his chastisements & corrections, vntill he haue made it knowne vnto vs that they haue benefited vs towards our saluation. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only to vs, but also to all people & Nations of the earth, &c.

On Saturday the iiii. of Iuly, 1556.

20 Also he sayde of Gad, Blessed bee he that enlarged Gad: hee dwelleth as a Lyon and snatcheth away the arme with the head.

21 He looked to himselfe at the beginning, because a portion of the Lawgiuer was hidden there; yet shall he come with the princes of the people, and execute the Lordes iustice, and his iudgement with Israell.

22 Also he sayde of Dan; Dan is as a Lyons whelp, hee shall leape from Basan.

23 Also he sayde of Nepthali; O Nepthali which hast thy fill of [Gods] good pleasure, and art full of the Lordes blessing; take possession at the west and South.

24 Also he sayd of Aser; Aser shall be blessed with children, and acceptable to his brethren, and shall dippe his foote in Oyle.

25 Thy Inclosures shall be yron and brasse, and thy life shall be according to thy dayes.

Here wee haue to treat of the blessednes of the tribe of Gad, to whom that name was giuen, because that whereas his mother had first bene despised & as it were reiected of her husband Jacob, how after many other children had by him, reioycing that GOD. had made her so fruitfull, shee sayde of this Gad, In number, or in bande [or Hoste]. And for the same cause also when Iacob blessed this his sonne, he sayde, An armie shall rise vp against Gad, but hee shall get the vpper hande. Whereby he ment, that as the mother of him was fruitfull in children; so Gad should become a great tribe, and be so multiplied, that he should be able to ouercome his enemies. This promise doth Moses confirme and ratifie, saying, That God will enlarge Gad. We see then how that in this promise Moses hath shewed, y<sup>e</sup> the blessing which was giuen to Gad himselfe was not in vaine, but that God continued the same fauour towards all the whole tribe, so as he had alwayes a speciall care of that people; to performe all that cuer hee had sayde, as well to Abraham as to the other Patriarkes. Now we must apply this to our owne vs; and although the same name belong not vnto vs nowadayes; yet haue we a generall lesson to gather thereupon; namely that we may well apply vnto ourselves all the promises which are giuen in the holy scriptures; yea and wee may apply them in such sorte, as we may euermore conclude, that not so much as one mite of them shall sayle vs.

Nowe Moses addeth, That he shall be as a Lyon rearing his pray, as well the head as the arme. Whereby he betokeneth that those people shall haue enemies, but that they shall giue them the repulse by force. To be short we see how it behooueth that people to be exercised with diuers battles, but yet that God woulde alwayes ayde them and giue them means to ouerthrow their enemies. And therefore let vs learne, that although our Lord suffer vs to indure many troubles, yet doth it not followe thereupon that he shaketh vs off, or that he will not be mercifull to vs & make vs to feele his goodnesse. For what else are the blessings which Moses rehearceeth heere, and which Iacob vttered in the forealleaged place; but a sure warrant that God woulde shewe himselfe gracious to the tribes of Israell? And yet is this no impediment but that they should haue many troubles, many warres, and many temptations. And therefore let vs not thinke that because God accounteth vs for his children, and hath pitie vpon vs; therefore wee be exempted from all vexation, so as we shall liue at our ease, and all things shall fall out to our lust and liking: for yet notwithstanding wee shall be afflicted and molested. Wherefore let it suffice vs that we haue God on our side, who will at length see vs vp, and giue vs such deliuerance and iustie out of all our miseries, that wee shall thoroughly perceiue that he holdeth on our side. As long as we haue that, let vs passe patiently through all the tribulations which it behooueth vs to suffer.

It followeth that Gad sawe that he had a portion of the Lawe maker hidden, and yet neuertheless that he should goe with the Princes, so execute Gods iustice and Indigence. Moses rehearceeth that which was alreadye come to passe concerning the tribe of Gad, and excuseth them for desiring to haue their portion beyonde the Iordan; that is to wit the countrey of Og king of Basan, and whatsoever else had bene conquered before the death of Moses. It might seeme that in this case the two tribes of Gad and Ruben were to be contented, for their ouerhastie eagernesse in desiring to haue partition made afore the people were come into the Lande of promise. But yet doth God allowe of it, with condition that they should require that partition. And how was that? That Countrey had elselyen deserte, and had serued to no purpose. Hereupon the two tribes alleaged that they had great store of cattell, and that the sayde countrey was a Countrey of very good pasture, so as they might leaue their wiues and children there, and not be in charge with the whole hoste. Againe they alleaged that in the meane while their cattell should prosper, & the Countrey be inhabited. As touching their owne persons, they offered to go with the rest of the people, and to die there rather than not to discharge their dutie in y<sup>e</sup> right of brotherhood. Moses then excuseth the request made by the tribe of Gad that they might dwell beyond Iordan, and haue their portion and inheritance there. Therefore he sayth, That they had a hidden Portion of the Lawe giuer, [or at the Lawgiuers hande]. This text hath commonly bene expounded thus; He sawe that this should be the graue of Moses the Lawgiuer; but that is ouercolde & not worthy to be spoken of, notwithstanding that some sticke vnto it. And why? Because wee should bee neuer the surer of the sense, which yet notwithstanding is as fit as any can be. For to what ende is the excuse of Moses comprised heere? namely that he should haue a portion at Gods hande in that Countrey. As if he should say, that Gad was led by good discretion, when he desired his dwelling place beyonde Iordan. If a man should reply, How so? Was it not Gods will to reserue y<sup>e</sup> distributing of the inheritances to his people by the hand of Iosua? And againe, was it mee that the Countrey should haue bene conquered afore? But that was not doone; and therefore there was rash dealing in this case, or at leastwise there was ouerhastie desire. If any man reply after that maner, Moses sayeth that the portion was hidden, and he termeth it a portion from the Lawe giuer. Whereby hee signifieth that Gad attempted not any thing but y<sup>e</sup> which was lawfull & permitted. For it was well knowne that it was Gods will y<sup>e</sup> the sayd Land should be conquered after an extraordinary fashio, & that it should be possessed & put to good vse. & y<sup>e</sup> some benefit should be made of it while all the rest of the people went to conquire the Lande of Canaan. So then, the worde Lawgiuer may better be referred vnto God than vnto Moses. For so God be obeyed, all things shall goe well. Mera will will perchance finde fault with our doings ; but let it suffice vs to haue God for our warrant, when we shall not haue offended him, nor withstood his ordinance. The meaning then of Moses is, that Gad knewe he demanded not aught which was not conformable to the purposē of God: and y<sup>e</sup> in so doing he was not to be blamed, forasmuch as he had followed Gods ordinance.

Againe, he termeth it A hidden portion, meaning that he did not take his part by violence, but that he tooke it as a thing belonging to him, and which was lawfull for him to doe. For although it fell not to him by lot, but by consent of the people and of all the other tribes: yet notwithstanding, God declared that it was his will it should be so, and that it was good. And why? For it was a hidden portion; that is to say, God had foreappointed it to that vse, and he would not that in that behalfe they should followe the common rule, nor that they should tarry till the cōmon partitions were to be made by lot. And therēupon it is sayde, that he should goe with the Princes, that is to say with the rest of the tribes, to execute Gods Iustice and Iudgement vnto Israel: so as his dwelling in that country shoulde not holde him backe to deceiue his brethren, and to sayle them at their neede: but that notwithstanding that they saw they might haue abidden in a fat and fertile Countrey, yet hee would not inioy his state, but followe y<sup>e</sup> wartes still vntill all were at an ende, and that the Lord had giuen rest to all the other tribes. Nowe we see what Moses meant in effect.

And by this place we be put in minde, that in all our doings we must haue an eye to Gods wil. For as soone as we swaue from that, there remaineth no excuse for vs, what colour or couert soeuer we pretende. Heere then is a good rule to discernē betwene good and euill: namely y<sup>e</sup> if men submit themselues to Gods ordinance, so as they attempt not any thing, ne take libertie to do one thing or other, except they knowe it pleaseth God it should be for: then shall all things go well. And it is a lesson well worthy to be marked, to the intent we wander not in our life, ne stande in dout and grudge of conscience, to inquire of the things that are to be done. Then let vs alwayes haue Gods will before our eyes, to do what soeuer he cōmandeth vs, and to followe whiche soeuer he calleth vs: and then let vs not passe though men slander and condemne vs; so we may be acquit before God, that ought to suffice vs. For we see whereupon the acquittall which Moses setteth downe here to iustifie the tribe of Gad, is grounded; namely that he saw that he had that Portion from the Lawe giuer; that is to say, that he might require the present partition, without gainestanding the will of God. For it is Gods iustifying of vs that maketh vs to stande vpright: & contrariwise as soone as he pronounceth the word to condemne vs, we must needs tūble downe though al y<sup>e</sup> world should hold vs vp.

And this word Lawe giuer is to be marked well: for it is the same wherunto S. James had an eie, where he sayth that there is but one Lawe giuer, who can condemne and destroy, and who can also saue. He sheweth vs that it is not for vs to giue sentence against our brethren; for then we take too much vpon vs. Why so? Because (sayth he) there is none but God to whom it belongeth to condemne or to acquit. And why? For he is the only Iudge, and we be his vnderlings. It is his office to lay Lawes vpon vs, and to put vs to the yoke, vnder the which he will haue both great and small to humble themselues. After the same maner it is sayde in this text, that God knowing how there was a portion layde vp for him with the Lawe giuer, might lawfully require to haue his partition made there, (that is to wit vpo the hill of Basan, y<sup>e</sup> hee might not continually driue his cattell from place to place. Now then we see, that in the person of thos whō Moses speaketh of, we haue a generall rule, to shew that when we followe the things which God liked of, and passe not beyond our boundes; it is a good warrant for vs to defie the whole worlde when they finde fault with our doings. And on the contrary part, when we haue not Gods worde to guide vs and rule vs by, nor warrant of his will: that we can allege will be no purpose. And why? For we be set in this worlde to none other ende, but to do homage vnto God with our life. Now if we intende to obey him vntainedly; wee must shewe it by the obedience which we yelde vnto his woode. That is the thing in effect, which we haue to gather vpon this place.

Now it is sayde, that he shall followe the Princes of Israel, so performe Gods Iustice and Iudgement. Heereby Moses sheweth that Gad should not be turned away from God by the cōmodities which he was to inioy. For although hee had already gotten him a certaine dwelling, and was nowe in a place of rest: yet notwithstanding he should not forbear to go suffer cold and heat, to ly vpon the hard ground, to followe the wars, to put himselfe to all maner of danger, and to indure trauaile and all maner of peines of warfare. Seeing he ceased not to serue GOD in his calling, surely he was to be excused. And we haue a good lesson to gather vpon this place; which is, that we may then well inioy the aduantages which God giueth vs, when they holde vs not backe from the discharge of our duties, and from employing ourselues faithfully in the things which God inioyneth. For although a thing be lawfull of it selfe: yet doe we abuse it when we be hindered by it that we keepe not on our way whither our Lorde appointeth vs. And heerein wee see howe there are very fewe nowadays, which are not guilty of peruerting the true and right vse of all the benefits which God bestoweth vpon the. We may well say we haue not stolne, and y<sup>e</sup> we do iustly possesse the things which God hath giuen vs: but yet for all that, who is he which is not ouercombered with earthly cares, when he hath goods & lāds? Who is he which is not too much wedded to them, & which retheth not too much vpon them? Who is he which doeth not so giue himselfe vnto them, that he mindeth not y<sup>e</sup> heauenly life? Yee shall see a great number which become cold, when God hath once giuen them goods: and other some become altogether blockish.

Quest. Howe many rich folke shall ye find, which are disposed to giue theselues wholly vnto God? Nay, we see they be held backe as with lines and ropes, so as they be not able to step one steppe right forth, because their goods do hinder them. And euen therin do we see a manifest condemnation, so as there is no excuse to be fought for, wherewith to sheelde ourselues afore God. To be short, so soone as God giueth vs any forehand in this worlde or any comoditie, by and by we be as it were tyed heere belowe, and we drawe backe from him, whereas we should rather goe vnto him. We can not set forth one step to goe vnto him; it is pittifull to see how lasie wee be in doing our duettie. And we see that scarcely the hundreth man doth determine with himselfe to followe God; and if he doe, it is so lasly as may be. Alwayes the fault shall be layd vpon y goods of the world for plucking vs backe from following the good which God calleth vs vnto. But here it is sayde on the contrary part, that God will then like well of our vsing of his benefites, when we be his people, and when we seeke to do Iustice and Iudgement; that is to say, when we shroude not ourselues vnder pretence of our impediments, or vnder pretence of want of vnderstanding, as we see the common maner is to alleage such sonde excuses as these, I haue bought a yooke of Oxen, I haue purchased a Manour; and another sayes, I haue taken a wife, and because I am maryed, I can not go thither as God calleth me. Forasmuch then as we perceiue that Gods benefites which of their owne nature ought to be spurres to pricke vs forwarde, are hinderances to plucke vs backe; to the intent we may come to him with the earnest desire, let vs inforce ourselues the more strongly to ouercome all things that may hinder vs or plucke vs backe.

Moreouer wheras mention is made of Iustice and Iudgement, let vs marke that it is ment concerning the conquest of that Countrey. Moses termeth it Gods Iustice & Iudgement, after the comon maner of the holy scripture: for these wordes heere do signifie the rule which God giueth vs. And that is yet one otlter notable point. For sometimes we may gather good doctrine euen of one worde. It is not for nought, that the holy Ghost vseth these so excellent wordes, of executing Gods Iustice and Iudgement, in stead of saying, obey God. For thereby hee sheweth, that as long as men deale after their own fancy, they goe crossely and crookedly, so as there is no right dealing in them. I graunt they beare themselves in hande that their life is well ordered, so as no fault can be founde with it, for euery man standeth in his owne conceit, as sayth Salomon. But yet for all that, heere God telleth them frō heauen, that there is none other righteousnesse or Iustice, than that wherof he himselfe is the author; and (to be short) that we do but go astray, and behaue ourselues like wandering beastes, if we be not grounded vpon his worde. Nowe let vs see howe the worlde hath discharged it selfe heereof. It is as hard a thing as may be to hold ourselues vnder the obedience of God, that we flatter not ourselues to inuent some one thing or other. For howsoeuer the worlde go, this can neuer be altered, that is to wit that we obey God when we do Iustice and Iudgement: and that in following our owne fancies wee take crooked & vntowarde wayes, and (to be short) that we doe but raunge heere and there, without going forwarde.

And truly this circumstance deserueth well to be noted. For at the first a man would not say it were Iustice and Iudgement, to goe to put all to the sworde. For the very purpose for which it is sayde that God should followe the tribes of Israell, was to goe with naked sworde, to kill all the males of that Countrey both great & small. And therefore in that case it might seeme there was some crueltie. Yea; but yet for all that, it behooued it to be executed; for it was the iust vengeance of God. Four hundred yeres afore, he might well haue rooted out those people, who were so frowarde, and so excessiue in all wickednesse, that although God punished them with extreme rigor, yet must it needes be confessed that he had Iust cause to doe it. Yet did he spare them and beare with them. But when their wickednesse was once ripe, and come to the full growth; as had bene sayde thereof vnto Abraham four hundred yeres afore; then was it for God to execute his last sentence. And so let vs marke, that although the thing which God commaundeth vs may seeme straunge vnto vs, and we may alleage some reasons against it and cast doubt of it; yet is it not for vs to be wiser than he, or to make any replying to shrink from obeying him: but we must goe through with it. For it is a true prooffe and tryal of our subiection, when God commaundeth vs a thing that may seeme scarce good, and yet notwithstanding because he speaketh it, we hold our wittes captiue, so as we take not leaue to say, I am of a contrary opinion, I thinke it not to be reasonable. Let vs not bee so presumptuous as to dispute against God, but though a thing seeme euill vnto vs, let vs thinke it good if he allowe of it. That is the thing wherein we shewe that we be rightly obedient vnto him in all pointes. Therefore when we heare Gods Iustice & Iudgement spoken of, though the case concerne the viter rooting out of all that euer is to be found in a whole Countrey, and the putting of all things to the sword without sparing: let vs assure ourselues that it is not for men to be iudges of good and euill in that case, but that looke whatsoeuer God speaketh, it behooueth them to hold them to it, and to rest wholly thereupon. For sith the tribe of Gad is excused heere for not enterprising any thing against God, and commended for dooing Iustice and Iudgement in warre: much more reason is it that we should indeuour to obey God when he inioyneth vs things which do much more proue themselves to be iust and rightfull, as when hee will haue vs to be dedicated to him in all holines, to pray vnto him; to put our whole trust in him, to liue in good loue with our neighbors, in deuoring to doe seruice to euery man, and to be sober and stayed in all our conuersation. For in those cases his iustice is apparant ynough . We cannot reply , that it is too strange a thing : for wee haue this record ingraued in vs aforchand , that God requireth not any thing of vs , which wee owe not vnto him , Nature driueth vs thereunto . Although wee be vnwilling therto , and that we haue a malicious & froward lust in our harts which draweth vs cleane backe : yet can we not say but that the things which are contained in Gods law be iust , good & rightfull . Sith it is so , let vs set our mindes vpon this lesson , that we may giue our selues vnto him , and breake al the bonds that might hold vs backe , & specially y the gracious benefites which he bestoweth vpo vs , may not be peruerted , as to take occasion thereby to deale leauidly , so as we should not still do our indetour to giue our selues to the obeying of him .

Now it followeth afterward , that Dan is as a Lyons help , & that he shall go out of Basan . No doubt here Moses intended to strengthen y trybe of Dan , & to giue them courage because they were few in number . They were a trybe of no great reputation , & they seemed not worthie to be made account of . Now , they which are so despyled of the world , & are of no force , credit , or countenance , are alwayes in dout , & thinke that one time or other they shall be put to the spoyle , or rather that men shall set their feete vpon their throtes . For so much the more as me beholding their own weaknes , do distrust after that fashion : Moses meant to exhort the trybe of Dan to put their trust in God , & not to dout but that he would maintaine them , notwithstanding that they were fewe , & had not wherof to get any great authoritie to the worldward . And that is the cause also why Iacob in blessing him sayth , Dan shall iudge his people as the other trybes of Israel . The word Dan signifieth to iudge : & that name was giuen to the Patriark Dan . For it seemed vnto Rachel , that God had condemned her ; or rather that men had condemned her vnjustly . Oh ! (sayd she) God hath taken my case in hand , he hath iudged me ; & thereby it appeareth that my quarrell hath bene maintained of God ; for he hath shewed in the end , that he condemned me not . Iacob then taketh holde of that speech & sayth , Dan shall iudge . And in the Hebrew , this worde Iudge signifieth , not only to giue sentence in matter of controuersie as it doeth in our language , but also to rule or gouerne , & to haue preheminence . And that is the cause why it is sayd , Such a one iudged , that is to say , gouerned or ruled . And increupon also doth the booke of Iudges take that name ; because the Iudges , that is to say the gouerners had al the preheminence ouer the peple . Thus then we see what Moses meant in saying that Dan should be as a Lyons whelp : that is to say , that although he seemed neuer so weake , & wanted wherewith to maintaine himselfe to y worldward , yet notwithstanding God would giue him strength , & he should be as a Lyons whelp that leapech fro Basan (it was the place that was assigned him for his portio) & strengthen himself in such wise , y he should be maintained & defend . d .

To be short , wee haue to gather vpon this place , that our Lord if it please him , will wely-nough preferue vs ; in so much that although we be without defence & vtterly vnfurnished of these inferior helps , so as we haue neither any great number of people , nor great riches , nor great scope of ground : yet we neede not bee afrayd for any of those things ; for God is able ynough to preserue vs , so we put our trust in him . Will we then be safe & sure ? We must not haue an eye to our own power : for that is a thing that spyteth God & kindleth his wrath : in so much y when men thinke themselves well at ease , because they haue wherewith to repulse their enemies , & are rich welthie & strong ; that presumption of theirs must needs make God to bereaue them of all ; that he may shew vnto them that it is in vaine for them to turne away from him , & to put their trust in corruptible & transitorie things . And it is a iust vengeance . For we cannot put one drop of trust in any creature , but Gods right is diminished thereby : for we withdraw our faith from him , which ought to be wholly flur vp & as it were tyed there . Againe , on y other side when we be weake ; let vs vnderstand that it behoueth vs in any wise to flee to Gods protection , that we may be brooded vnder his wings . And God seeing vs to be hile ones will helpe vs . Wherfore let vs therupon consider ; y hee hath power ynough to withstand al our enemies ; in so much y wheras to outward seeming we haue not the strength of a Gnat ; hee will giue vs the strength of a Lyon , or rather he himselfe wil be a Lyon for vs , as he vseth the same similitude a-fore , & as he speaketh thereof by his Prophet Esay , saying that he will rore like a Lyon , to repulse the furie and violence of his enemies ; and that he will snatch vp the pray , & no man shall be so bolde as to come neere him to take it fro him . Now then , when wee bee thus assured of the goodnesse of our God ; wee shall euer haue wherewith to repulse all the practises of y worlde against vs , how many perils so euer wee see at hand , and as it were hanging ouer our heads . And wee haue good cause to put this lesson in practise . For we see the malice of the enemies of the Gospel , wee see also how all things nowadayes are so farre out of order , that by all likelihood wee should bee deuoured every minute of an houre . And although a greate sort doe neuer thinke vpon it ; yet in very deede the knyfe is continually vpon our throte . And it is not for any man to flatter himselfe in this behalfe , for then should wee bee too dulwitted . It standeth vs in hand to consider our owne daungers , that we may be quickened vp to call vpon GOD , and to flee vnto him for refuge . Then if wee looke well to our state ; wee shall perceiue that our life hangeth as at a threde , so as death threateneth vs on all sydes , and wee haue no power to withstand it . The onely remedie wherof is this , that soasmuch as God hath promised to mayntaine the feeble and weake things , and that when in sight of the worlde , all thinges are like to slippe away , yet neuerthelesse he wil haue his hand reached out, to blesse such as are so base and despised, & to hold them vnder his tuition, that they may be in safetie: we must rest wholly vpon him, and learne to leane vnto him, and beare all things patiently through the power of that promise, & with our glorying in God not bee ashamed to confesse our weaknes, to the intent that he may vtter forth his power, and haue it the better known, when the worlde shall see that there was nothing at al on our side, and therefore that we play not the vainglorious folke who would alwayes conceale their own weaknesse although it be known. And what a fondnesse is it to bee desirous to seeme somewhat, when we haue nothing in vs? Is it not a fighting against nature? And yet in so doing we fight against God. For it is a darkening of his glory, when we wil needs beare mennes eyes, and beare them in hande that there is that in vs which is not. Therefore let vs learne to acknowledge our meanness with all humilitie, that we may prouoke one another to resort vnto our God; and that although wee be but a small handfull of people, and as it were vtterly without strength of our selues; yet notwithstanding, we shall bee defended from aboue, euen when we be cast vp to all perils here beneath.

After that Moses hath spoken of Dan, he addeth concerning Nephthalim, that he shall haue euen his fill of fauour, or of good will, or of free good will: for the Hebrew word signifieth Freebestowed loue. Then shall he haue his fill of Gods free fauour, & be replenished with the blessing of the Lorde. Nowe as concerning Nephthalim, it is sayd in Jacobs blessing of him, that hee shall be as a hynde that can skill to scape danger, a fine Hynd that is brought vp decently, & that shall giue goodly wordes, such as will content men. Hereby Iacob meant to broken that this trybe should not bee so greatly troubled with warre as the other trybes were: but that it should maintaine it selfe after another fashion, namely by being mylde and amiable, & that his speech should be full of gentleness and courtesie, and that no man should molest him. And in steed hereof it is sayd in this place, that Nephthalim shall haue his fill of Gods free fauour. The state of this trybe then was better than the state of Dan or of Gad who had enemies, and were continually assayed, because God had not giuen them a peaseable state. Now we knowe that all the riches of the worlde, & all that euer wee can desire beydes is nothing worth; if wee enioy them not in peace. To be short, the chiefe good thing that men can wish, is to be voyde of grieffe and mistrust. This is promised to the trybe of Nephthalim, at leastwise in comparison of the other trybes. Not that that countrey also was not wasted in the ende because of the vnthankfulness of the people. But God sheweth here, that whereas hee intended to stablish the people of Israel hee would giue vnto euery of them his portion, & the blessings which hee would bestowe vpon them should be diuers; accordingly as we know well, that hee dealeth not alike with all men, no not euen with his owne children, whom hee hath chosen. Albeit that hee loue them all, and be father in common to them all, yet doeth hee handle them diuersly. After the same sort was it with this people. Here then wee see as in a mirtour, that God is not bounde to gouerne his Church after such a sort, that euery faithfull man should haue the same thing that the others haue. For God knoweth what is meete for vs. One is handled after one fashion, [and another after another.] And doth God [sayth some man] take pleasure in such varietie? For hee knoweth that those things are for our behoofe. Although wee knewe none other reason, euen this were sufficient, that he doeth not any thing but with perfect righteousses & wisdom: and that ought to content vs. But we see moreouer, and finde it prouoed to vs by experience, that it is not good that all men should be dealt wichal alike. And why? For we haue diuerse dispositions & diuerse complexions; al me are not to be fed with one kind of meate; nor all diseases to be cured with one medicine. God therefore vseth diuerse of dealings towards vs, after as hee perceiueth it expedient for vs; And that is the cause why I sayd that the whole summe of Gods blessings is a mirtor vnto vs to shewe vs that hee so distributeth his gracious gistes vnto his Church as that euerie man hath his measure and qualitie, and yet notwithstanding that howsoeuer wee see, we must with all humilitie giue thanks vnto GOD, for that it pleaseth him to be our father: [assuring our selues] that although he giue vs not all that our flesh craueth; yet will he succour vs at our need, and turne our sorrowes to good, making them to serue to our saluation.

But it behooueth vs to marke well the word that is set downe heere by Moses, where he sayeth, that Nephthalim shall haue his fill of Gods fauour, and that he shall be replenished with his blessing. This word Blesse (as wee knowe) is taken diuers wayes in the holy Scripture. Sometime it is taken for praying. As when wee blesse one another, it is as much to say, as wee wish well one to another. And when it is attributed vnto God, it is also taken for benefiting or dooing good. For when God sayeth the worde, the deece goeth ioynly therewith. God then needeth not to wish vs any good; if hee doo but say that hee will doe vs good, wee shall haue our fill thereof, and whatsoever is expedient for our saluation. Nowe then, Gods blessing is a testimonie and effect of the free fauour, good will, and loue which hee beareth towards vs. But yet this free loue of God is as the fountayne: and then his blessing is as the Conduit pype. Therefore whensoeuer wee receiue any good or prosperitie; let vs assure our selues that it cometh of Gods blessing of vs, that is to saye, of his vttering of his fauour towards vs; but yet must wee euer resort to that free loue of his, when so euer wee bee so blessed at his hande. For hee would giue vs no show of his fatherly goodnes, if he had not receiued vs alreadie for his children. And that is the cause why he dealeth so gently and kindly with vs. Moses then hath kept here a verie good order, in saying that Nephthaly should haue his fill of Gods fauour, and be replenished with his blessing. Hee setteth downe Fauour in the first place, for (as I saide) that is the very wellspring: and afterward he addeth the blessing which proceedeth thereof, that is to saye, the record which God yeldeth by effect, that he loueth vs, and that hee hath adopted vs for his children, in respect whereof hee vouchsafeth to powre out vpon vs all the stores & treasures of his goodnes.

Now haue wee a good lesson to gather vpon this text: which is, that if wee bee desirous of prosperitie, wee must seeke it at Gods hand; & not do as they, do which wish ynough, but in the meane while cannot lift vp their hearts to call vpon God. Looke vpon the wishes of this world, how they flee in the aire; euery man cooeteth whatsoever most liketh his flesh; & there is no ende of wishing, with I woulde, I woulde. And whereas men speake after that fashion, yet shall yee scarce finde one among a hundred, which directeth himselfe to God, to say, Lorde thou knowest what is meete for mee, vouchsafe I beseech thee to sende it mee. Forasmuch then as men are so gadding, and that their nature leadeth them but to suckering in the aire after their wishes; and in the meane while they occupie not themselves in prayer and supplication: therefore it behooueth vs to marke well the texts, where it is shewed vs that all prosperitie cometh of God. And moreover we must vnderstand that when God uttereth his fauour in that wise, it is because that hee of his owne free goodnes hath vouchsafed to loue vs: so as we must not seeke the cause thereof in our selues, as though we had preuented God, or as though wee had gotten ought by our owne desertes: but [wee must vnderstande] that God is fauourable vnto vs, because hee hath loued vs, notwithstanding that wee were vnworthie of it. Thus yee see then that from the conduit-pype whereat wee drinke, wee must goe vp to the fountaine and to the springs head, that is to wit, to Gods free goodnes which is highest in degree, as the onely cause of all the benefites which wee receiue at his hand.

Nowe last of all it is sayde of Nephthaly, that hee shall possesse the South and the West, that is to say, the Sea; for so doeth the speech import. Wherein Moses propheseth againe of the state of that trybe. And let vs alwayes beare in mynde howe it is God that speaketh these things, to shewe that hee hath a care of that people. And that people was as a Mirror of the Church; yea, and in olde time it was the Church, in whose roome wee be nowe succeeded. Wherefore let vs assure our selues that G O D will alwayes haue a fatherly care of vs. And although hee governe all the nations of the worlde in generally by his prouidence: yet is hee neerer vnto vs, and that shall wee seele in that wee shall be vnder his direction: and that hee will so maintaine vs as wee shall knowe that nothing happeneth vnto vs by his will, in so much that one hayre shall not fall from our head, but by his appointment.

In the ende hee concludeth with Aser: True it is that Iacob in his blessing of Aser, sayeth that hee shall haue a country that is fruitfull of corne. Here it is sayd that hee shall be honoured for his children; and that hee shall be acceptable to his brethren. Wee see then howe God hath distributed to euery of them according to his owne will; and therewithall that it was not lawfull for any of the trybes to murmure against him, but that it behooued all of them to be contented that euery of them shoulde receiue the portion that was giuen him. And againe, that all of them shoulde thinke thus with them selues: Wee haue all one G O D and one father: although hee deale dyuersly with vs as touching our bodies; yet will hee haue vs to abyde all fast knit together, as whome hee hath called all to one selfe same inheritance. Lo what wee haue in effect to beare in mynd.

But here is no mention made of the trybe of Simeon. It is alledged that they were ydolaters. And what else were all the other trybes also: Wee knowe that all the Israelites were alienated from God, they were all backsliders, all the whole countrey was infected with abomination, and in the ende the very trybe of Iuda was corrupted. It was meete then that all should be buryed. Others say that Simeon was companion to Leuy, and therefore that Moses had already repaired that which had bene spoken against Leuie and Simcon, which ought to suffice; and that God gaue him no peculiar blessing, because of the cruell deede which they had committed together: but that it was ynough for him that hee was comforted in the person of Leuie. Howbeit we haue not a better, or a more likely coniecture than this; that although Simeon was then accounted as of the body of that people; yet God gaue him no seuerall blessing, but left him to languish; and yet notwithstanding, that hee was not destitute of all comfort, forasmuch as hee knew y his fault was forgien him, as we haue seene afore. In likewise our Lorde doeth sometime giue an incling of his fauour though somewhat dimly, so as we be not named, nor haue y thing so cleare as we could well find in our hartis to haue it; but our Lord maketh vs as it were to like vp his grace, like poore hungry soules; wee shall haue some darke promises, and wee shall finde them very leane: but yet howsoeuer wee faie, wee must vnderstande that wee must not bee out of heart. Therefore when our Lorde sheweth not his goodnes so largely as we would desire; wee must fall to the examining of our faults, whereby it is possible that wee haue prouoked him in such sort, that wee be vnworthie to haue him returne vnto vs out of hande, but hee is sayne to deale with vs as a father that will shewe some signe of displeasure to his childe, inſomuch that although hee ſay, well, I forgiue thee; yet will he not take home his chyld to him to make him a cockency in his houſe: he will not ſay vnto him, I will take thee home; but he will ſay, I will not vtterly diſclaim him, I will take him ſtil as one of my houſhold: and yet for all this, the chyld ſhall daunce attendance, he ſhall ſee his fathers countenance very ſtrange towards him, ſo as he ſhall dwell ſtill in dour and in ſuſpence. Euenſo was it betweene Simeon and God, Our Lord he ſwed not openly vnto him that hee was mynded to receiue him: but yet for all that he did not in the meanewhile vtterly caſt him off. Although he gaue him not ſuch warrant as was requiſite, to ſhewe that he would admit him to mercy; yet (as we haue ſcene afore) he might perceiue by the bleſſing which belonged to them both and was as it were common to them both, becauſe it was vttered in common by the mouth of the Patriark Iacob: that God did not baniſh him altogether out of his houſe. Howfoeuer the caſe ſtand, wee ſie that to reioyce in God & to receiue his gracious giſtes in ſuch ſort as we may haue our mouthes always open to gloriſie god, and alſo to bee diſpoſed thereunto all our life long; it behooueth vs to behold heere as in a mirrour, that ſeeing God is our father, and that we be partakers of the adoption which is made in our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, by whome hee hath drawen vs out of the deſtruction and gulfe wherein wee were plunged, and hath receiued & choſen vs to be of his flocke: the ſame ought to ſuffiſe vs, and to make vs to call vpon him, & to beare the afflictions patiently which he ſendeth vs, and to learne alſo to giue him thanks for his mainteining of vs in this mortall life; & not to be ſo groſſe in gobbling vp his benefites, as not to conſider that hee continually giueth vs ſome taſte of his goodnes and fatherly loue towards vs. Therefore let vs haue the ſkill to apply all theſe things to our profite, that wee may be more and more confirmed in beleeſe of the immortal inheritance whereunto wee be inuited.

Now let vs fall downe before the maieſtie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him ſo to reſourme vs, as wee may not be ſotred in our wicked luſtes & afflictions; nor Satan ſo bewitch vs with the pleaſures of this world, that wee ſhould bee eſtranged from our God; but that ſeeing he hath once vouchſafed to call vs to the knowledge of his trueth, and that his whole ſeeking is to drawe vs vnto himſelfe; we on our ſide may come vnto him, and euery of vs ſo do his indeuer, as our liues may be dedicated to his honor, and men may knowe that he reigneth among vs in verite deede, and that wee ſhoote at none other mark but to frame our ſelues in all pointes and all reſpects according to his lawes & holy ordinances. That it may pleaſe him to grant this grace, not only to vs, but alſo to all people & nations of the earth, &c.

On Munday the xiiij. of Iuly, 1556.

26 There is none like the God of Iſrael, who rideth vpon the heauens to help thee, and whoſe glorie is in the clowdes.

27 Thy dwelling place is the Euerlaſting God, & vnder his armes ſhalt thou be for euer. He will put thine enemies to flight before thee, & ſay, deſtroy them.

28 Iſrael ſhall dwell in ſafetie alone. The eye of Iacob ſhall dwell vpon a land of corne and wine: and his heauens ſhall drop dewes.

VE can wel ynough confeſſe in one worde the greatneſſe and highneſſe of God: but yet yee ſhal ſcarcely find one man of a hundred, which yeldeth vnto God that which belongeth vnto him. For euery man will needes haue his ſhare of it, as though it were a bootie or a pray. For prooſe whereof, who is hee that preſumeth not eyther vpon his owne vertue, or vpon his riches, or vpon his courage, or vpon his credit and authoritie? And by theſe meanes God is robbed of his glory. On the other ſide, if wee perceiue any danger, which of vs truſteth and reſteth vpon God, which of vs ſetteth his heart vpon him? Nay, we be vtterly diſmayed. And what elſe betokeneth this, but that after wee haue declared with our mouth that God is almighty, that he gouerneth the world, that nothing can let him to perſourme what he liſteth; we ſhewe by our doings that wee beleue none of all thoſe things, or elſe that wee be not fully & thoroughly perſuaded of them? And therefore it is not for nought that the ſcripture doeth ſo magnific God vnto vs, declaring vnto vs that wee cannot ſufficiently conſider his infinite highneſſe and power which is in him to doe whatſoeuer hee hath ordayned.

And

And that is the thing whereunto Moses had an eye in this text where he sayd, This is none like vnto God, & vnto light. This worde is taken for Israel or for the Church, as wee haue seene heretofore. Now at the first blusht a man would thinke that this doctrine were superfluous: specially being directed to such as euen from their childhood were trayned vp in the lawe, and had the doctrine preached vnto them. [A man would thinke (I say) that it were needlesse to tel them that there is none like vnto God. For who denyeth it? But (as I haue sayd alreadie) it costeth nothing to say so; but yet for all that, wee be so forepossest with the leasings and darknesse of our vnbeleefe, that wee cannot glorifie God in such sort as to rest vpon him, to call vpon him, and to holde our selues perswaded and resolved, that all shall go well with vs, so God doe pitie vs.

Let vs marke then that in this place Moses speaketh not of the vnbeleeuers, such as neuer wit what the maiestie of God is: but to such as had heard the lawe, to such as had had their eares beaten with teaching. And wherefore doeth hee it? I haue tolde you alreadie that wee be so inclined to distrust, that eury little temptation will ouerthrowe vs out of hande. Nowe wee ought to rest vpon the promise that is giuen vs; namely that God will guyde vs, & defende vs, so as wee shall not be ouercome. But wee see howe wee be dismayed euery minute of an houre, and wee haue neede to haue Gods power shewed vnto vs to confirme vs, and to knowe that which is saide heere, that is to wit, that there is not any like vnto God. And therefore when wee see the worlde set it selfe against vs, and Satan still practising one thing or other, let vs alwayes resort to this conclusion, that if God be on our side, who shall then be against vs? Not that we shall not haue many enemies, or that as in respect of our selues wee shall not haue much adoo to resist them: but that yet notwithstanding, God will win the vpper hand of them. The way then for vs to put this lesson in vrc, is that when wee see all the force of the worlde bent against vs, wee consider with our selues that all is but smoke in comparison of the inestimable power of our God, who wil alwayes be in a readinesse to succour vs.

Nowe hereunto Moses addeeth, that God rydeth vpon the heauens for our ayde, and that his maiestie is vpon the cloudes. This serueth to confirme the doctrine which wee haue heard afore. And although it be sufficiently expressed alreadie in one worde, that God hath not his like; and that hee deserueth to bee so exalted above all the worlde, that when he is spoken of, all things ought to stoope; according as it is sayde in the Prophetes; that as soone as his maiestie appeareth, the Sunne must lose his light, & the Moone must be darkened. Yet I say: Howsoever the case standeth forasmuch as wee conceiue not his infinite glorie and power: therefore it is sayd that God rydeth vpon the heauens, and that his maiestie is above the cloudes. As if it were tolde vs that all creatures are vnder his feete, that they bee subiect vnto him, and that hee can walede them as hee listeth. For if God were mingled with the worldly things, there would be a combat betwixt them, there would be many incouentes; and there would needes be rushing againe it selfe. When one man commeth against another, it must needes bee knowne which of them is the stronger to driue backe his enemy. If God then were in equall and like degree with his creatures, what would come of it? But whereas it is sayde, that he rydeth vpon the heauens, and that hee surmounteth all things: thereby it is done vs to vnderstande, that hee hath subdued to him selfe and to his dominion, whatsoever things may make vs asfayde. For although Satan bee called the prince of this worlde, although it bee sayd that hee fighteth against vs from the aire, and that hee is aboue ouer our heades: Yet notwithstanding hee commeth not at all at God, hee is fayne to stoope vnder him. So then in this text wee see our vnbeleefe. For when we haue gotten the knowledge of all things, if wee knowe not God, what is there in vs but viter ignorance and beastlinesse? For is it not the chiefe point of our wisdom, to bee so grounded in our God, that wee can call vpon him, and flee vnto him for refuge in all our needes? That wee doubt not of the assurednesse of our saluation, so hee kept vs? If wee haue not that, all our life is but wretchednes.

And by the way we haue to note, that where as the holy Ghost taketh so greate paynes to perswade vs what manner of one God is, and that his power is infinite: it is because wee see alwayes doubtful and wauering, so as there is no stayednesse in vs. In so much that although wee haue heard that God gouerneth all things, and that hee hath soueraigne dominion; and although men assure vs thereof, and it be tolde vs neuer so often times; yet cease wee not to haue still some fancies, or others, which darken our vnderstanding; wee enter into I wote not what speculations, and therewithall wee bee tossed and turmoyled with a great sorte of troubles that come vpon vs. And being so ouerraught by our owne fantastical imaginations, wee knowe what it is for vs to trust in God, and to leane vnto his power. Let vs vnderstande (I say) that in this text, the holy Ghost meant to put vs in mynde of the beastlinesse that is in vs, to the ende to waken vs, that wee may learne to magnifie the glorie of our God, better than we haue done, specially considering that all the things which are wont to make vs asfayde, are nothing in respect of him. For he is able to subdue both Satan & the worlde, and whatsoever else is against our saluation; yea, euen all those things must yeld themselves to his seruice whensoever he listeth.

But let vs also marke well the speeche that is set downe here, that God rydeth vpon the heauens to our ayde. If there were but mention made only of Gods maiestie, and that hee were exalted above all; wee should alreadie haue some matter to make vs to leane vnto him: But yet

Deut. 33. 5.

Rom. 8. 19.

Esa. 13. 10.

I. Pet. 12. 11. Ephel. 6. 12.

might we inquire whether he would haue pite vpon vs, and whether he would disappoynt the things that are againt vs, because wee bee not worthe that hee should vtter his power to our benefite. But here Moses saith expressely, y<sup>e</sup> looke what greaues & power God hath, he wil apply it to our welfare, that we may be maintained & defended. Therefore when wee heare that God wil be almightie to the intent to ayde vs, & to provide for al our needs, it is a thing whereon we take a sure & infallible resolution. Here then is nothing omitted or forgotten; for on the one side Moses thrusteth downe all that euer may seeme high, shewing that God hath all things vnder his feete, and that he can wel weald them as he listeth. And therewithall he sheweth [on the other side] that God will be fauourable vnto vs, that he will helpe vs, and that he will alwayes be readie to succour vs. So then, if wee conceiue God in his high maiestie, although hee seeme to be farre off from vs, and we to bee as wretched wormes creeping on the grounde, and he surmounting al that can be seene howe great excellencie so euer be in them: yet neuertheless, let vs assure our selues that he vouchsafeth to succour vs, and will haue that mightie power of his linked in vnseparable bonde with our welfare.

And that is the cause why Moses addeth, that his dwelling place shall be on high, or that the soveraigne God shall be his dwelling place, and that his armes are alwayes vnder him. Truly, this woide dwelling place is expounded as if it were meant that God is y<sup>e</sup> harbor of his seruants, after which manner it is sayde in the song of Moses in the nynetieth Psalm: Lord thou hast bene our refuge from generation to generation. And this kinde of similitude is verie often set downe, to shewe that we should be set open to wynde and rayne, heate and cold; if our Lord preserued vs not, and that we were not harboured vnder his wings. This interpretation then were very conuenient and profitable, namely that the dwelling place of the soveraigne & eueralsting God is a sure abode, and therefore that it is for our behoofe to get vs vnder him, for there we shall be in safetie, and wee shall be well lodged as it is said thereof in the fourscore & eleuenth Psalm. And (as I said afore) it is a doctrine which is to be seene almost in enery lease of the holy scripture, Howbeit for as much as ther is great briefnesse in the wordes, and there is no more sayde but the dwelling of God eueralsting: it will come al to one poynt if it be taken, that Gods abiding is eueralsting, so as he flecteth not as we see that we do, who are fayne to trot vp and down here beneath in the worlde, without any certayne stay. What is the life of men, yea, euen of those which thinke themselves to bee lodged in their nest, neuer to go out of it? Yet must they walke here & there. And in very deede there passeth not one minute of an hour without some change of vs. Though a man sit still or lye still, yet beareth hee changes continually with him, and hee himselfe changeth in the conceits of his mynd; and he is euer as a shadowe. Like as wee see a shadowe continually flecting to remoue from the one side to the other: euen so is it with men. I say they be continually flecting, which sheweth wel that their life slippeth away. But contrariwise it is sayd, that Gods abiding is eueralsting, according as S. Iames sayeth that there betalleth no shadowing vnto him. It is God (sayth he) in whom there is no trouble, so as he is not to bee compared to vs nor to any other creatures. For we be variable, & in continuall mouing; there is a certein furring which carryeth vs fro place to place: But in our God there is a sure stayednes, which wee comprehend not here. To be short, the intent of Moses was to shewe, that if wee put our trust in God, then come there neuer so many turnings and returnings, that heauen & earth may seeme to runne together, so as to day there is report of warre and to morrowe of famine, enemies approche, and sudden incouters come, in so much that wee bee besieged with a thousand dearies, & the world is continuall wauering; stormes arise on all sides, & we be as on the sea, where is no stay for vs to rest vpon: yet neuertheless we may wel be alwayes in quiet. And why? For the dwelling of our God is eueralsting, & therefore being vnder his hande and protection, let vs not be afraid of al the things that may happen vnto vs from elsewhere. For wee must not measure our God by the things which wee see with our eyes, & which be set vs here beneath.

Now remaineth that we apply this doctrine to our benefite: and although wee be driuen to lue as pilgrims in this world, & to be subiect to many changes: yet notwithstanding let vs not cease to put our selues still into the custodie of our God. And for as much as wee know that he wil maintaine vs; let vs ouerpasse al the stormes that rise againt vs, and let vs ouercome all temptations. By what power? Because he that dwelleth in heauen hath taken vs into his keepings; he wil defend vs, for his abode is eueralsting. So then, he is so gracious vnto vs, that we shal not perish, though it seeme y<sup>e</sup> we should be swallowed vp euery day, by the dangers that appeare vnto vs. And to the end we should be the surer hereof, it is said, That his armes are below for euer. Some referre this to the people of Israel, so as y<sup>e</sup> arms of that people shuld neuer faint, so long as they were vphelde from aboue: that is to say, they shall haue an invincible force so long as God is their ayd. Which thing is true. But the wordes of Moses import it not. His intent and meaning rather is, that Gods armes are here beneath: And why doeth he set Gods armes beneath, seeing he hath alreadye told vs that God rydeth vpon the heauens? These things seeme to be repugnant. For if God haue his seat on high, how shal he haue his armes so lowe? It is because hee filleth all things, so as not onely his essence is infinite, but also his power: and it is spoken of set purpose, because he wil haue vs to perceiue it by experience. If it were sayde that Gods armes are in heauen; it woulde well serue to mayntaine the Angels; but as for vs, wee shoulde neuertheless quake and

be afraid whensoever we were threatened with any mischiefe; we should looke heere and there, and continue dismayed without any remedie. Heere therefore the holy Ghost remedieth such temptations, and sayth that Gods armes are heere beneath. Although then that God sit above in his maiestie, although that as oft as we thinke vpon him, we must needs bee rauished with all iucurence to worshipp him with humilitie, seeing that we be nothing, and he is above all: although it behooue vs to worship God after that manner by abasing ourselues vterly: yet ought that to be no impediment vnto vs, that we should not knowe his power to be neere vnto vs, that his armes are reached out vnto vs, and that he will make the strength of them to be felt euen heere, and shew the open prooffe thereof. And why? For he will haue a care to keepe those whom he hath chosen and elected, euen those which trust in him, which rest vpon him, and which flee altogether vnto him. It is then a notable point of doctrine, when Moses maketh such a description of God, that on the one side hee sheweth vs how wee ought to behaue ourselues lowely in thinking vpon him; and on the other side comforteth vs in saying that our God disdaineth not to succour vs; and that for prooffe thereof hee putteth downe his armes heere belowe, not that he is not also in heauen as I haue sayde afore; but for our saythes sake, in respect wherof mention is made of these neathermost partes. If we looke vpon our life, truly there is nothing but frailtie in it. Againe, we be besegged with so many enemies, as is horrible to see: and moreover infinite deaths doe manace vs. But what? Gods armes are rounde about vs, we be fenced with them, and that for mo dayes than one. For as God is vnchangeable, and hath an euerabyng desire; so his armes also abide heere for euer, and he will neuer be weary of succouring vs. Let vs trust to that, and then may we alwayes haue full boldnesse, euen in the midst of all the troubles of this worlde, because our saluation is in Gods hande, so as we neede not to be afraid or to doubt.

Nowe after this, it is sayd, That he will driue away the enemy before vs, saying, Destroy them. Wee haue seene heere tofore howe Gods Church is neuer without enemies, because Sathan who is the prince of this world, doth moue the wicked continually to vexe the children of God. If the deuill were quite and cleane doone away, then truly we might haue peace in the worlde. But forasmuch as he hath the greatest multitude of men in his hande, who are forwarde by kinde, & we knowe that his whole seeking is to destroy vs: therefore we must prepare ourselues to haue warre as long as we be in the worlde. The condition is harde, but yet must we beare it patiently, seeing that our Lorde hath so ordained, and therefore seeing he will try our faith and obedience by stirring vp enemies vnto vs; let vs yeeld our neckes vnto him. But yet moreover we haue neede to bee succoured at his hande, yea and to haue him fight for vs: or otherwise what would become of vs? In that therefore ought we to haue full trust. Wherefore let vs be contented, and although we must needs be troubled; and susteine many brutes, and liue in continuall care forasmuch as our enemies cease not to prepare newe battels against vs: yet notwithstanding let vs stay our selues vpon this, that our Lorde will norleau vs in our neede. The meaning then of Moses is, that God will so stretch out his arme, that all our enemies shalbe put to flight; inasmuch that although they come with neuer so great violence against vs, so as it may seeme that they should beare downe all things afore them, yea and ouerthrow all things with their breath: yet notwithstanding God will step afore them, as in respect wherof he is heere after termed our sheelde. To be short we see after what manner Gods armes are heere belowe. They bee not ydle; but they bee occupied in driuing our enemies away. And we be warned not to vexe ourselues out of measure, when God exerciseth vs with store of temptations: but to stande alwayes vpon this ground (as I sayde,) that our Lorde will fight for vs, and that by resting vpon him, wee shall gette the vpper hande.

Nowe he addeth, that he will say, destroy them. If God put them to flight or driue them away; why sayth he that we shall destroy them? Heere may seeme to be some contrarietie: For if God doe all, it seemeth that hee leaueth nothing for vs. But Moses hath very well exprest, how it cometh to passe that we get the victorie of our enemies. In deede it is God that fighteth, but yet will he haue vs to bee instruments of his power. As for vs, we could not abide any one assault, vnlesse we were strengthened fro above, and (to be short) that God himselfe governed vs. For we be vterly vnprofitable, inasmuch that there is not one droppe of strength in vs, & that strength which we weene we haue, is but leasing. Yee see then how God worketh in such wise, that we be maintayned by him, whatsoeuer we haue be it welfare or life, we must farther it all wholly vpon him, and acknowledge ourselues to haue it from thence. And if we will needes make such a parution as the papistes do, and say that we worke together with God so as there is a concurrence [or meeting together]; and that we do helpe him: it is a renouncing of his ayde. So then, let vs learne to let God alone with that which is his, namely that all our welfare consisteth in him. Yet notwithstanding, he applyeth vs to his seruice, so as we seeme to be doers thereof. And that is a thing wherein the papists beguile themselues. They speake of Freewill, and of mans abilities, and (to their seeming) we worke wonders. They confesse in deede that we had neede to be helped by God, and that he had neede to succour vs with his grace: but yet doe they alwayes make vs companions with GOD. And why? Because they see well, that to serue God, to resist temptations, to walke in vprightnesse of life, and to eschue the corruptions of the world, the faithfull are faine to inforce themselves, to take paines to brydle themselves, to become as captiues, and to fight against them-felues, which can not be done but with great difficultie. For, to be patient in their aduersities, they are soine to holde themselves as locked vp, and so to brydle and ouer maister their passions, as they may be tamed. Nowe then, when the Papistes see the faithfull take such paines; they imagine that they do it of their owne power. But the matter is not whether we take great paines, and whether they labour ill they pant or no: but to knowe from whence that proceedeth. Now we say it is of God: and so there remaineth nor any share for men, nor ought wherof they may glory. God driueth away his enemies afore him, and yet neuertheless sayeth, Destroy them. Lo howe God on the one side destroyeth our enemies; and therewithall also commaundeth vs to vanquish them. How can these agree? O, yet is it God that doth all. And although he seeme to set vs a worke; yet are we able to do nothing. No, but yet do we inuoluce. Yea, so farforth as he giueth vs it, and according to the measure of his grace, so as we must not thinke we haue it of our owne growing. To be short, man hath nothing of his owne in this case, neither doth the holy Ghost leaue him any thing. But yet are not we ydle: for our Lorde keepeth vs occupied, and maketh his grace available in vs, and causeth it to bring forth fruite, and we be the instrumentes thereof. So then, we haue nowe this meaning of Moses; which is, that although heere belowe wee liue not in an earthly Paradise; but our enemies do vexe and trouble vs on all sides, and it seemeth that we should be swallowed vp by them: yet ought wee to walke on constantly vnder the protection of our God. And why? For his armes are come downe to vs, to succour vs by his power, which shall vanquish all that euer is against our welfare; so we on our side doe suffer him to vter his power in vs, and we behaue ourselves as his instrumentes. For although he be the doore of all; yet (as I sayd afore) he doth vs the grace to doe it, & will haue the worke to be as it were ours. Not so puffed vp with presumption & ouerweening as though we thought ourselves to haue any thing; but that we should so much the more acknowledge his goodnesse towards vs, in that hee attributeth and imparteth vnto vs the thing that is his, yea and will haue it to be reputed as our owne. Having spoken after that fashion, he addeth, that Israell shall dwell safely alone by himselfe. Heere Moses had an eye to the state and condition of that people; because God had culled them out, to set them there as in a nest by the felues. True it is that the Countrey of Iewry was not separated out from all other Countreies; but yet had God cast this iurisdiction there, as we haue seene in the last chapter going afore; and that he had set the boundes and borders thereof, of purpose to harbour that people there. Howe soeuer the case stande, the people of Israell were separated from all other Nations. They had in deede some trafficked with their neighbours; but yet had God gathered them together, as who would say, yee shall be punished; that ye may no more liue in the corruptions of this worlde. And that could not be done, but that the rest of the world must haue them and shake them off. For when men despise vs, we also on our side do disdain them againe. The neighbours of the Iewes then, desyred nothing so much as that the memory of the Iewes might haue perished. To this state of theirs had Moses a respect in saying, that Israell should dwell safely, though he dwelt alone by himselfe. As if hee should say, In deede it is like ynough that yee shall be in perill of many daungers; because our Lord wil not haue you to be mingled with other natiōs, but wil haue ye to be as a litle body close knit together: It may wel seeme yee should be a frayde; but it is ynough y your God hath you in his custody: therefore be contented with him and with his ayde, and ye shall dwell safely. Furthermore it is not to be doubted but that heere Moses ment to giue a continuing lesion to the whole Church; which is to thinke her selfe safe and well assured of her saluation, although shee see not her selfe fenced in the worlde, ne to haue fortresses, walles, weapons, or any other such things wherein men are wont to trust, but rather is vtterly destitute of them all. And why? For we be in the hande of God. Then if we will yelde God the honour which hee deserueth: when we see nothing heere beneath, that may assure our safetie; let vs learne to go streight vnto him, and to make such account of his power, as to conclude that wee neede not to feare any thing so he be on our side. For if wee will haue our safegarde heere beneath; our Lorde will be nothing to vs, neither can we say that it is he in whom we put our whole trust. If we seeke the inferiour meanes, and y as soone as they fayle vs, by & by our hearts quail, then is there nothing but hypocrisie in vs, and we shall euer be wray our owne distrust. Ye see then howe the true rryall of our faith, is to hope in such sort for succour from our God, that although all the worlde fayle vs, and we see nothing about vs that may giue vs corage; yet we assure ourselves of safegarde [at his hande]. That is the thing which this text importeth.

When we haue digested this lesion, we shall fare much the better by it all the time of our life. For on the one side wee shall be drawen away frō the vaine imaginations which deceiue vs. As soone as we haue any thing heere beneath that makes for vs, or if we be any thing afore hande; we doe as it were despise God, that is to say, we thinke not that we haue any more neede of him. Will they that haue their Garners and cellers well stored, call vpon God to bee fedde at his hande? In deede they will say their Paternoster as other men doe: but yet there is nothing but sith in them, they beare themselves in hande that they be sufficiently provided for, so as they come not to God for any neede. In like case is it with them which are healthy and strong; they consider not the brittlenesse of their life. To be short, so long as things fall out to our minde and desire in this worlde, we be so dafeled with it that we resort not vnto God, ne knowe what it is to be guided and governed by him. And therefore let vs exercise ourselves in this lesion, that that it behooueth vs to dwell in heauen : that whensoever God listeth to leaue vs alone , that is to say to bereaue vs of al mainteynance , so as we be destitute of all helpes to trust vnto : yet for all that we must not be out of heart. And the reason is , because our safetie consisteth not in any of the things which we discern with our naturall senses ; but in Gods defence . True it is that we perceiue not his hande but by fayth , for it is inuisible . But yet will he make vs to perceiue his succour continually , if we receiue his worde : and when he sheweth his goodnesse vnto vs , his power goeth ioyntly therewith . And therefore first of all , let vs be withdrawn from all the vaine selfeweenings which are woont to deceiue vs : and secondly let vs doe this honour vnto God , that we put our trust in him , knowing that sith he hath care of our welfare , we shalbe in safetie . And this ought to preuaile more now adayes , than euer it did . For it is sayd expressly of the reigne of our Lord Iesus Christ , that euerian shall dwell safely vnder his vine and vnder his figtree . Seeing then that our Lord Iesus Christ calleth vs now adayes vnto his protection ; let vs boldly rest vpon him . Albeit y<sup>e</sup> all things goe agaynst vs , and worldly helpes taile vs ; yet howsoever we fire let vs stande fast , and let this saying bee well printed in our remembrance , that Israell shall not fayle to be safe though hee be alone . And why ? Because God is his keeper ; his welfare dependeth not vpon y<sup>e</sup> stayes of this world ; it is ynough for him that God hath taken him into his custodie .

And hee addeth immediately , that the Eye or Fountaine of Iacob was vpon a Land of Corne & Wine , and that the heauens should droppe downe dewes . Heereby Moses betokeneth in effect , that if we be Gods people , he will haue a care to sustayne vs : and that because wee haue neede of sustenance , hee will provide vs thereof according to our necessitie , so as hee will giue vs meate and drinke sufficient . True it is that the Hebrew word which he vseth , may bee taken both for an Eye and for a Fountaine . And in deede the Hebrewes call Fountaines Eyes , because the springes of the water ( if yee marke them ) haue the shape of the eye in a mans body . If we take it for an eye in his proper signification ; it is as much to say as that Gods people shall haue their sight continually vpon corne and wine , and that God will giue them sufficient sustenance . For the dewe shall come downe from heauen , which shall make the grounde to yeelde fruite . If we should take it for a Fountaine ; that were somewhat harde , I grant it is sayde in y<sup>e</sup> Psalmes . You that be of the fountaines or wellspringes of Iacob : but that is because the Patriarke Iacob was the wellspring of that people . And it could not agree to the present text . And therefore let vs content ourselues with the naturall sense of Moses : which is , that God will make vs feele & shewe vs by experience , that we shall receiue sustenance at his hande as long as wee bee in this worlde . Of a truth , breade and wine are not the chiefe things which we ought to seeke at Gods hande : yet is it much when we see he hath a care of this corruptible life . And that ought to make vs to flye vp higher . For when we see that God vouchsafeth to feede our bodies : ought wee not to conlude that it is much more likely that he will feede our soules which are much more deerer vnto him ? The good then which we receiue heere beneath , ought to serue to make vs to sende vp our trust aboute the heauens , to seeke a better life at his hand , which we can not as nowe comprehend . And therefore of no small importance is this promise where it is layde , that God will alwayes make his people see and feele that he is their foster father , that he giueth them corne and wine for their sustenance , and that he will sende them dewe from heauen to keepe the grounde frō parching vp , so as it may haue moysture to susteine those which otherwise should abyde a hungred . Ye see then that the thing which we haue to remember vpon this place , is that if we be of Gods flocke , we shall not be destitute of any needefull thing . For euen as in respect of this transitorie life , we shall be fedde and nourished at his hande . And when we obtaine sustenance at Gods hande ; it is to encourage vs . Let such as are poore take paines , and pray vnto God to lesse their labor , because it belongeth to him to susteine those that are his . Lo howe the poore ought to bee stirred vp vnto prayer . And if they haue little wherewith to susteine them , let them consider that God intendeth to trye their patience ; and yet that in the meane while hee maketh that sustenance of theirs as slender as it is , to turne into Manna , so as they be susteyned therewith . Let not the rich fort be puffd vp with pride , vpon that they haue their life in their owne hande ; but let them vnderstande that it behooueth the to haue recourse vnto God with all their goods . For if they haue not a regarde of him ; let them assure themselues that he can well consume the Corne in their Garners , the grist at the mill , & the batch in the Ouen ; yea he will consume the bread in their bellies , so as in steede of receiuing nourishment by it , they haue nothing but corruption . Let vs knowe then , that God must be faine to performe y<sup>e</sup> which is declared heere , that is to wit , that our eye may be vpon a Land of Corne and wine : and that it behooueth vs to consider that it is he to whome we be beholden for all things . I grant it may fall out that wee shall not haue such abundance as wee would wish , and as our flesh lusteth for : but yet ( as I haue sayd already ) God sheweth that he forgetteth not his seruantes ; and that although hee giue them but a small and slender pittance ; yet they haue wherewith to content themselves , because they receiue sustenance at his hand . Therefore as long as wee be to passe through this world , let it suffice vs that God vouchsafeth still to susteyne vs , and that in so doing he sheweth himselfe a father towards vs to the intent we should go on still , and keepe on our way to the heauenly heritage whereunto he will bring vs , to make vs inioy the things fully and perfectly , whereof we haue knowledge as nowe but in part .

After that maner ought we to put the sayde lesson

Mich. 4. 4.

Psal. 68. 27.

lesson in practise. For when the holy Ghost speaketh of the temporall blessings which God fendeth to his children: he meaneth not to hold them there, as if he should say, seeke no greater things: but contrariwise, because wee be reckless and slowe, and can not step one step without stumbling except wee bee vphelde by God; and specially we could not haue the steedinesse and constancie to say, Let vs put ourselues into the hands of our God, let vs yeelde vnto him, and in our passing through this world, let vs not be held backe, assuring ourselues that Gods providing for all our necessities, is to none other ende but that we should looke vpp vnto him: That (say I) is the ende whereunto we ought to referre all the promises wherein our Lord sayth that he will haue a care of our life. Wherefore let vs make this lesson auayleable wherein it is sayde, That his eye shalbe vpon a Lande of Corne and Wine. True it is that we shall be threatned with many necessities, so as we shall be in continuall anguish: yet notwithstanding, if we haue an eye to Gods blessing, we shall hope y<sup>e</sup> he will guide vs vnto the end, and that he will make vs to perceiue that he hath goods sufficient wherewith to mayntaine those that are of his housholde: yea and to susteine them in such wise, that by the abundance which he will giue them, he will shew them also that he is able to susteine them euen as it were with nothing. For when God giueth vs abundance and fruitefulnessse, there we see that he layeth forth his treasures, and that (as hath bin declared heretofore) he will lay abroad the treasures which were (as it were) hidden vnder the earth. But when wee haue a very decre and scarce yeere, which seemeth vnable to finde almost the one halfe of the poore people: If our Lord make the same to suffice, and wee passe it cleane ouer: in the ende we know that our Lord provided for vs, and shewed a farre more wonderfull providence, than if hee hadde giuen vs wherewith to fill our bellies, & that we had wanted nothing. So then, howlocuer the world goe, let vs learne to call vpon our God. If wee haue sustenance, let vs vnderstande that it is not for vs to trust thereto, but to do vs to wit, that when God is liberall vnto vs, we must consider that he laieth forth his riches because he hath a care of our life. And when we haue not sufficient provision, let vs resort vnto him, assuring ourselues that he is not diminished: and that although he shewe not his bountifullnesse to the vewe of our eye; yet he hath wherewith to susteyne his seruantes. And therefore let vs call vpon him, & put the thing in practise which is shewed vs by our Lord Iesus Christ, which is to craue of him our ordinary bread from day to day. Math. 6. 11.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs perceiue them better, and that we may be so toucht with repentance, as it may make vs to submit ourselues wholly to his trueth, and to fight in such wise against our owne affections, as our battaile may be spirituall against Sathan and against all his attemptes, vntill we haue obtained the victory that is promised vs, at such time as wee shall be perfectly knit vnto our Lorde Iesus Christ, to bee partakers of the glory of his resurrection. That it may please him to graunt this grace not only to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewsdai the xiiij. of Iuly, 1556.

The CXCIX. Sermon which is the ninth vpon the xxxij. Chapter, and the first vpon the xxxiiij. Chapter.

29 Blessed art thou O Israell. Who is like thee O people which art saued by the Lorde the sheelde of thine ayde, and who is the sworde of thy mightinesse? Thine enemies shalbe weakened towards thee, and thou shalt march ouer their toppes.

THEN Moses went from the plaine of Moab vnto the mountaine Nebo, vp to the top of Phasga, which is ouer against Iericho. And the Lorde made him to see the whole Lande, the Countrey of Galaad vnto Dan.

2 And all the Lande of Nephthaly, and all the Lande of Ephraim and of Manasses; and all the Lande of Iuda vnto the vttermost Sea.

3 And the South and the leuell of the medowes of Iericho, the citie of Palm-trees, vnto Zoar.

4 And the Lorde sayde vnto him, This is the Lande wherewith I sware to Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, saying, I will giue it to thy seede; I haue made thee to see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not go into it.

5 And Moses the seruauant of the Lorde dyed there, in the Lande of Moab, according to the word of the Lorde.

6 And he was buried in the valley in the Lande of Moab, oueragainst Bethphogor, and no man hath knowen his graue vnto this day.

Mong the other matters which were layde forth yesterday, there remained how Moses told the people of Israel, That there was not then any Nation upon earth, like vnto them, because they were saued by God: and that is to be marked well. For although God do by his power and grace preferre all creatures; yet will he be knowne to be the Saviour of his people. Therefore when wee be saued in him it is a piuidge which can not be sufficiently expressed & magnified. For we differ not from other men in respect of any worthinesse that is in vs; neither haue we it by inheritance, but it cometh of Gods freegoodnesse. And therefore whensoever we be spoken concerning our saluation, let vs vnderstande from whence it proceedeth, and that God giueth vs that beautie. For we be like all the rest of Adams offspring. If we should be esteemed according to our nature, we be no better woorth than those whom God forsaketh and vterly casteth away. Wherefore then hath he chosen vs, but for his owne meere goodnesse sake. The thing which we haue to remember vpon this text, is that God will haue his grace so much the better knowne, because saluation is not common in generall to all men, but is a peculiar gift. And Moses sheweth by the way, what this sauing is; namely when God is our shield and our defence. As if hee should say that without him we can not be maintayned; for wee be layde open to many deathes, and haue not wherewith to resist. It is like as when a man is assayed on all sides, and hath neither weapon nor armour, but is starke naked. Euen so is it with vs, if God fence vs not. Therefore he is called our shield and our help. Wherby we be done to vnderstand, that we can not succour ourselues of our owne power, neither haue we the meane to doe; but it must come of God. Hee is termed the sward of our glorie. In deede men glorie ynough in themselues, they flatter themselues, and they perswade themselues the thing that is not. But here we be plucked backe from all the vaine hopes which deceiue vs and beguile vs, to the ende we should learne to set all our glorie in

God, and to conclude that we haue none other power than his, whereby to be maintayned.

Now heere vpon Moses addeth, that the Iewes should march ouer their enemies heades, or ouer all their gallantnesse (for there is no more but the word Top, or highest part), and that at their enemies shall flatter them with leasing [or lying]: for this worde Lye in holy scripture, is taken for to set a good face or countenance vpon a matter, and to play the hypocrite by force, as when it is said in the eighteenth Psalme (where the great victories are spoken of, which God would giue vnto Dauid) Thine enemies shall lye vnto thee. Nowe then, the summe is this, that God will be the fauour of his people. In somuch that although they haue many enemies, yet shall they not be able to match them, but shall be driuen in the ende to confesse themselues to be the weaker. And that although their dooing be but counterfaite; yet notwithstanding, Gods power shall shewe it selfe therein. And now proceeding with this lesson, let vs learne first to knowe that wee be vterly naked, and that wee want all things: & when we knowe that, let vs humble ourselues so as there may not be one droppe of haughtinesse or foolish selfewening in vs. And there withall let vs vnderstand, that God will not suffer vs to quail in any case. For if we haue neither sword nor shielde, he will serue our turne for both of them. If we be in daunger of vndoing, hee is our preferer. If we be plunged here in neuer so many miseries with the rest of all mankind; we shall be recovered again by his grace, because he hath chosen vs for his people. That is the point whereon we must rest.

Nowe haue we heere a rehearal of the death of Moses, wherof mention was made in the end of the two and thirtieth Chapter, and heere it is repeated againe; namely that God made Moses to goe up into the mountaine Nebo, which other wise is a part of the Mountaine Abarim. And he addeth afterwarde Gay. In deede this worde Gay signifieth a valley. But we see it was a part of the mountaine in diuers respectes, and that appeareth in many places. Moses then went vp as he was commaunded of God, and there beheld all the Lande which had bin promised for an inheritance to the lineage of Abraham, euen vnto the Sea which was right ouer against it, that is to wit the midland Sea. He viewed the Countrey, to the intent he should be certified before his death, that the promise which God hadde made foure hundred yeeres afore, was not in vaine, but euen at the point to be performed: neuertheless it was not Lawfull for him to goe into the Lande, but only to see it. And (as hath bene treated heretofore) God punished him because he had not glorified God at the place of Meriba, that is to say the place of Strife, which was so named because the people were on an up-rore there.

And heere we haue to call to minde the thing which hath bene layde foorth already more at length; that is to wit, the obedientnesse of Moses. For he knewe well that his going vp thither as God called him, was to the intent he should die. Death then was not so greuous vnto him, but that he prepared himselfe vnto it when hee sawe it was Gods will it should be so. And by this example wee be taught to liue in such sort, as wee may alwayes haue one foote lifted vppe to goe, whensoever GOD listeth to take vs hence to himselfe. And in deede, what win the stubborne sort by their desyrousnesse to eschewe death, but to bee ouercome by force when they haue fretted and chafed neuer so much? It is a point of slender discretion when men consider not that as God hath sette them heere, so he ought also to haue authoritie to take them away againe when he listeth. Wee shewe ourselues to be destitute of wit and reason like brute beastes, if we haue not such consideration vs. Wherefore let vs learne to finish our course in such wise, walking as Pilgrimes vpon earth: as we may euermore be ready and weldisposed to depart from it, whensoever God sheweth vs that our houre is come. But truly that can not be done, except we conceiue a hope of a better life. For (as sayth S. Paul) naturally we be loth to be vshoused; there is no man but hee would saine continue still. Therefore it standeth vs in hande to knowe that our true dwelling place is not heere in this worlde, and that we be but only to passe through it. So then, without sayth we can neuer obey God, specially when we be to depart out of the worlde; but we will alwayes grynde our teeth at it, so as if it were possible, we would fight against God. But when we once conceiue that our inheritaunce is aboue, and that God hath a better life in store for vs: then doe we determine and prepare to submit ourselues vnto him, whensoever hee giueth vs any token that we must depart hence. After that manner shall we followe the example of Moses.

I graunt he had a promise that God accepted him for one of his; but yet the same belongeth to vs also, and we haue this aduantage more, that our Lorde Iesus Christ who is our life, hath shewed himselfe vnto vs, to the intent we should boldly followe his steppes. And he entered into death, to bring vs to the glorie of his resurrection. Therefore let vs not sticke to followe the Lorde Iesus, because that if we die with him, we be sure (as sayth S. Paule) to be partakers of his life, and to be companions with him, because it belongeth vnto vs. For he was not rayfed againe for his owne profite, but for the assuring of our saluation. Therefore let vs not doubt thereof, but let vs cleaue vnto him. And in so doing let vs assure ourselues, that his resurrection shall be manifested in vs also. Thus ye see howe we haue to put this text in practise, where it is sayde that Moses went vppe to the mountaine knowing well that when he came there, God would take him out of the worlde. And yet for all that hee shunned not the place, ne made any resistance, but prepared himselfe to death with true obedience, yea and with such frowardnesse, that he needed not to be ledde, nor to be haled forth by the handes of fergeauntes. God sayde the worde, and Moses went thither with a good will.

Againe, let vs marke also what hath bin declared as touching the punishment that was laid vpon Moses: namely that God had shut him out & banished him from the lande which was promised to all Abrahams posteritie: and that was a verie greuous thing to him. But yet did he beare it patiently, acknowledging vs fault which he had committed; though it came not of himselfe. For he had alwayes serued God faithfully: yea and in the very selfsame deede, there was no more but this, that it spyted him to see the leaudnesse of the people. Howbeit forasmuch as he was cast downe, and stood not so stoutly to it as was requisite; God layd that fault to his charge, and punished it with such rigour as we see, in not admitting him into the lande of promise. To be short, let vs vnderstande (as I haue sayde afore) that whereas we thinke wee haue not done amisse, our offences shall be grosse and exceeding great before God. Wherefore let vs learne, not to be our owne Iudges, but to referre ourselues vnto God, and to suffer him to acquit vs or condemne vs by his worde. When we shall haue doone any thing, albeit that our conscience reprocue vs not, let vs assure ourselues that God seeth more clearly than we do, as sayth S. Iohn in his canonically Epistle. And if we thinke the fault small, our Lorde will account it great. If we should iudge after the imagination of men concerning this deede of Moses, what is to be sayde but that he shewed great stoutnesse? For he resisted the people, and vsed very rough and sharpe wordes. Thinke yee (sayth he) that God is not able to make water to issue out of this Rocke? See howe Moses stryuet with them through sayth, with obedience to God, and hee glorifieth him. To be short, in all his words there is nothing to be seene, which is not wisely praye: and yet notwithstanding he did amisse; and seeing that God pronounceth it so, it is not for vs to gaine say it. Therefore let vs learne to walke in humilitie, for feare least it happen vnto vs according to this saying of Salomon, that whc we haue weyed our wayes and thoughtes, and that to our owne seeming there is nothing amisse, God will not agree to our balaunce, for hee hath another measure, whereby he will iudge more vprightly. And we haue his worde to iudge vs. Let euery man then examine himselfe, and when we finde that our Lorde reprocue any thing, let vs assure ourselues it is not without cause. Againe when we once knowe our faultes, let vs assure ourselues that there are a hundred thousande times more than we can perceiue, and we must cry out with

Psal. 19. 13. Dauid, Lorde, who can tell the number of his fautes: Cense thou mee from my secreet finnes.

Moreover, wee haue to comfort ourselues in all the temporall punishments which God sendeth vs, because they serue to bring vs lowe, whereby God ceaseth not to further our saluation continually, and to holde vs euermore in the hope which we haue that he accounteth vs of his housholde and Church. So long then as we be sure that we belong to our God, and that he acknowledgeth and auoweth vs to be his; it ought well to content vs, as wee see heere that Moses was contented with the onely sight of the Land. Truly he neither possessed nor inioyed it; but it sufficed him that he was a partener in the promise, to the ende he might attaine to the heritage of heauen. Forasmuch as Moses had that, it was a comfort and ioy vnto him. And it behoued him thence forth to forbearde the making of that request any more afterwarde. So then, although the punishments bee harde vnto vs when God chastiseth our finnes, & that we may desire him to deliuer vs from them: yet if wee see that his will is not so, but that it is good for vs to be corrected, let vs strengthen ourselues to it, and pray him to giue vs power to holde out vnquailed. And therewithall let vs vnderstande that our strength consisteth in faith, in y<sup>e</sup> we haue an eye to the hope wherunto we be called. True it is that we possesse not in deede the thing that is promised vs; but yet God giueth vs such a taste thereof, as ought to suffice vs: we haue the certeinetic thereof printed in vs by his holy spirite. Therefore let that bee a meane to holde vs in, that we may patiently beare all the corrections which God listeth to lay vpon vs. That is y<sup>e</sup> thing which we haue to gather here vpon the example of Moses.

Now in the end it is sayd, That God buried him. In deede the word [God] is not expressed, y<sup>e</sup> text sayth only Moses dyed, and he buried him in Nebo: but yet it setteth down also, according to the mouth of God, and buryed him in Gay. Hee went vp into Nebo, & on the other side of the hill, there was a place named the valley of Gay; and there was his sepulchre. We see then y<sup>e</sup> it is spoken of God where it is set downe that Moses dyed according to his mouth. For Gods mouth signifieth nothing else but his worde. In deede God declareth not the dying tyme of euery of vs, he referueth that to himselfe. We haue our boundes which we can not passe; but we shall die euery chone of vs, and we be to die according to Gods decree. The onely difference betwene vs and Moses is this, that God telleth vs that we be mortall as soone as we come into the worlde. Heerewithall we see also how short & flyghtfull our life is, in somuch that we haue but a shadow which slippeth away. We see it; but we haue not a day certaine assigned vs: God prolongeth the life of one, & shorteneth the life of another. And in that case it behoueth vs to submit ourselues to his determination. All of vs then die according to Gods decree: but Moses dyed according to his mouth, that is to say, according as hee had declared it afore, Nowe as rouching his buryall, it behooueth vs to see wherefore Moses was not buried after the common fashion of men, and why he would haue his sepulcher to remain vnknown. Soothly we must not expounde the worde so grossely which is set downe heere, as to say y<sup>e</sup> God made a pit to burye Moses in: but hee so ordained that he was buried by his power. God needeth not to set his hande to a thing when hee will haue it done: it is ynough that his power bee known. For all creatures must needs obey him, the earth will open when it pleaseth him, as the which was made of nothing. God then may commaunde, and the thing is by and by done & performed, accordingly as it is saide in the Psalmes, Psal. 33. 9. that his commaundement is of as great force as all the executions of the worlde. Ye see then that y<sup>e</sup> burying of Moses by God, was that God willed the earth to open to giue him buryall, & to hyde his body in such sort as neuer man might knowe what became thereof. And it was not without cause, y<sup>e</sup> God would haue the graue of Moses so hidden. Nay rather, wee haue to note what S. Iude sayth thereof in his epistle, y<sup>e</sup> is to wit, that Michael tharkeangell fought with the deuill for the graue of Moses. And that battell was not stirred vp by Satan for nought. For needs must it be that hee pretended some aduantage, if the graue of Moses had bin known: and that had bin a meane to beguyle men with superstition. So then Gods purpose and intent is nowe manifest vnto vs; which is that he would not haue men to abufe the body of Moses in ydolatrie. And seeing that God provided for it; it is a signe that he knewe mens inclinations to be such, as they would hardly forbearde to make ydolles, if they had any occasion at all. Beholde, Moses excelled all Prophetes, as it is said of him in the ende of this booke, & as (by Gods will) we shall see to morrow. In somuch that after his death there came not a prophet in Israel like vnto him. All of them were as expounders of the Lawe; but yet had he as it were the principall authoritie. Again, we knowe howe God wrought by him, how he deliuered the children of Israel from the bondage of Egypt, howe hee ruled them by the space of fortie yeeres in the wilderness: yea and that he was taken vp into the mountaine to set forth the Lawe, and had taryed there fortie dayes and fourtie nightes together without eating or drinking, liuing like an Angell of heauen, as one that was no more subiect to mortall state. For we knowe that men can not continue if they want sustentance. Ye see then howe Moses was caught vp to the glorie of heauen. Moreover, when he came to the people, he had beames streaming from his face so as men could no more abide to looke vpon him than vpon the Sunne. The brightnesse of God shewed it selfe in such wise in him, that the people were astonished at it, and hee was fayned to put a veyle before his face, to shewe that he was no more a common man, nor ought to be taken as he was afore. Seeing then that Moses had done so notable things, and God had so hyghly inhonored him: no dout but the people would haue bene led to some superstition, and haue made an ydol of his bodie. That is y<sup>e</sup> cause why his body was hidden, and God would not haue it to be perceiued.

Nowe wee haue in this text a very profitable warning. First of all how great fraicte there is in vs, if wee bee not restrained and brydded by God; and that about all things our nature is fogeten to superstition, that God is faine to reclaime vs from that vyce as it were by force. Therefore let vs suspect our selues in that behalfe, and consider that it standeth vs in hande to remoue all obiectes and all other things that may inyce vs to ydolatry, because wee be so much giuen vnto it already. Marke that for one poynt. But if men had wel considered this, there had neuer bene so great and horrible confusion, as is to be seene in the Popedome. What is the cause the Papistes are so whot after their ydols and puppets? Whereupon haue they taken so great libertie to fill all their Churches with them without ende or measure, buylding so many altars and chappels, and making so many images and pictures? It is for want of the knowledge of that which is tolde vs heere, that is to wit, that as soone as men haue neuer so little occasion to commit ydolatrie, by and by they be rauished with it, and as it were starke mad. They knewe not this. They bore themselves in hande that they might buylde altars, make images, and fill all places with the filthines of their ydolatrie, and yet not offend God. They perswaded themselves so. Howbeit they shewed by experience, that God doth not without cause condemne all mankind to bee giuen to superstition. Seeing then that wee perceiue this mischiefe to bee come to passe; let vs rather take warning to lue soberly; and (as I sayd afore) let vs distrust our owne nature, seeing it is so fulfill and corrupted. Also let vs note, that God meant to shewe by his owne authoritie, howe greatly all ydolatries and superstitions displeaseth him. Hee hath hidden the graue of Moses; and shall men nowe pleade against it? No: for it is a fighting against God, when wee will nowe dispute whether it be good to haue means of ydolatrie. For our Lord pulleth them away from vs, because he seeth well that wee shall by and by bee snarled in Satans snares, vnlesse hee take from vs all obiectes. Seeing then that God declareth the matter so plainly; it behooueth vs to agree fully thereunto.

And specially wee haue to note, that heere God condemneth all the superstitions which are committed in the persons of Prophets or Apostles, as well as vnto Idols which the Heathen haue made. And that is yet one other thing wherein the Papistes do ouer grossely ouershoote themselves. For when ydols are spoken of, they beare themselves in hand, that if a man worship not the gods which were renowned among the Heathen; it makes no matter, & that it is no ydolatrie at all. For if the virgin Marie should bee called an ydol among them; what a thing were it? If the Saints as well Apostles as Martyrs, & euen those whom they themselves haue imagined, should be called ydols; it were a cursed speech among the Papistes. And why? For they take none to be ydols, but those which were so vsed among the Heathen. Yea, but in the meane time they perceiue not that ydolatrie may as well be committed in the person of an Angel, yea & euen in the person of God; as in the persons of these petitiuells which were so forged among the Infidels. I say that ydolatrie may be committed euen in the person of God. Let a man followe all the abominations that are committed in the world, & how be they coloured? There is a thing in the Popedome, which they terme Gods seruice; and what is that? The Masse. But we knowe it is most lothsome & diuelish ydolatrie that can be, specially, because y<sup>e</sup> name of God is intermedled with it. So then we may wel say, that we serue God, & that we worship him; & yet in the meane while there shalbe shameful & excellue ydolatrie; as when men turne away from Gods worde, & followe their owne inuentions & fancies. But as for the Papists, it is certaine that of the virgin Mary they make an ydol. For wheras they attribute vnto her the office of an Aduocate, to make intercession betweene God & men, & terme her their life, light, & hope: what remaineth more to our Lord Iesus Christ? Is he not by that meane benefite of his Priesthood which was giuen vnto him of God his father? As much is to bee said of all the rest of their Patrones as they beare themselves in hand. So then we ought to marke well this text, where God would haue the body of Moses to be hidden. And why? Because that if the people had giuen themselves that way, it had bin no lesse abomination, than their receiuing of strange gods, & their intangling of themselves in the superstitions of the Heathen. I grant there had been a more apparant shewings here: For they would haue sayd, he was y<sup>e</sup> seruant & Prophet of God, who published the law: and therefore in the honor of God whom he serued, hee must nowe bee worshipped and haue his bodie aduanced among vs. And if he rod which he bare had such vertue in it; howe much more shall his bodie haue? Therefore whē we would bee heard of God, wee may resort to his tumb, and there pray vnto God. For needes must he be present with y<sup>e</sup> bodie of Moses, seeing that so great & notable miracles were wrought by his rod only. Such things might they haue alledged. But yet for all that, where are so many enticements of Satan, there ought we to be the more asrayde. When Satan hath illusions, and the things which he faceth vs withall doe carry some likelihood: then must wee (say I) fight the more manfully; or otherwise wee shall be carryed away by and by into manie dotages, from whence it will be vnpossible for vs to rectyre.

Moreouer, as touching the text which I alledged out of S. Iude, let vs mark that in all ages it hath bin Satans policie, to face men with the things y<sup>e</sup> might corrupt them, or drawe them to ydolatrie: like as the Fowler or Birdcatcher hath his snares and nettes alwayes set; so hath Satan his sleights to beguyle vs. And he knoweth that he hath wunne the goale of vs; when he can once turne vs away from the purencesse of Gods seruice, and trayne vs to some superstition: for then runne wee headlong into wickednes, and hee carryeth vs whither he listeth. This is the cause why he taketh so much paines in this behalfe, and wee see it as in respect of the bodie of Moses; yea, wee see it by experience that which is vsed too much. And herewithall let vs marke well howe S. Iude sayeth, that Michael the Archangel withstoode him. Yee see here howe there is a stryfe betweene the Angels of God and the diuels, the Angels fighting to maintaine vs continually in the purenes which God requireth, that is to say, that we should worship him alone, and not put our trust in any creatures. That is the desire of the Angels. On the other side, the diuel beinge enemye to our saluation would faine that the maiestie of God were quite defaced. And when he cannot do that, he laboureth to darken it, practising continually to cast fooles bables before our eyes, that wee might haue toyes to occupy our heads withal here below, & neither go nor once looke vnto God. And here we be put in mynd, first what a care God hath of our saluation, in that it is his will that the Angels shall fight to draw vs out of all the temptations of Satan. Which thing ought to prouoke vs to bee of the better courage, sith wee see we haue such helpe. Now then, if we be weake as of our selues, and cannot put from vs the temptations of Satan when we be assayled with them; let vs trust that God wil not faile vs, but that he wil employe euen his Angels, who be champions valiant ynough to resist all Satans attempts, & whatsoever elsse he can practise againt vs. Here yee see vpon what trust wee ought to stande to our tackling, when Satan assaileth vs & laboureth to win vs. True it is y<sup>e</sup> we should euermore be ouerthrowē & ouerwhelmed out of hand, if God succoured vs not. But seeing wee haue the Angels of heauen to relieue vs, and God armeth them with his owne inuincible power, to the intent we should neuer faile; it ought to make vs take courage, as I said afore.

Now morcouer we see also, what pleasure the ydolaters do to the Angels, Prophets, Apostles, Martyrs, & (at a word) to all the seruants of god, when they will needes aduance them aboue their degrees. The Papiſts thinke they doe well aduance the virgin Marie, when they call her their aduocate, when they terme her the life & welfare of the worlde, when they bid her command her sonne, and when they cast forth such other horrible blasphemies. But if they had troden her vnder their feete when thee was in this world, or if they had dragged her by y<sup>e</sup> haire of her head; they should not haue done her so great outrage. And why? For wee knowe howe exceedingly God hateth al ydolatries. A church that is infected with images, is worse than a brothe! house to Godward. And shal men go & abuse the name of the holy virgin? And whereas the Apostles and holy Martyrs haue shed their blood to keepe holy the name of God, whereas (say I) they despised all the abominations and ydolatries of the world, and shed their blood for the maintenance of Gods trueth and Gospel; shal men now in steede thereof goe vnder their shadow, to deface Gods honour, to vnhalloowe his seruice, and to rend him in pieces and gobets? Let vs marke wel then, that the Papiſtes haue not any worser or forer enemies than the Saintes whome they thinke to honour, because they do them so much wrong as to set them for contrarie parties againt God. And how see we that? Euen by S. Iudes reporting that the Angels of heauen with their captaine, did striue for the bodie of Moses. And let vs not thinke that the virgin Marie, the Apostles and Martyrs are at variance with the Angels: nay, they bee all of one mynde: And that shal be knowne when the bookes shal be layde open. Yee see then how that all the seruants of God doe fight to keepe the Church from beinge corrupted, & from turning away or slipping aside into any ydolatrie or superstition. Seeing it is so, let vs also on our side ioyne with them in fighting, & sticke to our tackling, that Gods seruice may continue vnappayred, and that there may be no mingling at all to alienate vs from God; and let vs occupie our selues wholly therein, seeing it is the peculiar office of Satan to set himselfe continually againt our saluation, so as he ceaseth not euen now to hinder the same, but holdeth out stil. And his struing was not then onely for the only bodie of Moses; but he hath strued euer since to set vp all the bodies of the holy Prophets. When Ieremie serued for ydolatrie in Egypt, where was his bodie? To whome shall that bee inputed but to Satan, which inuented a newe meane of ydolatrie to the holie Prophet? Againe, whence came all the illusions and false miracles that haue bin wrought in the Popedome, but from the same shop? Wee see then how Satan hath alwayes strayed himself to cast some object before our eyes, to draw vs away from Gods seruice, and to busie our heads about other things, that being wrapped in superstition, we might be vterly marde. Sith it is so, let vs keepe the better watch and stande at our defence. For seeing our enemies come neere vs, and are alwayes watching to spye vs at some aduantage: surely it will waken vs though wee be neuer so loth. But it is said that Satan neuer resteth, and that he is euer practising what he can possibly, to catch vs vnawares in ydolatrie. Wee see it; the thing bewrayeth it selfe. Sith it is so, should wee fall asleepe? Nay rather let vs looke narrowly about vs (as I sayde afore,) and let vs take good heede that wee bee not intrappd. I sayde that wee see howe Satan practiseth all meanes to corrupt vs. For hee hath sought, not onely for the bodies of men, but also for al other things belonging to them, euen such as a man would not thinke in so much y<sup>e</sup> the very haire of their heads, their kerchiefes, their shirts, their pantopples, and diuerſe other things haue bin worshipped.

To bee short, they haue worshipped thinges so fonde, as that euen litle babes might haue mocked them for it. Yet notwithstanding, eue the wisest folke haue bene doted with them, & the spirit of giddinesse hath reigned ouer them. And it hath bene Gods will to make men so brutish. For when they would not hold themselves simply vnto him, but were carryed away with their fickle lustes; it was meete that they should come to that poynt. For as much then as it is so; let vs vnderstand that our Lorde giueth vs so many warnings the mo, to the intent to hold vs in such awe, as we may be well ware that wee be not by any meanes seduced. Thus yee see what wee haue to note as in respect of the things which S. Iude teacheth vs concerning the body of Moses.

Now there is yet this saying further set down in the text, No man hath known his grave vnto this day. Wee knowe not which of the Prophets wrote this last Chapter. The Iewes say it was Iosua; but their coniecture hath no ground. It is much more likely that the same Prophet which gathered the booke of Iosua, did therewithall write the death of Moses also. Neuertheless it is not without cause sayd, that no man vnto this day. For it doeth vs to vnderstand that it was not for one day onely that God would haue the bodie of Moses so hidden: for then it might haue bene sayd, true it is that the body of Moses was vnknown to men, but that was but at the beginning. For the first boylings are somewhat too headie, and God sawe that the people might haue bene moued with too great affection, and by that meane they might haue corrupted themselves. It is not then to be wondered at, if Moses sepulchre had bene vnknown, for two or three dayes, or for a month, or for a yere: for these people were too farre in loue with him: but when he was once buried, then it came to knowledge. But our Lord sheweth that hee knewe well that men are subiect to ydolatrie, and that, not for a day onely; but euen vnto the ende; and that the same sinne is so rooted in vs, that as soone as wee haue neuer so litle an object, by and by wee start out of our boundes. Let vs marke well then that it becometh vs to stande vpon our garde, for ydolatricie is not for a time, but for euer. And wee take this cursed inclination from our mothers wombe, so as wee bee easily allured away from the seruice of God. That is the thing which wee haue to remember vpon this part of the text. And therefore let vs endeavour al the time of our life, to walke according to Gods ordinance, and let vs also beware that wee bee not caried away after the illusions of Satan. And when we our selues shall haue continued in the seruice of God; let vs teach our children to doe the like, that it may for euer be retheyned in the worlde, so as God may be serued of al men with one common accord. For if wee be recheles in that behalfe, it wil abash vs to see howe the diuel will incontinently get the forehead of vs; & in the turning of a hand there wil followe a horrible change which will corrupt and marre all. Sith wee see this, let vs be steddie and constant, and let vs bee so zealous to bring to passe that God may be purely worshipped, as it may continue, not for one day onely, but euen vnto the ende, so as we may from age to age protest, that Gods name is called vpon ouer vs, and that he hath the whole prebeminence; and that the creatures howe excellent for euer they bee, doe abyde in their degree and place, and that they haue not occupied the roome of God nor his soueraigne doninion.

Now let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God which acknowledgement of our fautes, praying him to make vs perceiue them more and more, that wee may be so cast downe in our selues, as our whole seeking may bee to receiue mercie at his hand, and hauing receiued it, to bee so guyded by his holy spirite, as we may giue our selues wholly vnto him; to dedicate our selues fully to his obedience, and to serue him with all purenesse both in body and soule, and that hee impute not our imperfections vnto vs which are yet still in vs, but that he rid them from vs day by day, and reclaime vs of them more and more, vntil he haue brought vs to the perfection whcreunto he iniureth vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace, nor onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The CC. Sermon, which is the second vpon the xxxiiiij. Chapter of Deuteronomie, and the last vpon that booke.

7 Moses was a hundred and twentie yeres olde when he dyed, his sight was not dimmed, nor his liuelinesse abated.

8 And the children of Israel mourned for Moses thirtie dayes in the playne of Moab. And after that, the dayes of mourning and sorrowing for Moses were ended.

9 Then Iosua the sonne of Nun was filled with the spirite of wisdom, for Moses had laid his hand vpon him. And the children of Israel obeyed him, and did as the Lord had commaunded Moses.

10 And there arose not vp a Prophet in Israel thenceforth like vnto Moses, which knew the Lord face to face, 11 In all signes and woonders, for which the Lorde sent him to do them in the Land of Egypt before Pharao, and all his seruants, and all his Land.

12 Nor in all the strong hand, and al the great vision, which Moses did before the eyes of all Israel.

T was needfull that after the death of Moses, the Iewes should know the good that God had done them by the meanes of such a man. For we know that Gods gracious dealings are by and by forgotten, and it is the point wherein men doe chiefly shewe their leawdnesse. For although it be prooued to them that God hath helped them, yea euen with figures and myracles; yet woulde they passe it ouer slightly. In this respect it is saide expressly heere, that Moses had his liuelinesse, and all his strength vnto the age of a hundred and twentie yeeres. Nowe we knowe what is written in his song, in the powerfoure and tenth Psalme, That after a man commeth ro threefoure yeeres, there remaineth nothing but sorrowe paine and grieffe, and he doeth but linger and pine away. Loe what our life is. Although we haue beene streng, yet doe we decay in the twinkling of an eye, when wee once passe threefoure yeeres, and it is a great matter for a man to attaine thereto, I meane in such strength. But nowe whereas it is reported that Moses attained to double those yeeres; thereby it appeareth that God strengthened him aboue the common rate of men. And that was not for his owne sake onely; but to the intent he might be able to susteine the charge that was committed vnto him. Had not the people bin vnthankfull, they shoulde ere that time haue bene conueyed into the lande of promise, and then had Moses gone in with them. But his life was prolonged a great time, because of the leawdnes of the people. Heere wee see a wonderfull goodnes in God. For seeing that the people (that is to wit, as many of them as were then of discretion to knowe good from euill,) were condemned to die in the wildernesse: it had bene a great discomfort to them if Moses should haue dyed out of hand. But God referueth him: and although he chastise the people, yet notwithstanding hee moderateth his rigour. Heere then wee see in effect, that when God tolde the people that they should die in the wildernesse, hee meant not to punish them with such extremitee, but that hee provided them first of y principall point, which was, y they might haue a good loadesman: For that is an inestimable treasure. And againe we see, howe God wrought in Moses by a power that was not common to men; that is to wit, that at the age of Sixfoure yeeres, there was in him still all that euer was requisite in so difficult and weightie a charge as wee knowe was committed vnto him. True it is that he had Iudges with him; but yet for all that, no one man, no nor a doosen men had bene able to haue gone through with that charge, though they had bin chosen of the excellentest men in the worlde.

Needs must it be the that God aided him. Nowe whereas in so old age men are wont to be drooping and halfe dead, or at leastwise in such case as they can scarcely crawl, and are halfe doted, and yet Moses continueth still in his perfect state: therein it appeareth that God had compassion of his people. And this is expressly declared that the children of Israel shoulde knowe that God neuer forsooke them; & that although they had grieuouly offended him, and were worthy to be cut off from his house, and to be stripped out of his gracious giftes; yet he ment not to vse such rigour: for hee referued Moses, and gaue him wherewith to goe through with his charge continually. To be short, in this text it is shewed vs, that if God giue vs such men to bee our guides as behaue themselves faithfully, and haue abilitie marched with their will, and that they bee maintained to doe their office to the full: it behoueth vs to pereciue therein, that God hath pitie vpon vs, and we must acknowledge such a benefite, vnlesse we wil be condemned of vnthankfulnesse.

Nowe it is saide, that the children of Israel mourned thirtie dayes for the death of Moses. It was a common thing to make such sorrowe for the deade. But forasmuch as Moses was a father to all the whole people, it was verie requisite that not some one house or kinred, but that all those which had bene gouerned by him, shoulde weepe for him. Euerie man is to be mourned for in his owne house by his kinsfolke and neere fricndes; but there was another speciall reason in Moses, because God had giuen him to all the people, and he had guided them with a fatherly care as we knowe. The peple therefore doe witnesse openly howe much they were bounde and beholden vnto Moses, and al of them shewe themselves as his children. But here it might be demanded, whether it be lawfull to make such lamentation for a man that is departed: for it shoulde seeme to bee an encountering of Gods will. Wee knowe that the life and death of men is in Gods hande; nowe if hee call vs away, it behooueth vs to goe, without any gainesaying, as I saide yesterday. They that outliue vs must not sorrowe for our death; for Ps 90. 10.

Num. 14. 3.

it were a kinde of striuing against God. But wee must euer haue an eye to the end of our sorrowing, when wee mourne for the decease of men: and againe, we must come to the measure thereof. Those two things then must we obserue to the intent that our sorrowing may be lawfull. The first thing is that our mourning for a partie departed be vpon iust cause. For we haue good occasion to weepe, because death is a common looking glasse and record vnto vs of Gods curse, not vpon one or two folkes, but vpon all mankinde. When we see any man deade, God sheweth vs to the view of our eye, that we be all of vs cursed of him, and that we be all of vs inclosed in that curse, because of Adams sin. For whence comes death, but of the estrauing of vs from the fountaine and wellspring of life? God then giueth vs good occasion to weepe when any man dyeth: but that must be done because of our sinnes, so as we feele what we haue deserued, and bee ashamed of our selues, and bee touched with the feare of Gods vengeance, and bee so wounded therewith, as it may prouoke vs to make sorrowe. But this ende is ill regarded, welneere of all men. For when we weepe, we wote not why we weepe: and scarcely shall ye finde one among a hundred, which is moued and stirred vp to acknowledge the punishment of sinne & the curse of God which is spred ouer all the sonnes of Adam. That then is the thing which we haue to remember in the first place.

There is another seconde ende. That is to wit, when God taketh away a man that was able to doe seruice in his Church either publicly or priuately, wee ought to bee sorie for it forasmuch as our Lorde chastiseth vs. If there bee a good Sheepherd, a good Prince, a good Magistrate, a man of counsell, or any other that is fite to serue the whole bodie; and God taketh him away; we ought to bee sorie for him; and not without cause: for it is a signe that hee is minded to diminish his grace in vs. And ought wee not to bee grieued in feeling Gods wrath? On the other side we see how it is said, that our Lorde taketh away the righteous, when he hath any vengeance in a readinesse: hee calleth away his seruants to rest, that they may be free from the mischief which is at hande. Therefore when God taketh away the excellent men from among vs, it is alwayes a threatening vnto vs. For it is all one as if he told vs, that wee bee not worthe to haue him to dwell in our companie, according to this saying in the Epistle to the Hebrewes, that the worlde was not worthe to haue the men that serued God with such vertuous conseruation. True it is that men mislike of them and thrust them out of their companie, as though they were not worthe to goe vpon the earth. But yet on the contrarie part, God telleth vs that we forgoe the companie of the good men, and of those whom hee hath referred to himselfe. Therefore when we bewaile the death of honest men, which haue lued in the feare of God, which were indewed with excellent vertues and gifts of grace, which haue done seruice to the building vp of the Church, and which coulde haue continued in doing the same still: that is a well-ordered mourning. But yet must we also come to the measure. For it may bee that a man shall mourne for iust cause; and yet if hee giue his sorrowe too much scope, then is it a fault and a vice. As howe? If wee sorrowe for our sinnes without comfort, wee shalbe swallowed vp of heauinesse: and thercuppon oftentimes spring grudgings and repynings against God. But saint Paul telleth vs that when we mourne so for the death of our friends and kinsfolke, or of such as serued in the Church, we must not resemble the vnbeleeuers, who (saith he) haue no hope, and therefore can haue no comfort. In that place, S. Paul saith not that it is sinne to weepe, hee doth not vterly condemne the thing: but hee stewarteth that our sorrowing must be moderated, because God giueth vs comfort by calling vs to y hope of the heauenly life, wherein we shalbe renewed. So then let vs vnderstande that GOD humbleth vs by death, and that we must goe into corruption like stinking carions, yea and euē our soules must seeme to vanish away, and that all shalbe forlorne. Nowe although wee must needes bee sorrowfull when wee consider these things and specially our sinnes; yet (I say) wee must euer come backe to this point, that GOD of his infinite goodnesse pitieth vs still, and wil not haue vs to perish in death, but rather that it bee vnto vs a passage into the euerlasting life. And this hope is yough to comfort vs in the middes of all our heauinesse: at leastwise it ought to be a bridle to restrain our sorrowing that it passe not the bounds, and so we tal to fretting against God as we see the vnbeleeuers do, who storme and howle and yell, and cannot by any meanes be held in order. And why? Because they haue no comfort, which is the mother of patience. But forasmuch as God calleth vs to the hope which hee giueth vs; therefore after wee haue wept and mourned, we haue wherefore to giue him thanks, to blesse his holy name, and to content our selues that he vseth not extreme rigor against vs. Now then, although we weepe when we see that our Lorde hath taken those from vs which might haue stood vs in great steede: yet must we not fall into despair, as though God had no way to succour vs. For he can raise vp euen the stones, if he thinke it good. Therefore we must resort vnto him when wee perceiue any signe of his wrath; and when we haue acknowledged our sinns, and asked forgiveness of them at his hand; we must also waite his leisure vntil he shew vs fauour, that in finding mercy wee may also finde remedy of all our griefs. Thus y measure which hee speaketh of, is that hauing sorrowed to a good end, because our Lord hath taken such folk out of y world, as we ought to long for & desire; wee must also haue some itay of our selues, & not be caried away to fretting & chafing in our sorrowe: but rather aswage our sorrowes, because wee know y when God hath chastised vs; he will moderate his mightie hand, and not stretch it out to the full against vs, but chas-

2. Sam. 7. 14. life vs with the rodde of man, as is said thereof. Sitch wee see this, let vs learne to comfort our selues and be patient.

But herewithall we haue yet one point more to obiect: which is that our forefathers had mo ceremonies than wee haue, because they had not so euident a recorde of the euerlasting life. And the selfesame reason was of burial vnder the lawe, for they buried men with greater pompe than they do nowadayes. And what was the reason? forsooth because the resurrection was not yet so well witnessed as it is now. I grant that the fathers knew well what was requisite to their saluation: howbeit, y was vnder shadows and figures. But behold, nowadayes God himselfe calleth vs from heauen; our Lorde Iesus Christ sheweth vs that as he himselfe is risen to glorie, so we also shalbe made like to his image, and therefore that wee haue no more neede of such helps as y fathers of old time had. So then, it were a mockery at this day, to counterfeit the things that were obserued in the olde Testament. And that is a thing wherin the fondnesse of the Papistes appeareth vnto vs. For they would needes counterfeit all things without cause or reason. And yet see that in their burials they haue so many gewgawes and pelting toys, that a man would be ashamed of them. And what is the cause thereof, but that they knowe not the difference that is come in since the coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ; namely that the ancient ceremonies are come to an end: Yee see then that the Papists are become Iewes, howbeit but bastarde Iewes. For not without some reason did the Iewes vse that custome, because it behoued their ceremonies to supplie the want of doctrine. But nowe that our Lorde Iesus Christ is come, and we haue the resurrection manifested in his person; if we set our mindes stil vpon shadows and figures, what is it but a defacing of the resurrection of our Lorde Iesus Christ, & an vtter quenching of y light of the Gospell: That is y cause why I said that the Papistes are not worthie to be called Iewes, but bastarde Iewes. But whereas it is said that the people made lamentation by the space of thirrie dayes: let vs on our side learne that it behoued the auncient fathers to be kept vnder, because God had not giuen them so large a testimony of the euerlasting life, and that for their rudenesse sake, they were gouerned like litle children, as Sainct Paul speaketh of them to the Galathians. Let vs nowadayes learne on our side to make the resurrection of our Lorde Iesus Christ auailable, that when any man dyeth, there be plainnesse vsed in his buriall, and these pompes eschewed wherewith GOD is mocked, and the people intangled in manie errors and superstitions. And not without cause is it said that our Lorde Iesus Christ was buried after the manner of the Iewes, to shew that that custome ought nowadayes to be changed among vs, and a newe to be put in the steede. Also let vs moderate our mourning, and let not our sorrowe be excessiue; but sitch wee haue wherewith to comforte our selues; which thing the folke that liued vnder the Lawe had not at all, or at leastwise not so largely as wee haue: let vs practise the doctrine which we bee taught in the Gospell, and also by S. Paul to the Thessalonians. Thus much concerning that point wherin mention is made of the lamentation that was made for the death of Moses. 1. Thess. 4.

Now it followeth, That Iosua the sonne of Nun was filled with the spirit of wisdom, because Moses had laide his handes vpon him. Here againe the people are put in minde, that God had not forsaken them though they were worthy of it. And it is a very profitable lesson for vs, to know that God gouerneth his Church, and neuer forgetteth it. For without that, what faith coulde be in vs? Wee shoulde bee as folke forlorne. For as long as God gouerneth vs, if wee rest vpon him, wee boldly proceede and keepe on our course. But if God withdawe his hand, and we perceiue not that hee guideth our steppes, or that hee hath a care of vs, and that we be vnder protection: wo will be vnto vs, and men are too dulheaded if they be not then vtterly dismayed. Behold then, our happinesse is to haue God to be our watchman, and to be gouerned vnder his hand and protection, in deede hee appeareth not alwayes visible to shewe his presence; but he giueth vs men to be the ministers of his grace. True it is that at that time there were visible signes, to shewe that he dwelt among his people. Neuertheless as he had bin serued by Moses, so was it his will that Iosua should succede in his place.

And in that respect is it said that hee was filled with the spirit of wisdom: to doe vs to vnderstand that God hath alwayes shewed himselfe mercifull to his Church, and that as a father hath a care of his children, & prouideth the all things meete for them: so God hath alwayes prouided aforehande for the necessities of his people. This doctrine (as I said) doeth concerne vs also. For wee haue a promise that God will neuer faile vs if wee be of his flocke and come to him to throwd our selues vnder his wings, that wee may be guided by him; and we knowe hee hath giuen that office to our Lorde Iesus Christ. And for the same cause also hee saith to his disciples, that hee will be with them to the worldes ende: and that saying extendeth to the whole bodie of the Church. Seeing then that our Lorde Iesus Christ hath said that he will neuer be separated from vs, let vs knowe that in him wee haue God, who will vtter forth all his power to maintaine vs: But yet it is verie much, that besides the promises, we haue moreover testimonies thereof, so as hee pointeth vs with his finger to the thing performed, as it is spoken of heere, where wee reade that Iosua was filled with the spirit of wisdom. For to what end was that done? It happened not by chaunce, neither had God regarde of Iosua alone: but it was because he would shewe himselfe to be the safetie of the Iewes. We nowadayes are in the same taking. For if they had abidden in Gods house, we should haue bin ioyned wth the, And because they bee banished thence and cut off as rotten members, we take their place, as saith S. Paul. Now then, let vs assure our selues that God will neuer suffer vs to want any thing requisite for our saluation, but continually shew his loue and fauour towards vs, and prouide vs of the things that are for our behoofe, if wee flee to him for refuge; yea euen though wee be not worthe thereof. For as for this people, we knowe what manner of folke they were, and howe many faultes and offences they committed; so as it had benee no wonder though God had vterly destroyed them. But nowe seeing hee prouided them of men that were fit and meete to defend them; therby we perceiue that God stroue with his mercie against the malice of that people. So then, whensoever wee bee tempted to distrust because wee bee rebuked for our sinnes; let vs resort to Gods mercie, and pray him, not to looke vpon our sinnes, but to proceed continually in his goodnesse and fauour towards vs, whatsoever vnworthinesse there be in our persons. Thus much concerning that point.

Heere is nowe a question that might be demaunded, howe it is saide, that when Moses had laide his hands vpon Iosua, hee was filled with wisdom, whether a mans handes haue that power or no? [No.] but when the signe of a thing is spoken of, wee must go to the thing it selfe. Wee knowe that in all solemne blessings, there was this signe of the Laying on of handes. Nowe this was not an inuention fondly continued after the manner of men, which haue many Apes toyes: but it was a re- corde allowed of God, as if an oblation had bene made of the partie that was so blessed. When the holy Pattarks blessed their childre, it was as though they had giuen them assurance that the inheritance of saluation belonged vnto them, & that the promise should stand & abide in full force to their posteritie. Likewise at this day when a man selleth lande or house, one putteth a fetter into his hand, and he deliuereth it ouer to the purchaser; and in some countries the custome is, that he which selleth any inheritance and maketh the surrender deliuereth a sticke or wand to the purchaser in token that he may thence forth possesse and inioy the same. And euen after the same manner was it with this signe of laying on of handes. For (as I saide) it was not a fonde and foolish deuce; but it was Gods will that it should be a kinde of warranting, to the intent that the faith of the fathers might be the better helped. That is the cause then why it is saide in this place, that God gaue the spirit of wisdom vnto Iosua, because Moses had laid his hands vpon his head. Nowe in so doing he muested him in the charge that was committed vnto him.

Let vs nowe see first of all, whether Moses chose Iosua vpon his owne heade or no. No: but he knew him to be first chosen of God. And afterward when he laide his handes vpon him, did he attempt any thing vpon his own fancie? No; but contrariwise God only was the orderer or disposer thereof. He knew that Iosua was to be set in his place. And this is spoken not of that man onely; but also when the Apostles did lay their hands vpon the faithfull, by and by the gifts of the holy Ghost were made visible to the eye. After that manner did the faithful receiue the gift of tongues, y interpretation of tongues, the healing of diseases, and the raising of the dead. And how receiued they it? They did but lay their hands vpon them. Yea, but had that Ceremonie such vertue? No; but because it was Gods will to haue his grace so declared, & that y laying on of hands was as a gage of it; it was not a vayne and vnprofitable thing. And in that respect is it that saint Paul saith vnto Timothy, That he should make the grace available which was giuen him by laying on of his hands. Seeing it is so (saith hee) looke that thou indeuour thy selfe to serue God, and labour to builde vp the Church, and that the grace of God which is giuen thee by the laying on of my handes be not hindered. Saint Paul challengeth not to himselfe y thing that is peculiar to the holy Ghost, neither meaneth he that he had the holy Ghost in his fleete to giue him to whom hee listed by the reaching out of his arme: but hee sheweth vs that the signe which God had appointed vnto it, was not vaine or vneffectuall.

Moreouer, the same is to be considered more in all the Sacraments whereof the Scripture speaketh, than in all other signes that are to be had in the world. I haue already alleaged a similitude of y deliuering of a fetter or of a wand to him y purchaseth an inheritance: but there is yet much more in the Sacraments; we must go yet one step higher. For there our Lord worketh that by his power, which men cannot doe. True it is that when such a ceremonie is once done & performed, the lawe will maintaine a man in possession of the thing that he hath purchased: howbeit, that is not all. For (as I saide afore) God performeth by the secret power of his spirite, whatsoever hee sheweth and winceth to the eye. So then wee must euer come to this point, that the sacraments are effectuall, & that they be no trifling signes which vanish away in the aire, but that the truth is alwayes matched with them, because that God who is faithfull, sheweth that he hath not ordained any thing in vain. And y is the cause why y in baptism we receiue truly the forgiveness of our sins, we be washed and clesed w the blood of our Lord Iesus Christ, we be renewed by y operation of his holy spirite. And how so? Hath a litle water such power when it is cast vpon y head of a child? No: But because it is y will of our Lord Iesus Christ, y the water should be a visible signe of his blood & of y holy Ghost: therefore baptism hath y vertue & whatsoever is there set forth to the eye, is forth with accomplished in verie deede. If wee come to the Lordes supper, it is certaine that a litle cante of bread and a drop of wine cannot quicken our soules, fer they be corruptible things; but therby we haue a record y we be fed with y body & blud of our Lord Iesus Christ: & by y record we know y our Lord Iesus Christ sheweth y he will will not deceiue vs in his promises, nor holde vs downe with our nebbes in the water as they say; but that he performeth all that euer is tolde vs there: insomuch that when we come to that holy table, we must assure ourselues that our soules are nourished with the spirituall foode which we see nor, and that our faith must mount vp vnto heauen, there to be ioyned with our Lord Iesus Christ.

Heere then wee haue to note, that when the scripture speaketh vnto vs of the signes which we haue in vs according to Gods ordinance; the very truth of them is present with them. And why? For (as I haue sayde) our Lorde alloweth of our sayth in that behalfe, shewing vnto vs that the things which proceede from him are not deceiueable. And as we ought to be fully resolu'd heereof in the Sacramentes, so let vs marke on the contrary part, that when men inuent things of their owne heades without the ordinance of God, they be but toyes and may-games and no better. As for example, in the Popedome they haue many signes, which they would haue men to accept as hygh mysteries. What a sort of sonde things are in the Masse? And yet (if a man will beleue them), there is nothing which is not well worthy to be commended. They would haue it y there they be as it were rauished vp among the Angelles, when they play their pretie pageantes. And yet all is but vtter vanitie, and a bleating or dafeling of mens eyes. And why? For if a man demaunde from whence those things come; he shall finde that men forged them, and that there is no warrant for them from God; yea and euen we, ourselues doe see that they haue defiled baptisme. True it is that they could not vtterly dispatch it out of the way, but that (euen in spyte of their teeth, and in spyte of Satan who stirreth them thereunto, and reigneth ouer them yet still at this day), our Lorde Iesus Christ hath brought to passe that his baptisme continueth still in his Church. But yet we see howe it is infected with many spottes among the Papistes, so as the baptisme it selfe is nothing in coparison of the rest. For they esteeme not a childe to be baptised with the water [as it is of it selfe]; but the water must be charmed aforhande, and it must haue coniuurations made ouer it: and then must other inuentions be mingled with it, as Spittle, Sault, and Tapers, & a number of other gawdes which would make a man amafed. And what importeth all this? Euery whit of it is but doung taken from Satan and held still: and yet the Papistes set all their holines therein. Againe, they haue inuented Sacramentes of their owne brayne, as their Sacrament of confirmation as they terme it, and their Sacrament of Anecaling, and all the other pelting toyes. And to be short, what else are all the Ceremonies which we see among them, but vtter illusions of Satan? Therefore let vs learne to discern the things which God ordeyneth and alloweth by his worde, from the things that men haue putfoorth at aduerture, and after their owne fancies. And let vs vnderstande that as Gods truth is alwayes ecrtaine and infallible; so y things that are brought vp by men, can not proceede but of vntueth and fallhoode. For they be gouerned by Satan who is the father thereof. That is the thing in effect, which we haue to beare in minde.

And let vs marke further, that when men are chosen to gouerne Gods Church, (so it be by orderly proceeding according to his word) they shall be guyded and gouerned by him, and hee will furnish them with his gracious gifts as farre as shall be needefull for them; and whereas wee perceiue not nowadays the things by experience which are contain'd heere; it is by reason of our vnbeleefe and leauidnesse. For had wee such order of election as ought to be in choosing ministers to preach Gods worde, and that wee went about it with such reuerence as is requisite, with calling vpon the name of God, & with obseruing the order in such sort as hee hath set it downe by his worde; and againe if the like were done in the choosing of magistrates and officers of lustice: It is certaine that G O D also would shed foorth the gracious giftes of his holy spirite, and we should see that his blessing should not be vayne in those elections. But what? Because we be oftentimes puff'd vp with presumption, and euery man deales after his owne fancie, and a great sort of vs neuer passe for the obseruing of the things which God sheweth vs by his word: therefore he also withdraweth his grace from vs: whereas if we had y zeale to gouerne his Church according to his worde, and teaching, and did put our iudeuour thereunto; and that in choosing men to guide the people, we proceeded to it with such sobrietie as I haue spoken of: It is certaine that God would doe his part. For his hande is not shortened; but looke what is tolde vs heere, we should surely finde it among vs by effect.

Nowe it is sayde in the ende, That the children of Israell obeyed Iosua, and that they did according to that which God had commaunded by Moses. Heere in the first place we see, that among the giftes of the holy Ghost Authoritie is one, accordingly also as the holy scripture maketh mention thereof in other places. Put the case that a man were as fit and meete to gouerne as were possible; yet notwithstanding hee shall be of no authoritie or reputation, except God set him in authoritie, & giue him as it were a marke to the end that men may stande in awe of him, and Ricke to him, and receiue the doctrine which he bringeth. Then is it a speciall gift of God; and on the other side we see that men are despised and vtregarded vnlesse our Lorde doe so auowe them, and make folke to imbrace them, and inable them to performe their charge, and to acquit themselves thereof. That is the cause why it is added expressly heere, that the children of Israell obeyed Iosua. It is not onely sayde that he receiued the giftes that were necessarie for his office; but also did therewithall giue him with the sworde, according as it is sayde in Iob, that when he will haue a man to be honored, it is like as if he giue him a sworde. And contrariwise when hee will haue a man to be despised, it is allone as if hee rooke the swordgirdle from him. God then did set Iosua after that maner in honour, and it behoued the people to obey him. Now we knowe the pride that is in all men, and we knowe that the people of Israell were giuen to rebelling aboute all other people. Therefore God was driuen to holde the in awe, that Iosua might reigne ouer them, not in way of tyranny, but to discharge himselfe of his duetic. That is the thing in effect which we haue to remember.

Now heereby Magistrates are put in mind to pray vnto God that when he hath giuen them corage and power to do his commandement, he will also not suffer them to be impeached by the misdealinges of their people, but that if there be any rebelles, he will vouchsafe to repress them. For it is certaine that euen the very flies will rise vp against a man, vnlesse our Lorde do giue him authoritie. Therefore let Magistrates lue warily and in feare, and let them assure themselves they shal neuer stande sure in their estate, vnlesse God set his marke vpon them, and that they be had in reuerence by his meanes. Also let the ministers of Gods worde pray him, that the doctrine may be receiued as from his mouth, & that he suffer them not to be despysed and skorned, as we see howe the world is so vnthankful that it coueteth nothing so much, and that the deuill also desyreth nothing more than that the ministers should be had in contempt, to the end 30 y the word which they bring might be despised. What haue we then to doe, but to pray God to worke in such sort, as we may do men good, and as our labour may edifie them, becaue he hath giuen vs authoritie to speake in his name? Thus ye see howe we ought to put that part of this text in practise.

Nowe heere withall it is shewed vs, what maner of obedience it was which the Iewes yielded vnto Iosua. And therupon we may gather howe 40 farre fourth we ought to obey men: namely so farre fourth as God haue the dominion & chiefe soueraintie, and men be but his ministers. True it is that if God permit Tyrantes to reigne ouer vs, it behooueth vs to yeelde our neckes to the bearing of that yoke. Yea, but yet must we not in the meane while Iwarue aside from his word. If the Princes, the Magistrates or the Pastors of the Church will turne vs away from the things which our Lorde telleth vs: we must rather die 50 a hundred times. Why so? For y obedience which we owe vnto men, ought alwayes to be led by this rule, that God holde still his place, and euery man submit himselfe to him, both great and small. Let vs marke well then, that if we will haue our Lorde to allowe this lowliness of ours, which we shewe in being obedient vnto men; we must not bercaue him nor rob him of his right, but that he may gouerne vs by the hande and meanes of men. And herein we see howe a great 60 number doe ouershoot themselves nowadayes. For they beare themselves in hand that they be excused, if their fathers and mothers, or their elders, or at leastwise their Princes doe like and allowe of their domges. But yet shall they not sayle to be condemned at Gods hande, for if the blinde leade the blind, both of them shall fall in to the ditch, and the first shall not saue the last. Wherefore let vs learne to obey our superiours in such sort, as God may neuerthelesse holde vs vnder him and vnder his guiding, and our life be ruled by his word. And specially let vs haue this regarde to the spirituall gouernment of the Church. For if we play y Papistes, who alleage that they followe their Prelates, and do as they haue commanded them: we shalbe Apostataes.

 10 For wee see that God hath referued this obediencie to himselfe, that hee will gouerne vs after his owne will, and not haue his word in any wise corrupted. He will so reigne ouer vs, as hee will haue none other to mieddle, nor to put any thing of their owne inuening, to that which he hath ordeyned. The way then for vs to practise that which is set downe here, is fo to obey those which haue superiouritie ouer vs; that first wee 20 haue an eye to Gods commandement and ordinance; and then serue men as his ministers who he sendeth, and by whose meanes he will haue vs to be guyded. That is the thing in effect, which we haue to gather heere.

Now finally he sayeth, That there was not any Prophet in Israell founde like vnto Moses, which knew God face to face, that is to say, to whom God reuealed himselfe so familiarly. Heere wee see in the first place, that God keepeth not alwayes 30 one rate in vttering forth his grace as we would haue him: but that he doth and dealeth in that behalfe according to his owne will. God then is not bound to any certaine lawe, as who would say, that because he hath sent an excellent man to day, he must do the like to morrowe too. No. Sometime we shalbe deprived of a man, whose match we shall not finde againe. And why? Because God referueth that to himselfe, to giue the greater glorie to his grace. That is the thing 40 which we haue to note in the first place: and it serueth to teach vs that wee should not be ashamed. Notwithstanding, if our Lorde do sometimes diminish his gracious giftes towardes vs; let it not cast vs in despayre. For why? It ought to content vs that our Lorde is liberrall. And againe we haue seene already that he ceased not to haue a care of his people, though Moses did farre surmount Iosua, and had not his equall or 50 march. Not that Gods intent was to magnifie Moses as in respect of his person; but to the end that the Law should be receiued with y greater reuerence, and the people knowe that Moses was sent of God. And God also meant to giue some confirmation to the doctrine of the Law, to the intent to print the same the better in the heartes of the Iewes, and specially the excellent delueraunce that had bin wrought [by Moses]. For we see howe all the other prophetes also do beate about that marke, when they rebuke the 60 people for their vnthankfulnessse. When they blame them for their vngodlinessse, they set before them their delueraunce out of Egypt: for it was a deede worthy of eternall memory. To the intent therefore that the people might bee the better prouoked thereunto; it is sayde that Moses was the excellentest of all men. And there-

Mat. 15. 14

Ier. 2. 6. &amp; elsewhere.

therewithal the people were to be helde in obedience to the Lawe, vntill the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And that shalbe the conclusion in one worde.

Although God rayfed vp great prophetes after the decease of Moses, yea and such as speake more lustily than he; (as in Esay we see a doctryn which at the first sight seemeth more stately thā the doctryn that is contained in Moses : ) yet notwithstanding it is certaine that Esay was but an expounder of the Lawe, and that the things which he wrate were but dependentes thereof, so as he and all the rest drew light at the things which had bene taught afore by Moses. And therefore (as I haue declared already ) it behoued the people to haue a continuall regarde of the Lawe that was giuen vnto them, that they might neuer forget it. And although our Lorde had so well provided for it; yet we see how negligent they were. It is a horrible thing that the Lawe should be lost, as we knowe it was found againe in the time of Iosias. And yet it was a treasure which God had committed to the custodie of the Priestes, there was a tribe chosen to that purpose, as who should say, keepe ye well the Lawe that it perish not. The people (as we haue seene heere tofore ) were warned to haue the lawes written vpon the postes of their houses, to write them vpon tables about their beddes, to carrie the about vpon their hands, and to weare them as bracelettes about their armes, Whereas other people haue Jewels to decke them withal, you ( sayth God ) shall euermore haue my Lawe before our eyes, that ye may neuer for goe the remembrance thereof. Yet for all this, the people forgate it, whereby we see howe needefull it was that the authoritie of Moses should bee so magnified, to the intent that the Lawe might abide vnmpeached. And that is shewed vs by the prophet Malachie where he sayth, Remember the Lawe of Moses y<sup>e</sup> was giuen you in Oreb. After that maner speakes Malachie to the people, telling them that they should be destitute of prophetes. For he was the last from that time forth to the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ. There was not after him any prophet, there was a horrible desolation. Notwithstanding, to the ende that the people should not fall away, and forsake the counaunt of God: Malachie sendeth them backe to the Lawe of Moses; as if he should say, All the teaching that yee haue had, tended to none other end but that yee should abide vnder the Lawe of God. And was it of necessitie that Moses should abide in his state for y<sup>e</sup> doing thereof? No: the Law was giuen by Moses but we haue grace and truth by Iesus Christ.

Now whereas it is sayde, That no prophet was like to Moses, who sawe God face to face: let vs vnderstande that it is to the end to bring vs to this conclusion of S. Iohn, That our Lorde Iesus Christ, who is the only sonne of God, is come from the bosom of his father to disclose his secretes vnto vs, and to accomplish all the things which had bene foretolde by the prophetes: and that many kinges and prophetes haue bene desirous to see and heare the things which wee heare and see, and haue not obteyned it. So then, let vs vnderstande that Iesus Christ was not simply a prophet, but the liuing God himselfe, manifested in flesh & nature of man, to the intent that we should learne to rest wholly vpon him, and beare in minde this saying of the Apostle in the beginning of the Epistle to the Hebrewes, that God in time past spake many and diuers wayes to our fathers, and that now we haue one conclusion of all, in that he hath vttered his wil vnto vs by our Lord Iesus Christ.

Now let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs so roperceiue them more and more, as wee may be sory for them, and resort vnto him to be rid of them by him; and that in the mean season he beare with vs of his infinite goodnesse, vntill such time as hec haue fully renewed vs. And so let vs all say, Almighty God, heauenly father, &c.
